Prov. dat, a die (Brachet); also Ital. dado, pl. dadi, a die, cube, pedestal; Span. dado, pl. dados. — Late L. datum, a thing given or decreed; hence applied to a die for casting lots. Orig. neuter of datus, pp. of dare, to give, let go, give forth, thrust, throw. See DATE (1). Der. die, a stamp, pl. dies; also dice, verb, ME. dycen, Prompt. Parv. p. 121. Doublet, dado.

DIET (1), a prescribed allowance of food. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Of his diète mesurable was he;' Chaucer, C. T. 437 (A 435). Cf. 'And ȝif thou diète the thus,' i. e. diet thyself in this way; P. Plowman, B. vi. 270.—OF. diète, 'diet, or daily fare; also, a Diet, Parliament;' Cot.—Late L. diēta, diēta, a ration of food.—Gk. diāta, mode of life; also, diet. Brugmann, i. § 650. Der. diet-ary, -et-ic.

DIET (2), an assembly, council. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Thus would your Polish Diet disagree;' Dryden, Hind and Panther, ii. 407. It occurs also in Cotgrave.—OF. diète, 'diet; also, a Diet, Parliament;' Cot.—Late L. diēta, a public assembly; also, a ration of food, diet. β. The peculiar spelling diēta and the suffix -ta leave no doubt that this word is nothing but a peculiar use of the Gk. diāta, mode of life, diet. In other words, this word is identical in form with Diet (1), q. v. γ. At the same time, the peculiar sense of the word undoubtedly arose from a popular etymology that connected it with the L. dies, a day, esp. a set day, a day appointed for public business; whence, by extension, a meeting for business, an assembly. We even find diēta used to mean 'a day's journey;' and diēta, 'a day's work,' or 'a daily duty;' Ducange.

DIFFER, to be distinct, to disagree. (F.—L.) 'Dyuerse and differinge substances;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 5; l. 17. Ch. also has the sb. difference, id. b. v. pr. 6; l. 157.—OF. differer (Hatzfeld); F. différer, also with the sense of 'defer.'—L. differre, to carry apart, to differ; also, to defer.—L. dif- (for dis-), apart; and ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. Der. differ-ent (OF. different, from L. pres. part. stem different-), -ent-ly, -ent-i-al; also differ-ence (OF. difference, from L. differentia). Doublet, defer.

DIFFICULTY, an obstacle, impediment, hard enterprise. (F.—L.) [The adj. difficult is in Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 82, but it is somewhat rare in early authors, and was merely developed from the sb. difficulty, which was a common word and in earlier use. The ME. word for 'difficult' was difficile, occurring in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 23. § 5.] ME. difficultee; Chaucer, C. T. 6854 (D 1272).—OF. difficulté; Cot.—L. difficultātem, acc. of difficultās, difficulty, an abbreviated form of **difficultās*.—L. difficilis, hard.—L. dif-, = dis-, apart; and facilis, easy. L. diffidentia, distrust.—L. dif- = dis-, apart, with negative force; and fidere, to trust, allied to fidēs, faith. See FAITH. DIG, to turn up earth with a spade. (F.—Du.) ME. diggen. 'Dikeres and delueres digged up the balkes' = ditchers and delvers dug up the baulks; P. Plowman, B. vi. 109, where, for digged, the earlier version (A. vii. 100) has dikeden. [Thus diggen is equivalent to dikien, to dig.]—F. diguer, to make a dike (15th cent.); Littré.—F. digue, 'a ditch;' Cot.—Du. dijk, a dike; cognate with AS. dīc, a dyke, or dike, a ditch. Cf. Swed. dika, to dig a ditch, from dike, a ditch; Dan. dige, to dig, from dige, a ditch. ¶ At first a weak verb; the strong pt. t. dug is of late invention, the true pt. t. being digged, which occurs 18 times in the A. V. of the Bible, whereas dug does not occur in it at all. Cf. stuck, late pt. t. of stick. See DIKE. Der. digg-er, digg-ings.

DIGAMMA, a Greek letter representing the sound of E. w. (Gk.) 'Digamma, the letter f;' Cooper's Thesaurus (1565). Lit. DIGHT, prepared, disposed, adorned. (L.) Nearly obsolete. 'The clouds in thousand liveries dight;' Milton, L'All. 62. Dight is here short for dighted, so that the infinitive also takes the form dight. 'And have a care you dight things handsomely;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Coxcomb, Act iv. sc. 3 (end). ME. dihten, dihten, verb; the pp. dight is in Chaucer, C. T. 14447 (B 3719). AS. dihtan, to set in order, dispose, arrange, prescribe, appoint; Luke, xxii. 29.—L. dictāre, to dictate, prescribe. See DICTATE. ¶ Similarly, the G. dichten, MHG. tihten, dihten, is borrowed from the same L. verb.

Errors, b. iv. c. 12. § 23.—L. digitus, a finger, a toe; the sense of 'figure' arose from counting on the fingers. ¶ Gk. δάκτυλος, a finger, seems to be unrelated. Der. digit-al, -ate, -at-ed, -at-ion.

DIGNIFY, to make worthy, exalt. (F.—L.) In Shak. Apparently from a base **dum̃p* (with mutation of u to y). It answers in form to G. tümpel, dümpfel, a pool; OHG. tumphilo. Cf. Dan. dial. dum̃p, a hollow in a field; Du. dompelen, to dive. All perhaps allied to Swed. dial. dim̃pa, to fall down, to plunge, str. vb. (pt. t. damp̃, supine dum̃pid). F. dîner, to dine. — Late L. **disjūnare*, short for **disjējūnare*, to break one's fast. — L. dis-, away; and iējūnare, to fast, from iēiūnus, fasting. See Romania, viii. 95; where it is explained that OF. disner, inf., answers to Late L. type **disjunare*, whilst the Late L. type **disjūno* (1 p. s. pr.) produced the OF. desjeune, F. déjeune, I breakfast. The difference in form is due to the difference in accentuation. Somewhat similar is the formation of F. aider from L. adiūtāre. See Aid. Körtling, § 3007. Der. dinner (ME. diner, from OF. disner, where the infin. is used as a sb.).

DING, to throw violently, beat, urge, ring. (E.) 'To ding (i.e. fling) the book a coit's distance from him;' Milton, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 32. Though not found in AS., the word is probably E. rather than Scand.; for it is a strong verb, whereas the related Scand. verbs are but weak. Cf. Icel. dengja, to hammer; Dan. denge, to bang; Swed. dänga, to bang, thump, beat. Cf. also MDan. dinge, to blunt an edge by beating on it; OHG. tangol, a hammer. Morris, i. 263. [It thus answers in sense to what appears to have been the orig. sense of dimple; cf. the variant dimble. 'Within a gloomie dimble shee doth dwell, Downe in a pitt, ore-grown with brakes and briars;' Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, A. ii. sc. 2. 'And satyrs, that in slades and gloomy dimbles dwell;' Drayton, Poly-Olbion, s. 2. l. 190.] β. It is clearly related to ME. dung, a pool; 'so deop dung that ha druncneth therein,' so deep a pool that they are drowned therein; Seinte Marherete, ed. Cockayne, p. 15, l. 21. Cf. OHG. tunc, an underground cave; Lith. deng-ti, to cover. See Dimple.

DINGY, soiled, dusky, dimmed. (E.) Very rare in books. 'Dingy, foul, dirty; Somersetshire;' Halliwell. So also 'dingy, dirty;' Pegge, Kenticisms (1736). This sense of 'dirty' is the original one. The word really means 'dung-y' or 'soiled with dung.' The i is due to an AS. y, which is the modification of u, by the usual rule; cf. fill, from full: whilst ng has taken the sound of nj. β. This change from u to i (for y) appears as early as the tenth century; we find 'stercoratio, dingiung,' = a dunging; Ælfric's Vocab., pr. in Voc. 104. 8. γ. We can explain the change from ng to nj, by observing that there was an AS. weak f. dynce as well as the str. f. dung. Cf. mixendincgan, acc., lit. mixen-dung; Anglia, vol. ix. p. 261, l. 9; also AS. gedyngan, weak vb., prov. E. dinge, to soil. And cf. stingy, from sting. See Dung. ¶ Cf. AS. dynt, a blow; Grein, i. 213. + Icel. dynt, a dint; dynta, to dint; Swed. dial. dunt, a stroke; dunta, to strike, to shake. All from a Teut. base dunt-. See Dent.

DISMAL, gloomy, dreary, sad. (F.—L.) ‘More fowle than dismall day;’ Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 26. The oldest use of the word appears to be in the phrase ‘in the dismal,’ signifying ‘at an unlucky time;’ or lit. ‘in the evil days.’ It occurs in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 1206; where the knight, in describing with what perturbation of mind he told his tale of love to his lady, says: ‘I not [know not] wel how that I began, Ful euel rehersen hit I can; And eek, as helpe me God withal, I trowe hit was in the dismal, That was the ten woundes of Egipte.’ The sense is: ‘I believe it was in an unlucky time similar to the days of the ten plagues of Egypt.’ The same phrase—in the dismal—occurs in The Pistil of Swete Susan (Laing’s Anc. Pop. Poet. of Scotland), l. 305; and in Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 303, l. 477. β. When the equivalence of dis-mal to ‘evil days’ was forgotten, the word days was (tautologically) added. Thus Lydgate has: ‘Her dismale daies, and her fatal houres;’ Storie of Thebes, pt. iii. (ed. 1561, fol. 370). See further in my note to Chaucer, Bk. Duch. 1206; Brand, Pop. Antiq., ed. Ellis, ii. 45; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 329.—AF. dis mal, explained as les mal jours (evil days) in MS. Glasgow, Q. 9. 13, fol. 100, back; in a poem by Rauf de Linham dated 1256; the MS. is described by M. Paul Meyer in his notes on Glasgow MSS.—OF. dis, pl. of di, a day (cf. DISMAY, to terrify, discourage. (Hybrid; F.—L. and OHG.) In early use; in King Alisaunder, 2801.—OF. **desmayer*, a form not found [though Palsgrave has ‘I dismaye, I put a person in fere or drede, je desmaye, and je esmaye; p. 519] but equivalent to Span. desmayar, to dismay, dishearten, also, to be discouraged, to lose heart (cf. Port. desmaier, Ital. smagare). The OF. **desmayer* was supplanted in French by the verb esmayer, to dismay, terrify, strike powerless. These two verbs are formed in the same way, and only differ in the forms of the prefixes, which are equivalent respectively to the L. dis-, apart, and to L. ex-, out. Both are hybrid words, formed, with L. prefixes, from the OHG. magan (G. mögen), to be able, to have might or power. β. Hence we have OF. desmayer and esmayer, to lose power, to faint, fail, be discouraged, in a neuter sense; afterwards used actively to signify to render powerless with terror, to astonish, astound, dismay, terrify. γ. The OHG. magan is the same word with AS. magan, and E. may; see May (1). δ. Cf. also Ital. smagare, formerly dismagare, to lose courage; Florio gives both spellings, and notes also the active sense ‘to quell,’ i.e. to dismay. Der. dismay, sb.

This answers to Norw. dokk, a hollow, depression; and seems to be quite a different word.] Cotgrave explains F. haute as 'a dock, to mend or build ships in.'—MDu. dokke, a harbour; Kilian, Oudemans; whence also Dan. dokke, Swed. docka, G. docke, a dock. Mod. Du. dok. Der. dock, verb; dock-yard. The history of the word is very obscure. The ME. dok (in G. Douglas) also resembles prov. E. doke, a hollow, depression, indentation; Du. deuk, a dent.

DOCKET, a label, list, ticket, abstract. (E.) 'The docket doth but signify the king's pleasure for such a bill to be drawn;' State Trials, Abp. Laud, an. 1640 (R.). 'Mentioned in a docquet;' Clarendon, Civil War, v. ii. p. 426. Docket is explained as being an abstract in Blount, Nomolexicon (1691). Apparently allied to the verb dock, to clip, curtail, hence to make a brief abstract; cf. 'docket, or dockyd;' Prompt. Parv. See DOCK (1). ¶ Docket might well be a F. form (as **docquet*), from MF. docquer, to dock; but no F. docquet is found. Der. docket, verb.

DODGE, to go hither and thither, evade, quibble. (E.) 'Let there be some dodging casuist with more craft than sincerity;' Milton, Tenure of Kings and Magistrates (R.). Florio (1598) explains Ital. arrouelare by 'to wheele or turne about, to dodge.' In Gammer Gurton's Needle, we find: 'dost but dodge,' i. e. thou dost but quibble; Hazlitt's Old Plays, iii. 254 (cf. p. 193). Of uncertain origin. α. The base seems to be that which appears in the Lowland Scotch dod, to jog, North Eng. dad, to shake; whence the frequentative forms seen in North Eng. daddle, doddle, to walk unsteadily, dodder, to shake, tremble, totter, as also in dadge, or dodge, to walk in a slow clumsy manner; doggle, or dodgel, to totter in walking, &c. (E.D.D.). β. The orig. sense appears to be 'to move unsteadily,' or 'to shift from place to place.' But the history is very obscure.

DODO, a kind of large bird, now extinct. (Port.—E.?) In Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 403, is a drawing of a dodo; at p. 402 he speaks of 'the dodo, a bird the Dutch call walgh-vogel or nod-eerssen,' which was then found in the Mauritius. In his second edition, 1638, he adds: 'a Portuguese name it is, and has reference to her sim-plesnes.'—Port. doudo, silly, foolish. According to Diez, this Port. word was borrowed from late ME. dold, stupid; formed from AS. dol, dull, stupid. See Dold in N.E.D.; and cf. dolt. ¶ Similarly the booby was named, also by the Portuguese. See the long article on the dodo in the Engl. Cyclopædia. Walgh-vogel in Dutch means 'nauseous bird;' it seems that the sailors killed them so easily that they were surfeited of them.

DOE, the female of the buck. (C.?) ME. doe; Wyclif, Prov. vi. 5. AS. dā, translating L. dāma in a copy of Ælfric's Glossary cited by Lye; cf. 'damma, vel dammula, da;' Voc. 320. 35. Cf. Perhaps all from L. dāma, a deer; but the E. form may be Celtic; cf. Irish dam, an ox, dam allaid, a stag; Stokes-Fick, l. p. 142. + Gk. δαμάτης, a young steer, Skt. damyas, a steer, from dam, to tame. See TAME.

DOFF, to take off clothes or a hat. (E.) 'And doffing his bright arms;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 9. 36. 'Dof bliue þis bere-skin' = doff quickly this bear-skin; William of Palerne, 2343. A contraction of do off, i. e. put off, just as don is of do on, and dup of do up. The expression is a very old one. 'þā hē him of dyde isernbyrnan' = then he did off his iron breast-plate; Beowulf, ed. Grein, 671.

DOG, a domestic quadruped. (E.) ME. dogge (2 syllables); Ancren Riwe, p. 290. AS. dogga, in a gloss; 'Canum (gen. pl.), doggena;' Cooper's Report on Rymer's Fœdera, App. B. p. 148; col. 1 (Record Series). Cf. AS. Doggi-þorn, Birch, Cart. Saxon. iii. 113; Doggene-ford, Kemble, Cod. Dipl. vi. 231. Hence were borrowed Du. dog, a mastiff; Swed. dogg, a mastiff; Dan. dogge, a bull-dog. Root unknown. DOGGER, a kind of fishing vessel. (E.) AF. doggere, in an Act of 31 Edw. III. stat. 3. cap. 1 (1356). [Hence, apparently, Du. dogger and Icel. dugga were borrowed.] Origin uncertain; perhaps named, in some way, from E. dog. Cf. MDu. doggen, doggeren, 'to dogg one, or, to follow one secretly;' Hexham. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 70.

DOGEREL, wretched poetry. (E.) Orig. an adj., and spelt dogerel. 'This may wel be rime dogerel, quod he;' Chaucer, C. T. 13853 (B 2155). 'Amid my dogrell rime;' Gascoigne, Counsel to Withipoll, l. 12. Prob. from dog; cf. DOG-CHEAP.

DOILY, a small napkin. (Personal name.) Also used as the name of a woollen stuff. 'We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine; a fool, and a doily stuff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety;' Congreve, Way of the World; A. iii. sc. 3. 'The stores are very low, sir, some doiley petticoats and manteaus we have, and half a dozen pair of laced shoes;' Dryden, Kind Keeper, iv. 1. 'The famous Doily . . . who raised a fortune by finding out materials for stuffs,' &c.; Spectator, no. 283 (1712). Pegge says that 'Doyley kept a Linnen-draper's shop in the Strand, a little W. of Catharine Street.' Some say no. 346, Strand, at the E. corner of Wellington Street. The stuff was named after him. The name is of French origin; cf. Rich. Coer de Lion, ed. Weber, l. 1647.

DOIT, a small Dutch coin. (Du.—Scand.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 33.—Du. duit, a doit.—Icel. (ONorse) þveit, a piece, bit, small coin.—Icel. **þveit*, 2nd grade of **þvita*, to cut, a lost verb cognate with AS. þwitan, to cut; see THWITE.

DOLE, a small portion. (E.) ME. dole, dale. Spelt dole, Ancren Riwe, pp. 10, 412; dale, Layamon, 19646, where the later text has dole. AS. dāl, ge-dāl, Grein, i. 390; a variant of AS. dāl, a portion. Thus dole is a doublet of deal (1), q. v. ¶ The difference between deal and dole appears to be due to the suffix; dāl is from a type **dailo-*; and deal from a type **daili-*.

DOLEFUL, sad, miserable. (Hybrid; F. and E.) A hybrid word, made by suffixing the AS. -ful to ME. doel, deol, duel, dol, del, of French origin. 'A deolful þing;' Layamon, 6901, later text. The sb. appears in Lowland Scotch as dool; spelt deol in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1048; dol in O. Eng. Hom. i. 285, l. 4.—OF.

DOLL, a child's puppet. (Gk.) 'I'll carry you and your doll too, Miss Margery;' Garrick, Miss in her Teens, Act ii. (Fribble). The same word as Doll, pet name for Dorothy; cf. Doll Tearsheet in 2 Hen. IV. 'O capitulum lepidissimum, . . . O little pretie doll poll;' Cooper's Thesaurus, 1565. So also Sc. doroty, a doll; from Dorothy, which is a name of Gk. origin. In Johnson's Dict.

DOLLAR, a silver coin. (Low G.—G.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 62. —Low G. daler, a dollar. Adapted and borrowed from G. thaler, a dollar. β. The G. thaler is an abbreviation of Joachimsthaler, a coin so called because first coined from silver obtained from mines in Joachimsthal (i.e. Joachim's dale) in Bohemia about A.D. 1518; they were sometimes called Schlickenthaler, because coined by the counts of Schlick. The G. thal is cognate with E. dale. Thus dollar = dale-er. See Dale. ¶ The Du. form is daalder.

DOLMAN, a kind of loose jacket. (F.—G.—Hung.—Turk.) 'Clothed with a robe of dollymant crimson;' Hakluyt, Voy. vol. ii. pt. 1. p. 113.—F. dolman.—G. dolman, dollman.—Hung. dolmany.—Turk. dölümân, dölāmāh, a kind of long robe.

It seems at first to have rhymed with monkey, as still in Somersets. α. The word is a double diminutive, formed with the suffixes -k and -y (-ey), the full form of the double suffix appearing in the Lowland Scotch lass-ickie, a little-little lass; this double suffix is particularly common in the Banffshire dialect, which has beastikie from beast, horsikie from horse, &c., as explained in The Dialect of Banffshire, by the Rev. Walter Gregor, p. 5. β. The stem is dun, a familiar name for a horse, as used in the common phrase 'dun is in the mire;' as to which see Chaucer, C. T. Mancip. Prol. l. 5; Shak. Romeo, i. 4. 41. The name dun was given to a horse or ass in allusion to its colour; see Dun. ¶ Similarly was formed dunnoch, ME. donek, a hedge-sparrow, with a single suffix -ock.

Norwegian dusa, to strike with violence (also to topple down, as from a blow, Ross); Ger. dial. dusen, tusen, to strike, run against, cited by Rietz s.v. dust; also MDu. doesen, to beat heavily, strike (Kilian); EFries. dössen, to strike (Koolman). β. The prov. G. (Altmark) dussen means 'to daze one by a blow on the head' (Danneil); cf. Low G. dussen, to be dazed by a blow on the head. Perhaps allied to Dizzy and Doze.

DOWSE (2), to plunge into water; see Douse.

DOWSE (3), to extinguish. (E.) A cant term; 'dowse the glim,' i.e. extinguish the light. Probably only a particular use of dowse (1), to strike. Possibly suggested by dout, to extinguish.

DOXOLOGY, an utterance of praise to God. (L. — Gk.) 'Doxology, a song of praise,' &c.; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. — Late L. doxologia. — Gk. δοξολογία, an ascription of praise. — Gk. δοξολόγος, giving praise. — Gk. δοξο-, for δόξα, glory; and -λόγος, speaking, from λέγειν, to speak. Δόξα meant originally 'a notion,' from δοκεῖν, to think, expect; see Dogma.

DOXY, a disreputable sweetheart. (MDu.) A cant term. In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 2. (Cf. EFries. doktje, dimin. of dokke, a doll.) Prob. from MDu. docke, a doll. Cf. OHG. tocchā, a doll, also a term of endearment (G. docke).

DOZE, to sleep lightly, slumber. (Scand.) 'Dosed with his fumes, and heavy with his load, They found him snoring in his dark abode;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Ecl. vi. 21. Here dosed means 'stupefied,' 'rendered drowsy.' — Swed. dial. dusa, to doze, slumber; Rietz; Dan. döse, to doze, mope. Cf. Icel. dūsa, to doze; Low G. dussen, to be dizzy. From Teut. base **dus-*, whence also dizzy; see Dizzy.

DOZEN, twelve. (F. — L.) ME. dosain; K. Alisaunder, l. 657. — OF. dosaine, dozaine; modF. douzaine, a dozen. — OF. doze, modF. douze, twelve; with suffix -aine (< L. -ēna, as in cent-ēna). — L. duodecim, twelve. — L. duo, two, cognate with E. two; and decem, ten, cognate with E. ten. See Two and Ten.

DRAB (1), a low, sluttish woman. (E.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 31. Palsgrave has: 'Drabbe, a slutte.' [Cf. also Irish drabog, a slut, slattern, Gael. drabag, a slattern; Gael. drabach, dirty, slovenly, drabaire, a dirty, slovenly man; all from E.] Not found in AS. Cf. EFries. drabbe, puddle-water; Du. drabbe, dregs, draff; Low G. drabbeln, to slaver. Allied to Draff. Der. drab, verb; Hamlet, ii. 1. 26.

DRAB (2), of a dull brown colour. (F. — Late L.) 'Drab, adj. (with clothiers), belonging to a gradation of plain colours betwixt a white and a dark brown;' Ash's Dict. ed. 1775. He also gives: 'Drab, s. (in commerce) a strong kind of cloth, cloth double milled.' Bailey (1721) has: 'Drap, Drab, cloth.' It would appear that drab was applied to the colour of undyed cloth. — F. drap, cloth. — Late L. acc. drappum, from nom. drappus, in Charlemagne's Capitularies (Brachet). Cf. Lith. drapanos, white linen. See Drape and Trap (2).

DRAFF, dregs, refuse, hogwash. (E.) ME. drاف, Chaucer, C. T. 17346 (l. 35); and earlier, in Layamon, 29256. Not found in AS.; but may be considered an E. word. + Du. drاف, swill, hog's wash; also drab, draff; Icel. drاف, draff, husks; Swed. drاف, grains; Dan. drav, dregs, lees; G. trüber, pl. grains, husks. Cf. AS. drōf, turbid; G. trübe; Goth. drōbjan, to trouble; Gk. τρέφειν, to thicken, curdle, nourish. Allied to Drab (1), q. v. [Cf. Gael. and Irish drabh, draff; from E.]

DRAFT, the act of drawing, a draught. (E.) A corruption of draught, by the usual change of gh to f, as in laugh (pron. laaf). See Draught. Der. draft, verb, drafts-man.

DRAG, to pull forcibly. (Scand.) ME. dragen, Prompt. Parv. A secondary weak verb, due to draw. — Swed. dragg, to search with a grapnel; dragg, a grapnel; cf. Dan. drag, a pull, tug, draught, haul. — Swed. draga, to draw; Icel. draga, to draw, pull, carry; Dan. drage, to draw, pull, drag. See Draw.

DRAGGLE, to make or become dirty by drawing along the ground. (E.) 'His draggling tail hung in the dirt;' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 449. The frequentative of drag, by addition of the usual suffix -le; cf. waggle from wag. See Drag. Doublet, drawl.

DRAGOMAN, an interpreter. (F. — Ital. — Gk. — Arab.) Spelt druggerman, Pope, Sat. viii. 83. Sandys has drogemen as a pl.; Travels (1632), p. 62. [Found very early, spelt drogman, in King Alisaunder, l. 3401; from F. drogman.] — F. dragoman, drogman. — Ital. dragomanno, an interpreter. A word of Eastern origin, introduced from Constantinople by the Crusaders, who had borrowed it from the mediæval Gk. δραγούμανος, an interpreter (Brachet). — Arab. tarjūmān (formerly targūmān), an interpreter, translator, dragoman; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 131; Rich. Dict. p. 388. Cf. Chaldee targūm, a version, interpretation. See Targum.

'seeing one,' i.e. sharp-sighted one. — Gk. δρακ-, weak grade of δέρκομαι, I see. — ✓ DERK, to see; cf. Skt. dr̥k, to see. Der. dragon-ish, -et (dimin. form), -fly; and see dragoon.

DRAGOON, a kind of light horseman. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'A captain of dragoons;' Spectator, no. 261. — F. dragon, a dragoon, horse-soldier; the same word with F. dragon, a dragon, though the reason for the name has been disputed. — L. acc. dracōnem, from nom. draco, a dragon. See Dragon. Der. dragonn-ade, a French word. ¶ Littré gives 1585 as the date of the first use of dragons, and quotes the supposition of Voltaire, that they were so named from OF. dragon, in the sense of 'standard;' but this is unsupported. The fact is rather, that they were so called because armed with fire-arms called dragons; and this is strongly supported by the use of E. dragoon in the sense of a kind of carbine, as early as 1622 (N.E.D.). And these carbines were so called because they 'breathed fire,' like the fabulous dragons of old. The dragoons were at first infantry soldiers, till 1784.

DRAIN, to draw off gradually. (E.) In Shak. Macb. i. 3. 18. Not found in ME. AS. drēhnigean, drēhnian, drēnian; in the phr. 'ge drēhnigead [var. read. drēhniad, drēniad] þone gnæt aweg,' i.e. ye drain away the gnat; Matt. xxiii. 24. Also spelt drēahnian, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 72; orig. sense, 'to become dry.' — AS. **drēag-* = Teut. **draug-*, 2nd grade of Teut. **dreugan-*, to be dry; cf. Icel. draug-r, a dry log. See Dry. Der. drain, sb.; drain-age, drain-er. See Notes on Eng. Etym., p. 73.

DRAKE, the male of the duck. (E.) 'As doth the whyte doke after hir drake;' Chaucer, C. T. 3576; cf. Havelok, 1241. This ME. drake answers to AS. **draca*, not found, but of the same form as AS. draca, a dragon, though the latter is merely borrowed from the L. draco (see Dragon). β. We find a similar equivalence of form in the Low G. drake, (1) a drake; (2) a kite (Bremen Wört.); Low G. drake, draak, (1) a kite; (2) a drake; (3) a meteor (Berghaus); MDan. drage, (1) a dragon; (2) a drake (Kalkar). Cf. also Swed. and, a duck, and-drake, a drake (from Low G.); G. enterich, OHG. anelrecho, MHG. antrache (Schade), for **anut-trahho* (Kluge); prob. for anut (AS. ened) duck, and trahho, of unknown meaning, the same in form as trahho, a dragon. Ihre notes MSwed. drake, a dragon, a war-ship, and-drake, a drake. Levins (1570) has: 'drake, birde, anas;' and 'drake, dragon, draco.' Cf. G. drache, drachen, a dragon, a kite. γ. The AS. **draca* is probably Teutonic. Perhaps connected with Icel. draka or drāk, a streak; Swed. dial. drakig; Dan. dial. draget, marked (on the back) with a white stripe.

DRAM, DRACHM, a small weight, small quantity. (F. — L. — Gk.) In Shak. Timon, v. 1. 154; Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 6. 'Drame, wyghte [weight], drama, dragma;' Prompt. Parv. — OF. dragne (Hatzfeld); MF. drame, dragne, drachme, 'a dram; the eighth part of an ounce, or three scruples; also, a handful of;' Cot. — L. drachma, borrowed from Gk. δραχμή, a handful, a drachma, used both as a weight and a coin; cf. δράγμα, as much as one can grasp. — Gk. δράσσομαι, I grasp. Brugmann, i. § 509.

DRAMA, a representation of actions. (L. — Gk.) Puttenham speaks of 'enterludes or poemmes drammaticke;' Arte of Poesie, lib. i. cap. 17 (heading). Cf. the phrase 'dramatis personæ' commonly prefixed to old plays. — L. drāma. — Gk. δράμα (stem δραματ-), a Lumby, p. 74. — F. draper, to make cloth; Cot. — F. drap, cloth; see Drab (2). Der. drap-er, occurring in P. Plowman, B. v. 255; -er-y.

DRASTIC, actively purgative, effective. (Gk.) 'Drastica; drastic remedies, i.e. such as operate speedily and effectually'; Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. — Gk. δραστικός, drastic, effective; allied to δραστήος, verbal adj. of δρᾶω, I effect; see Drama.

DRAUGHT, also DRAFT, a drawing. (E.) 'A draughte of wyn'; Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 398 (A 396); spelt drahtie, Layamon, 29259. Not found in AS., but evidently derived from AS. drag-an, to draw, drag; see Draw. The suffixed -t appears also in flight from fly, drift from drive, &c. + Du. draght, a load, burden; from dragen, to carry; Dan. dragt, a load; Icel. drättr, a pulling, a draught (of fishes); from draga, to draw. Der. draught-house (for withdraught-house, where withdraught = a retreat, place to which one withdraws); draughts-man or drafts-man; also draughts, a game in which alternate draughts, i.e. 'moves', are made; Chaucer uses draughtes, in the sense of 'moves' at the game of chess, in The Boke of the Duchesse, l. 653; cf. Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, 1779, 1812.

DRAW, to pull along. (E.) ME. drawen; Layamon, i. 57; l. 1339. AS. dragan (pt. t. drōh); cf. law from the older lagu. The form draw dates from after A. D. 1200. + Du. dragen; Icel. and Swed. draga, Dan. drage; Goth. dragan; G. tragen, to pull along, carry. Teut. type **dragan-*, pt. t. **drōg*. Der. draw-back, -bridge, -er, -ers, -ing; draw-ing-room (short for withdraw-ing-room, which was used as late as 1627; see Pegge's Curialia, pt. i. p. 66); -uall; also with-draw, q. v.; drawl, q. v.; draught, q. v.; dray, q. v.; dredge (1), q. v.

DRAWL, to speak very slowly. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 1. 145. An extension of draw, with the suffix -l, giving a frequentative force. Thus drawl is a doublet of drabble, q. v. Cf. Du. dralen, to loiter, linger, delay; similarly formed from dragen, to carry, endure; Icel. dralla (< drag-la), to loiter.

DRAY, a low cart for heavy goods. (E.) The word dray-load occurs in State Trials, an. 1643 (R.); dray-men in Shak. Rich. II, i. 4. 32. ME. dreye, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, iii. 145. The form dray agrees with AS. dræge, which occurs in AS. dræge or dræg-net, a draw-net, or dredge-net; Voc. 105. 4. + Swed. drög, a sledge, dray. It means 'that which is drawn along'; see Draw.

DREAD, to fear, be afraid. (E.) ME. dreden, P. Plowman, B. xx. 153. AS. drēdan, only found in the compounds on-drēdan, ādrēdan, ofdrēdan; of which the first is common. + OSax. drādan, only in the compound andrādan or anddrādan, to be afraid; OHG. trātan, only in the comp. intrātan, MHG. entrāten, to be afraid. DREAM (1), a vision. (E.) ME. dream, dreem, drem; Havelok, 1284. [Distinct from ME. dream, 'sound,' or 'music,' as in 'mid te dredful dreame of þe englene bemen' = with the dreadful sound of the angels' trumpets, Ancren Riwele, p. 214; AS. drēam, (1) a sweet sound, music, harmony; (2) joy, glee.] The sense of 'vision' is not found in the earliest English, but the AS. form must, in this case also, have been **drēam*. + OSax. drōm, a dream; OFries. drām, a dream; Du. droom; Icel. draumr; Dan. and Swed. dröm; G. traum. Kluge suggests comparison with G. trug-bild, a phantom. If so, the Teut. type was **draugmoz*, m.; from Teut. **draug*, second grade of **dreugan-* (OHG. triogan, G. trügen), to deceive. Cf. Icel. draugr, a ghost. Also OPers. drauga (Pers. durūgh), a deceit, lie; from the Idg. root **dhreugh*. Brugmann, i. §§ 681, 689. Der. dream, verb, q. v.; dream-less, dream-y.

DREAM (2), to see a vision. (E.) The verb is derived from the sb., not vice versa. Cf. G. träumen, to dream, from sb. traum.

DREARY, DREAR, gloomy, cheerless. (E.) Drear is a late poetical form, used by Milton (Il Pens. 119), Parnell and Cowper. It is quite unauthorised, and a false form. ME. dreori, dreri, druri; spelt dreery, drery, Chaucer, C. T. 8390 (E 514). AS. drēorig, sad, mournful; originally 'bloody,' or 'gory,' as in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1417, 2789. Formed, with suffix -ig, from AS. drēor, gore, blood; Grein, i. 205. And again, AS. drēor is from the verb drēosan, to fall, drip, whence also drizzle, q. v. + Icel. dreyrigr, gory; from dreyri, gore; G. traurig, sad, orig. gory, from OHG. trōr, gore. All from Teut. str. vb. **dreusan-* (pt. t. draus, pp. druzanoz), to fall in drops. See Drizzle, Drowse. Der. dreari-ness, -ly.

DREDGE (1), a drag-net. (E.) Also spelt drudge. 'Drudger, one that fishes for oysters'; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. 'Dredgers, fishers for oysters'; Kersey, ed. 1715; cf. MF. drege (prob. from E.), 'a kind of fish-net, forbidden to be used except for oysters'; Cot.

The North E. form is dreg (see Supp. to Jamieson). It answers to an AS. form **drecg* or **drecge* (from **drag-jo-*); from AS. drag-an, to draw. See Draw. Cf. MDu. dregge, 'a drag'; Hexham. ¶ There is an AS. drag-net, a draw-net, Voc. 105. 4; but this would give dray-net; see Dray.

DREDGE (2), to sprinkle flour on meat, &c. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) 'Burnt figs dreg'd [dredged] with meal and powdered sugar'; Beaum. and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, Act ii. sc. 3. 'Dredge you a dish of plovers'; id. Bloody Brother, Act ii. sc. 2. To dredge is to sprinkle as in sowing dreg, or mixed corn; thus Holland says that 'choler is a miscellane seed, as it were, and a dredge, made of all the passions of the mind'; Plutarch, p. 108 (R.). 'Dredge or Dreg, oats and barley mingled together'; Kersey, ed. 1715. — OF. dragée, dragée aux chevaux, 'provender of divers sorts of pulse mingled together; also the course grain called bolymong, French-wheat, Block-wheat, or Buck-wheat'; Cot. Cotgrave also gives the older sense of dragée as 'a kind of digestive (sic) powder, usually prescribed unto weak stomachs after meat'; this is the mod. F. dragée, a sugar-plum. β. Allied to Ital. treggea, a sugar-plum; and supposed (by Diez) to be derived from Late L. tragēmata. Diez quotes from Papias: 'collibia sunt apud Hebræos, quæ nos vocamus tragēmata vel vilia munuscula, ut cicer frimum,' &c. — Gk. τραγήματα, dried fruits, pl. of τράγημα, something nice to eat. — Gk. τρώγειν 2nd aor. ἔ-τραγ-ον, to gnaw; also to eat dried fruits; allied to τρώγλη, a hole, a cave (cf. E. trout, troglo-dyte).

DREGS, lees, sediment. (Scand.) A pl. form, from sing. dreg. 'Fra fen, ful of dreg' = out of a fen full of mire; Northern Met. version of Ps. xxxix. 3. 'Dregges and drafte'; P. Plowman, B. xix. 397. — Icel. dregg, pl. dreggjjar, dregs, lees; Swed. drägg, dregs, lees. β. The theoretical Teut. form is **drag-jōn-* (Noreen); allied to OPussian dragios, dregs; cf. Gk. ταραχῆ, disorder, θράσσειν, to trouble, disturb. ¶ Not allied to G. dreck, dirt, for that is the Icel. þrekkr; nor yet to L. fracēs, dregs of oil (Brugm. i. § 417). Der. dregg-y, i-ness.

ME. dressen; King Alisaunder, 479. — OF. dresser, drescer, to erect, set up, arrange, dress. — Late L. type **directiāre*, not found; but formed from L. directus, direct, straight, hence just, right, upright. See Direct. Der. dress, sb.; -ing, -ing-case, -y; also dress-er (in Palsgrave), a table on which meat was dressed.

DRIBBLE, to let fall in small drops. (E.) The reading dribbling in Shak. Meas. for Meas. i. 3. 2, may be an error for dribbing. Dribble is the frequentative of drib, which is a variant of drip. 'Lyke drunkardis that dribbis,' i. e. drip, slaver; Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 641. Cf. Dan. dial. drible, dreble, to dribble, MDan. drybe, to drip; Jutland dribble, to dribble. See Drip. Der. dribbl-er; also dribbl-et, formed with dimin. suffix -et. Kersey has 'dribblet (old word), a small portion, a little sum of money owing.' ⚡ Not the same word as drivel.

DRIFT, that which is driven. (E.) 'The dragoun drew him awaie [departed] with drift of his winges,' i. e. driving, violent movement; Alisaunder, frag. A., ed. Skeat, 998. Cf. Cursor Mundi, 496. See Drive. Der. drift, verb; drift-less, -wood.

DRILL (1), to bore holes, to train soldiers. (Du.) Cotgrave explains F. trappan as 'a stone-cutter's drill, wherewith he bores little holes in marble.' Ben Jonson hints at the Dutch origin of the word in the sense of 'to train soldiers.' 'He that but saw thy curious captain's drill Would think no more of Flushing or the Brill'; Underwoods, lxii, l. 29. — MDu. drillen, or trillen, 'motitare, nutare, vacillare, ultro citroque cursitare, gyros agere, gyrare, rotare, volvere, tornare, terebrare,' Kilian; mod. Du. drillen, to drill, bore, to turn round, shake, brandish, to drill, form to arms, to run hither and thither, to go through the manual exercise. Sewel's Dutch Dict. gives drillen, to drill, shake, brandish; met den piek drillen, to shake a pike; to exercise in the management of arms. β. The orig. sense is 'to turn round and round,' whence (1) to turn men about or drill them, (2) to turn a pike about, or brandish it. Allied to MHG. drellen, to turn round (pp. gedrollen), and to Low G. drall, twisted tight. Teut. type **prellan-* (pt. t. **prall*), to twist; cf. AS. pearl, strict. Der. drill, sb.

DRILL (2), to sow corn in rows. (Low G.) We find an old word drill used in the sense of 'rill.' 'So does a thirsty land drink up all the dew of heaven that wets its face, and the greater shower makes no torrent, nor digs so much as a little furrow, that the drills of the water might pass into rivers, or refresh their neighbour's weariness; Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 6 (R.). We also find the verb drill, to trickle. 'And water'd with cool rivulets, that drill'd Along the borders; Sandys, Ecclesiastes, c. ii. β. This verb cannot be separated from trill, used in precisely the same sense; as in 'Few drops . . . adowne it trild,' i.e. trickled; Spenser F. Q. ii. 12. 78. In Chaucer, C. T. 13604 (Group B, 1864), Tyrwhitt prints trilled where the Ellesmere MS. has trykled; and it is clear that trill has the same sense. It seems to be really the same word as the above, but with a sense more common in Low G. The W. Flem. indrillen means 'to drill in,' to bury grain to a slight depth in the earth (De Bo); and Berghaus notes not only the Low G. verb drillen, but drill-plog (drill-plough) as used in drill-kultur. Trill is properly the Scand. form. See Trill (2).

DRILLING, a twilled linen or cotton fabric. (G.—L.) A corruption of G. drillich, ticking, huckaback. And the G. word is a corruption from L. trilic-, stem of trilix, having or consisting of three threads.—L. tri-, from tres, three; and licium, a thrum, a thread.

DRINK, to suck in, swallow. (E.) ME. drinken; Chaucer, C. T. 135. AS. drincan (common). + Du. drinken; Icel. drekkja (for drenka = drinka); Swed. dricka; Dan. drikke; Goth. drigkan (for drinkan); G. trinken. Teut. type **drenkan-*, pt. t. **drank*, pp. **drunkanoz*. Der. drink-able, -er, -offering; and see drunken, drunkard, drench, drown.

DRIP, to fall in drops. (Scand.) 'Dryppe or drope, gutta, stilla, cadula; Prompt. Parv. p. 132. 'Dryppyn or droppyn, stillo, gutto; id. 'Dryppynge, or droppynge, stillacio; id. Drip is a secondary weak verb, closely allied to the sb. drop, and is of Scand. origin.—Dan. dryppe, to drip; dryp, a drop; cf. Icel. dreyfa, to let drop, from draup, 2nd grade of the strong verb drjúpa, to drip. The Dan. dryppe represents a Teut. type **drupjan*, from **drup-*, weak grade of **dreupan-* as seen in AS. drēopan, strong vb., pp. dropen; see ā-drēopan in Grein; OSax. drīopan, to drip; pt. t. drōp; OHG. triufan, G. triefen, to drip, trickle; pt. t. troff. See Drop.

DRIVE, to urge on, push forward. (E.) ME. driuen (with u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 7122 (D 1540). AS. drifan, Grein, i. 206. + Du. drijven; Icel. drifa; Swed. drifva; Dan. drive; Goth. dreiban; OHG. tripan, MHG. triben, G. treiben. Teut. type **dreiban-* (pt. t. **draib*, pp. **dribanoz*). Der. drive, sb., drive-er; also drif-t, q.v.; drove, q.v.

DRIVEL, to slaver, speak foolishly. (E.) ME. driuelen, to slaver. 'Drynken and dryuelen; P. Plowman, B. x. 41. 'Thei don but dryuele peron; id. x. 11: where the C-text (xii. 9) has dreuele. This drevelen answers to AS. drēflan, to drivel or run at the nose; Voc. 161. 34. From the base drāb-, whence also Draff. Cf. Low G. drabbeln, to slaver; Bremen Wörterbuch. Also Swed. drävel, foolish talk; like E. drivel, sb. Der. drivel, sb., drivell-ing, drivell-er.

DRIZZLE, to rain slightly. (E.) 'These tears, that drizzle from mine eyes; Marlowe, Edw. II, Act ii. sc. 4. l. 18. The old spelling is drissel or drisel. 'Through sletie drisling day; Drant's Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2. Dris-el means 'to fall often,' and is the frequentative of ME. dresen, to fall, from AS. drēosan, to fall in drops; see Dreary. Cf. Dan. drysse, to fall in drops; Swed. dial. drösla.

DROLL, strange, odd, causing mirth. (F.—Du.) Shak. has drollery, Temp. iii. 3. 21; 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 156. The phr. 'to play the drol' is in Howell's Letters, b. i. s. 1. let. 18 (1620).—MF. drole, 'a boon companion, merry grig, pleasant wag; Cot. Also cf. droler, 'to play the wag; id.; drolerie, 'waggery, good roguery; id. [The early use of drollery shows that we took the word from the French.]—Du. drollig, 'burlesk, odd; Sewel. [The sb. drol, a droll fellow, is not noticed by Sewel.]—MDu. drol, 'a juglar; Hexham. Cf. Low G. drullig, droll. Perhaps from the pp. stem droll-; for which see Drill (1). Korting, § 3115. Der. droll-ish, droll-ery.

DROMEDARY, a kind of camel. (F.—L.—Gk.) In early use. ME. dromedarie, King Alisaunder, 3407.—OF. dromedaire, 'a dromedary; Cot.—Late L. dromedarius, better spelt dromadarius; Dugange.—L. dromad-, stem of dromas, a dromedary; with suffix -arius.—Gk. δρομαδ-, stem of δρομας, fast running, speedy.—Gk. δραμειν, to run; used as infin. aor. of τρέχειν, to run, but from a different root. + Skt. dram, to run; akin to drā, to run.

DRONE (1), to make a deep murmuring sound. (E.) 'He that dronis ay as ane bee; Dunbar, Poems, xv. 8. [Cf. also ME. drounen; 'he drowned as a dragon, dredefull of noyes; Alisaunder, frag. A., ed. Skeat, l. 985.] Not found in AS., but an imitative word. Similar words (but with a different vowel) are Swed. dröna, to low, bellow, drone; Dan. dröne, to peal, rumble; drön, a rumbling noise; Goth. drunjus, a sound, voice; Rom. x. 18; Icel. drynja, to roar. Allied to Gk. θρῆνος, a dirge; Skt. dhraṇ, to sound. See below.

DRONE (2), a non-working bee. (E.) ME. dran, drane; pl. dranes, Piers Plowman's Crede, l. 726. AS. drān; AS. Chron. an.

1127. 'Fucus, drān; Voc. 121. 10; also drēn, Voc. 318. 35. The AS. drān (like EFries. drāne) was prob. borrowed from OSax. drān (cognate with AS. drēn). Cf. MHG. treno, a drone; cited by Fick and Curtius. + Gk. θρῆνας, a Laconian drone-bee (Hesychius); Gk. ἀν-θρῆνη, a wild bee. Teut. stems dren-, drēn-; cf. drun- in the article above. Der. dron-ish.

DROOP, to sink, faint, fail. (Scand.) ME. drupen, droupen; Chaucer, C. T. 107. The pres. part. drupand is in the Cursor Mundi, l. 4457.—Icel. drūpa, to droop; allied to the strong verb drjúpa, to drip or drop. In mod. Icel., drūpa and drjúpa are confounded; but drūpa is a weak verb, and from the weak grade **drūp-*. For the sense, cf. 'I am ready to drop,' i.e. I droop. See Drop, and Drip.

DROP, sb. a small particle of liquid; verb, to let fall small particles of liquid. (E.) ME. drope, a drop; dropien, droppen, to let drop. The sb. is in Chaucer, C. T. 131; the verb in C. T. 16048 (G. 580); and the vb. is from the sb. AS. dropa, a drop; Grein, i. 207; dropian, to drop, Psalter, ed. Thorpe, xlv. 10; cf. also drēopian, to drop, drip, Grein, i. 205. + Du. drop, a drop; Icel. dropi, a drop; Swed. droppe, a drop; Dan. draabe, sb. a drop; vb. to drop; OHG. troppo, G. troffen, a drop; Low G. druppen, a drop. β. All from Teut. **drup-*, weak grade of Teut. **dreupan-*, to drop, as seen in AS. drēopan; see Drip. And see Droop. Cf. OIrish drucht, dew.

DROPSY, an unnatural collection of serous fluid in the body. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. dropesie, a spelling found in Wyclif, Luke xiv. 2; where the earlier text has ydropsie. See further under Hydropsy. Der. drops-ic-al.

DROSHKY, DROSKY, a kind of carriage. (Russian.) Mere Russian.—Russ. drojki, a low four-wheeled carriage. [The j sounded as in French.] Given by Reiff. Dimin. of drogi, a waggon; which was orig. pl. of droga, a perch (of a carriage).

DROSS, dregs, scum, impure matter, refuse. (E.) ME. dros, Ancrén Riwle, p. 284. AS. drōs, Voc. 353. 20; cf. AS. drōsna, answering to Lat. fax, Ps. xxxix. 2, ed. Spelman. Cf. Du. droesem, dregs; G. drusen, pl., lees, dregs; OHG. truosana, husks of pressed grapes. And perhaps cf. AS. dærstan, dregs; Westphal. drost, dregs. Der. dross-y, -i-ness.

DROUGHT, dryness. (E.) ME. drogte, droughte; Chaucer, C. T. l. 2. In P. Plowman, B. vi. 290, we have drought, but in the earlier text (A. vii. 275) we find drouhpe. In the Ormulum, l. 8626, it is spelt druhhpe. AS. drūgað, dryness; Voc. 317. 24.—AS. drūg-, to dry; cf. drýge, dry; Grein, i. 207. So also Du. droogte, drought, from droogen, to dry. See Dry. ¶ The form drouth or drought occurs as late as in Spenser's Daphnaida, l. 333; and in Bacon's Nat. Hist. § 669; and is still found in prov. English. The same change from final th to final t has occurred in height, spelt highth in Milton's Paradise Lost. Der. drought-y, -i-ness.

DROVE, a number of driven cattle, a herd. (E.) ME. drof, droue (with u=v); wip [h]is droue of bestis; Will. of Palerne, 181.—AS. drāf; AS. Chron. an. 1016.—AS. drāf, 2nd grade of drifan, to drive. See Drive. Der. drov-er.

DROWN, to be killed by being drenched in water; to kill by drenching in water. (Scand.) Orig. an intransitive or passive verb, as particularly denoted by the suffixed -n; cf. the Mæso-Goth. verbs in -nan, which are of a like character. 'Shall we give o'er and drown? Tempest, i. 1. 42. 'Alle . . . drowned [perished] perinne; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 372. 'Alle þai drowned; Cursor Mundi, 11793; where the Cotton MS. has: 'Al þai drund.' The form is M. Danish.—MDan. drukne, drougne, droune, drone, to sink, to be drowned (Kalkar). β. The -nkn- was preserved in ME. druncnien, later druncnen, drunknen; the spelling druncnen is in the Ormulum, 15398; drunknen is in Wyclif, Isa. lxiii. 6; cf. ONorthumb. druncnia, to be drowned, to sink; 'ongann druncnia' = began to sink; Matt. xiv. 30 (Lindisfarne MS.). Formed, with suffix -ian, from druncen, lit. drunken, pp. of drincan, to drink. γ. Similarly, we find Swed. drunkna, to be drowned, from drucken, drunken, pp. of dricka, to drink; and Dan. drukne, to be drowned, from drukken, drunken, old pp. of drikke, to drink. See Drunken. ¶ It may be added that this will appear more plainly from the Lindisfarne MS., Luke, xii. 45; where the Lat. inebriari is translated by 'druncnia vel þette se druncenig,' i.e. to drown or that he may be drunken. Cf. the numerous forms (without k) of Jutland drukne (Feilberg). See Notes on E. Etym., p. 76.

DROWSE, DROWZE, to be sluggish. (E.) Formerly drouse; Milton, P. L. xi. 131; viii. 289; whence drousie, id. Il Penseroso, 83. Not found (as yet) in the Mid. Eng. period. AS. drūsian, to be sluggish; 'lagu drūsade' = the lake lay sluggish; Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1630. The base drūs- is a weaker grade of Teut. **dreus-*, as seen in AS. drēosan, to mourn; Grein, i. 206, which is the same as AS. drēosan, to fall; id. β. So, too, OHG. trūrēn, to cast down the eyes, to mourn (mod. G. trauern), is related to OHG. trūreg, mournful, and to the E. dreary. See Dreary. Cf. Pomeran. druse, slumber. Der. drowz-y (drowsy in Palsgrave), drowz-i-ness.

DRUB, to beat. (Arab.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 1042. He also has the sb. drubs, id. pt. iii. c. 3. l. 209. First introduced in connexion with the East, and applied to the punishment of the bastinado. Phillips (1706) has: 'Drub, to beat the soles of the feet with the stick, a punishment used in Turkey.' Prob. from Arab. darb (zarb), a beating with a stick; from Arab. root daraba (zaraba), he beat; Rich. Dict. p. 952 (N.E.D.). β. Ihre (in 1769) quotes Swed. drabba, to beat; with the conjecture of Spengel (1645-1714) that it is from Arab. darab, 'percutere, verberari facere.' Der. drub, sb.; drubb-ing.

DRUDGE, to perform menial work. (E.) Shak. has the sb. drudge, Merch. of Ven. iii. 2. 103. ME. druggen; Chaucer has 'to drugge and drawe'; C. T. 1418 (A 1416). [Irish drugaire, a drudger, drudge, slave, and Irish drugaireachd, drudgery, slavery, are from E.] It answers to an AS. **drygean*, not found, but regularly formed from drug-, weak grade of drēogan, to work, perform, endure (= Teut. **dreugan-*, Goth. drūgan, LowSc. dree). Cf. Icel. drjūg-virkr, one who works slowly but surely; Norw. drugga, to go slowly, like one under a heavy burden (Ross). Der. drudge, sb.; drudg-er-y.

DRUG, a medical ingredient. (F.) ME. drogge, drugge; the pl. drogges, drugges is in Chaucer, Six-text, A 426; where the Harl. MS. has dragges, Prol. l. 428. [But dragges and drogges cannot be the same word; the former is from OF. dragée, discussed s.v. Dredge (2), q. v.; the latter is OF. drogue.] — OF. (and mod. F.) drogue, a drug; cf. Ital., Span., and Port. droga, a drug. β. Remoter origin uncertain; Diez derives it from Du. droog, dry; and Sewel's Du. Dict. has: 'Droogen, gedroogde kruiden en wortels, drugs'; but he has prob. confused the F. with the Du. word. The word may be Eastern. Körtling, § 3116, suggests a Slavonic origin, viz. Oslav. drag, Pol. drogi, costly. Der. drugg-ist.

DRUGGET, a coarse woollen cloth. (F.) 'And, coarsely clad in Norwich drugget, came,' Dryden, Mac Flecknoe, l. 33. — MF. droguet, 'a kind of stuff that's half silk, half wool'; Cot. Cf. Span. droguete. A dimin., with suffix -et, from F. drogue, (1) a drug; (2), trash, rubbish, stuff (Hamilton and Legros, French Dict.); i.e. in the latter sense. But it is probable that drogue, trash, is not the same word as drogue, a drug.

DRUID, a priest of the ancient Britons. (F.—L.—C.) 'The British Druids;' Howell, Foreign Travel, ed. 1642, sect. 10. — F. Druide, a Druid. — L. pl. Druides; Cæsar, De Bello Gallico, vi. 13. Of Celtic origin. From OIrish druid, as in druid, dat. and acc. of drui, a magician, sorcerer; Irish draoi, druidh, an augur, magician; Gael. draoi, draoidh, druidh, a magician, sorcerer. Origin undetermined; the attempt to connect it with Irish and Gael. darach, darag, an oak, is by no means convincing. ¶ The AS. drý, a magician, is from British (W. dryw).

DRUM, a cylindrical musical instrument. (Du.) 'The drummes crie dub-a-dub;' Gascoigne, Flowers; ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 83, l. 26. First found, spelt drome, in 1541 (N.E.D.). An imperfect adaptation of MDu. tromme, Du. trom, trommel, a drum; trommelen, to drum. Cf. G. trommel, a drum; esp. Strassburg drum, a drum (C. Schmidt); Dan. drum, a booming sound. Der. drum, verb; drum-head, drum-major, drum-stick. See also Thrum (2).

DRUMBLE, to be sluggish. (Scand.) Shak. has: 'look how you drumble;' Merry Wives, iii. 3. 156. — Norw. drumla, to be half asleep; allied to drumba, drumma, to straggle, lag behind (as cattle); see Ross. Cf. Swed. drumla, to be clumsy, drummel, a blockhead (Öman).

DRUNKARD, one addicted to drinking. (E.; with F. suffix.) In the A. V., Joel, i. 5; and in the Bible of 1551. Palgrave has dronkarde. Formed from the base drunk- of the pp. drunken, with the F. suffix -ard, of OHG. origin, used with an intensive force. This suffix is of the same origin with E. hard; Brachet, Etym. French Dict. introd. § 196. ¶ The ME. word is dronkelew.

DRUNKEN, DRUNK, inebriated. (E.) ME. dronken, drunken; Chaucer, C. T. 1264. AS. druncen, pp. of drincan, to drink, but often used as an adj.; Grein, i. 207; see Drink. Der. drunken-ness.

DRUPE, a fleshy fruit containing a stone. (F.—L.—Gk.) A botanical term. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — F. drupe, a drupe, stone-fruit. — L. drūpa, an over-ripe, wrinkled olive (Pliny). — Gk. δρῦππα, an over-ripe olive; perhaps a contraction from, or allied to, Gk. δρῦππηής, ripened on the tree; [a word which is frequently varied to δρῦππηής, i.e. falling from the tree.] — Gk. δρῦς, a tree; and πέσσειν, to cook, ripen. See Tree and Cook. Der. drup-ac-e-ous, with suffix = L. -āceus.

DRY, free from moisture. (E.) ME. drūye, OEng. Hom. i. 87, l. 12; dryye, dryye, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 385 and 412; dreye, Chaucer, C. T. 8775 (E 899). AS. drýge, drýge, Grein, i. 207. Cf. Du. droog, dry; G. trocken, dry. Also Icel. draugr, a dry log. All from a Teut. root **dreug-*, to be dry; cf. AS. drēog-an, to last, endure; &c. The orig. sense may have been lasting, hard. See Drudge. Der. dry, verb; -ly, -ness; -goods, -nurse; -rot, -salter; see also drought.

DRYAD, a nymph of the woods. (L.—Gk.) Milton has Dryad, P. L. ix. 387; and the pl. Dryades, Comus, 964. — L. Dryad-, stem of Dryas, a Dryad. — Gk. δρυάδ-; stem of δρῦάς, a nymph of the woods. — Gk. δρῦς, a tree; cognate with E. Tree, q. v.

DUAL, consisting of two. (L.) 'This dualité . . . is founden in euery creature;' T. Usk, Test of Love, b. ii. ch. 13. l. 30. — L. duālis, dual. — L. duo, two; See Two. Der. dual-ism, dual-i-ty.

DUAN, a canto. (Gaelic.) In Macpherson's Ossian; and used by Burns (The Vision). — Gael. duan, a song, canto; OIrish dūan; see Macbain.

DUB, to confer knighthood by a stroke on the shoulder. (E.) ME. dubben, Havelok, 2042. AS. dubban; 'dubbade his sunu . . . to ridere,' dubbed his son knight; AS. Chron. an. 1086. β. A much-disputed word; but, apparently, of Teut. origin; if not native, it may be of Scand. origin. The statement (in N. E. D.) that there is no such Germanic verb as dubban, is hardly borne out. The Icel. dubba may be foreign; but the Teut. forms dib, dab, dob, dub, expressive of light movements, cannot all be unoriginal. Cf. Norw. dabba, to tap with the foot (Ross); E. dab; Swed. dial. dabb, a viscous clot; E. a dab; Norw. dibba, to nod the head, to trip lightly (Ross); Swed. dial. dibb, to touch lightly; Dan. dobbe, a float (because it bobs); Swed. dial. dobb, dubb, a float, also (as a verb) to duck or bob under; Norw. dubba, to nod (Aasen); EFries. dubbe, a blow, dubben, to strike; Low G. dobber, a buoy; G. tupfen, to dab. The OF. adober, to dub, is therefore correctly derived by Diez from a Teut. base dub-, to dab or tap. Cf. E. dub-a-dub (see Drum); evidently of imitative origin.

DUBIOUS, doubtful. (L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 104; and in Hall, Edw. IV, an. 9. § 14. — L. dubiōsus, doubtful. — L. dubium, doubt; neut. of dubius, doubtful, moving in two directions; formed from L. duo, two. See Two. Der. dubious-ly, -ness.

DUCAL, belonging to a duke. (F.—L.) F. ducal, Cot. — Late L. ducālis, adj. — L. duc-, stem of dux, a leader; see Duke.

DUCAT, a coin. (F.—Ital.—L.) 'As fine as ducat in Venice;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 258. — OF. ducat, 'the coyne termed a duckat, worth vi s. viii d.;' Cot. — Ital. ducato, a ducat; a duchy. — Late L. ducātus, a duchy. β. So called because first coined in the duchy of Apulia (about A.D. 1140); and, after 1284, they bore the legend 'sit tibi, Christe, datus, quem tu regis, iste ducatus.' See Duchy.

DUCHESS, the wife of a duke. (F.—L.) Chaucer wrote The Book of the Duchesse. — OF. duchesse, fem. of duc, a duke; with suffix -esse = L. -issa = Gk. -ισσα. See Duke.

DUCHY, a dukedom. (F.—L.) ME. duche; P. Plowman, C. iv. 245. — F. duché. — Late L. ducātus; formed with suffix -ātus from duc-, stem of dux, a leader. See Duke.

DUCK (1), a bird. (E.) ME. doke, duke; P. Plowman, B. v. 75; xvii. 62. The word duk-e means 'diver'; the final -e = AS. m. -a, f. -e, a suffix denoting the agent, as in hunt-a, a hunter. AS. dūce, a duck; see Cart. Saxon., ed. Birch, ii. 162, l. 3. See below. + Dan. duk-and, a diver (bird); from duk- = dukke, to dive, and and (= G. ente), a duck; Swed. dyk-fågel, a diver (bird). See Duck (2). The short u is due to the following k, as in suck. Der. duck-ling, with double dimin. suffix -l- and -ing; cf. gos-ling.

DUCK (2), to dive, bob the head down. (E.) ME. duken, douken; the pres. pt. doukand, diving, occurs in The Wars of Alexander, l. 4090; and the pp. duked in the Cursor Mundi, 23203. It answers to an AS. **dūcan* (pt. t. **dēac*, pp. **docen*), not found. + Du. duiken, to stoop, dive; Dan. dukke, to duck, plunge; Swed. dyka, to dive; G. tauchen, to dive. Der. duck (1).

DUCK (3), a pet, darling. (E.) 'O dainty duck!' Mids. N. D. v. 286. Apparently, a transferred sense of Duck (1).

DUCK (4), light canvas. (Du.) Strutt, Manners and Customs, iii. 129, quotes 'lampas douck' in a description of a tourney, as early as 2 Henry VIII (1510). — Du. doek, linen cloth, towel, canvas. + Dan. dug, cloth; Swed. duk; Icel. dúkr, cloth, table-cloth, towel; G. tuch, cloth; OHG. tuoh, MHG. tuoch.

DUCT, a conduit-pipe. (L.) Still spelt ductus in 1715. 'Ductus, a leading, guiding; a conduit-pipe;' Kersey's Dict. — L. ductus, a leading; cf. ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead. See Duke.

DUCTILE, malleable. (F.—L.) 'Soft dispositions, which ductile be;' Donne, To the Countess of Huntingdon, l. 27; and see Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 845. — F. ductile, 'easie to be hammered;' Cot. — L. ductilis, easily led; cf. ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead. See Duke. Der. ductil-i-ty.

DUDE, a fop, exquisite. (Low G.) Modern. — G. dude, a foolish fellow (Grimm); shortened from Low G. duden-dop, duden-kop, a lazy fellow; EFries. dud-kop, a drowsy fellow. Cf. EFries. dudden, to be drowsy; see Dawdle.

DUDGEON (1), resentment. (F.?) 'When civil dudgeon first grew high;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 1. The form endugine is also found; see additions to Nares. Origin wholly unknown; though the form would seem to be French.

DUDGEON (2), the haft of a dagger. (Unknown.) 'And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood;' Macb. ii. 1. 46. See Clark and Wright, notes to Macbeth; Furness, notes to ditto. The evidence goes to show that some daggers were called dudgeon-hafted, which Gifford explains by saying that 'the wood was gouged out in crooked channels, like what is now, and perhaps was then, called snail-creeping;' note on Jonson's Works, v. 221. The root of the box-tree was also called dudgeon, apparently because it was curiously marked; 'the root [of box] . . . is dudgin and ful of work;' Holland's Pliny, b. xvi. c. 16; where the context shows the sense to be 'crisp'd damask-wise' or 'full of waving.' β. In the earliest examples, the sense seems to be 'boxwood;' at any rate, it is a material used by a cutler. A cutler speaks of 'yuery [ivory], dogoon, horn, mapyll, and the toel that belongeth to my craft;' Arnold's Chron. (1502, repr. 1811), p. 245. In the York Wills, iii. 96 (Surtees Soc.), we find, in 1439, 'j dagger, cum manubrio de dogoon.' 'Ronnyn, as dojoun or masere;' Prompt. Parv. p. 436. The earliest is AF. digeon, in 1380; see Riley, Memorials of London, p. 439.

DUDS, rags, poor clothes. (Scand.) ME. 'dudde, clothe, amphibilus;' Prompt. Parv. Related to Icel. dūði, swaddling clothes; dūða, to swathe, wrap up. Cf. Dowdy. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 78.

Cotgrave has: 'Dupe, f. a whoop, or hooper; a bird that hath on her head a great crest, or tuft of feathers, and loves ordure so well, that she nestles in it.' This word dupe is probably (like hoopoe) onomatopoeitic, and imitative of the bird's cry. ¶ Cf. Bret. houperik, (1) a hoopoe, (2) a dupe. We have similar ideas in gull, goose, and booby. The simple verb battailen or battalen occurs early; the pp. battailyt or battalit, i. e. embattled, occurs in Barbour’s Bruce, ii. 221, iv. 134; and the sb. battalyng, an embattlement, in the same, iv. 136. 2. Obviously, these words were accommodated to the spelling of ME. battale (better bataille), a battle; and from the first a confusion with battle has been common.

EMBATTLE (2), to range in order of battle. (F.—L.). In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 2. 14. ME. embataillen; Gower, C. A. i. 221; bk. ii. 1837.—OF. embataillier, the same (Godefroy). A coined word, from F. prefix em (< L. im, in); and OF. bataille, a battle, a battalion; see Battle.

AS. ymbren, pl. ymbrenu; as in þā fēower ymbrenu, the four ember-days; Wulfstan, ed. Napier, p. 136, l. 17. 1. ‘On þære pentecostenes wucan tō þām ymbrene’ = in Pentecost week according to the ymbren, i. e. in due course; rubric to Luke, viii. 40. ‘On ælcum ymbren-fæstene,’ = at every ember-fast; Ælfric’s Homilies, ii. 608. 2. The orig. form of the word is ymb-ryne, and the orig. sense ‘a running round,’ ‘circuit,’ or ‘course;’ compounded of AS. ymb, ymbe, around, cognate with G. um-, L. ambi-; and ryne, a running, from rinnan, to run. See Ambi-, prefix, and Run. ¶ This is the best explanation; for numerous examples and references, see ymbren in AS. Dictionary. It rightly distinguishes between MSwed. ymbredagar, borrowed from AS. and obsolete, and the Swed. tampredagar, corrupted (like G. quaterember) from L. quattuor tempora, the four seasons.

Dict. Spelt embesile in The Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 39; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 319. The earliest spellings are enbesel, imbesel, and the sense is not only to filch, but also to destroy fraudulently, as in 'the sayd boke . . was enbesyld, or loste;' Fabyan, ed. Ellis, p. 293. — AF. enbeseiller, to make away with; Royal Wills, p. 155 (A. D. 1397); (also AF. beseler, besiler; Notes on E. See emblaer in Godefroy, and emblaer in Littré. All these forms are from Late L. imblādāre, to sow with corn. — L. im-, for in, in, prefix; and Late L. blādum (F. blé), contraction of ablādum = L. ablātum, i. e. Pilgrim, 131, 132; from MDu. vadden, to fade (from F.).] — OF. fader, vb.; from fade, adj. 'unsavoury, tasteless; weak, faint, witlesse;' Cot. — L. uapidus, acc. of uapidus, vapid, tasteless. The change to initial f was prob. due to confusion with L. fatuus, stupid. Körting, § 3660. Der. fade-less.

FADGE, to turn out, succeed. (Scand.) 'How will this fadge?' Tw. Nt. ii. 2. 34. It occurs in other obsolete senses, such as to fit, to suit, agree; and, transitively, to fit up or piece together. It appears to be a palatalised form due to Norw. faga, to suit, accommodate oneself to, or Norw. fagga, to cobble up, to wrap up carelessly (Ross). From Teut. base fag-, whence also OSax. fōgian, AS. fēgan, to join, suit, G. fügen, to join, Du. voegen (see Kluge and Franck); and cf. OHG. gi-fag, content; Goth. fulla-fah-jan, to satisfy. The same base occurs in Fair (1).

FÆCES, dregs. (L.) 'I sent you of his fæces there calcined;' Ben Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1. — L. fæcēs, dregs, pl. of fæx (stem fæc-); of unknown origin. Der. fec-ul-ent, in Kersey's Dict., from L. faculentus.

FAG, to drudge. (E.) 'Fag, to fail, grow weary, faint;' also, 'to beat, to bang;' Ash's Dict. 1775. 'To fag, deficere;' Levins, 10. 21, ed. 1570. Of uncertain origin; but prob. a corruption of flag, to droop; see Todd. See Flag (1). See below.

FAG-END, a remnant. (E.) 'Fag, the fringe at the end of a piece of cloth, the fringe at the end of a rope;' Ash's Dict. ed. 1775. 'Fagg (a sea-term), the fringed end of a rope;' id. 'The fag-end of the world;' Massinger, Virgin Martyr, Act ii. sc. 3. Origin unknown. Perhaps for flag-end = loose end; see Flag (1), and Fag. Thus, in the Boke of St. Albans (1486), fol. Bj, we find: 'The federis at the wynges next the body be calde the flagg or the fagg federis.'

FAGGOT, FAGOT, a bundle of sticks. (F. — Scand.) In Shak. Tit. And. iii. 1. 69; 1 Hen. VI, v. 4. 56. ME. fagot, Cursor Mundi, l. 3164. — F. fagot; 'a fagot, a bundle of sticks;' Cot. Cf. Ital. fagotto, fangotto, a bundle of sticks; which was prob. borrowed from French; the F. fagot being found before 1300. Formed, with dimin. suffix -ot, from Norw. fagg, a bundle (Ross). The Norw. fagg also means a short, clumsy person; and prov. E. faggot is likewise used as a depreciatory term, often applied to children and women; whilst we also find prov. E. fadge with the precise sense of 'bundle.' The Norw. fagga, vb., means to bundle together or to cobble up, and is prob. related to faga, to suit. See Fadge. β. I feel inclined to connect Ital. fangotto (if distinct from fagotto) with Icel. fang, an armful, as in skidar-fang, viðar-fang, an armful of fuel; fanga-hnappur, a bundle of hay, an armful; from Icel. fā, to fetch, get, grasp; see Fang. ¶ The W. ffagot is borrowed from E. Der. faggot, verb.

FAHRENHEIT, the name of a kind of thermometer. (G.) From the name of a Prussian physicist (1686–1736), inventor of the mercurial thermometer. (N. E. D.)

FAIENCE, crockery, pottery. (F. — Ital.) The N. E. D. quotes 'Fayances or earthen-ware' from a book of rates dated 1714. — F. faience, crockery; so named from Faenza in Italy (near Ravenna), where much pottery was once made.

FAIL, to fall short, be baffled. (F. — L.) In early use. ME. failen, Layamon, 2938 (later text). — F. faillir, 'to fail;' Cot. — Folk L. **fallire*, for L. fallere, to beguile, elude; pass. falli, to err, be baffled. Perhaps allied to AS. feallan, to fall. See Fall. Brugmann, i. § 757. Der. fail, sb., Wint. Tale, ii. 3. 170; fail-ing; fail-ure (substituted for an earlier failer, from AF. failier, F. faillir, infin. mood used substantively), used by Burke, On the Sublime, pt. iv. § 24 (R.); and see fallible, fallacy, false, fault, faucet.

feginn, glad. Cf. AS. gefeon (pt. t. gefeah), to rejoice. From Teut. base **feh-*, as in AS. gefeon (for **ge-feh-an*); cf. Goth. fah-ēths, joy. Der. faun, verb; q. v.

FAINT, weak, feeble. (F. — L.) In early use. ME. feint, feynt; King Alisaunder, 612; Gower, C. A. ii. 5; bk. iv. 118. — OF. feint, pp. of feindre, to feign; so that the orig. sense is 'feigned;' see Bartsch, Chrest. Française, p. 515, l. 3. See Feign. ¶ Cf. ME. feintise, signifying (1) faintness, (2) cowardice; Glos. to Will. of Palerne; P. Plowman, B. v. 5. Der. faint-ly, Shak. Oth. iv. 1. 113; faint-ness, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 428; faint-hearted, 3 Hen. VI, i. 1. 183; faint, verb, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 2. 35.

FAIR (1), pleasing, beautiful. (E.) ME. fair, fayr, Chaucer, prol. 575 (A 573); fajer, Ormulum, 6392. AS. fæger, Grein, i. 269. + Icel. fagr; Dan. Swed. fager; Goth. fagrs, fit; used to tr. Gk. εὐθερον in Lu. xiv. 35; OHG. fagar. Teut. type **fagroz*. Cf. Gk. πῆγρός, firm, strong. Brugmann, vol. i. §§ 200, 701. And see Fadge. Der. fair-ly, fair-ness.

FAIR (2), a festival, holiday, market. (F. — L.) ME. feire, fayre; Chaucer, C. T. 5803 (D 221). — OF. feire; F. foire. — L. fēria, a holiday; in Late L. a fair; commoner in the pl. fēriæ. Fēria is for **fēs-iæ*, feast-days; from the same root as Feast and Festal. Brugmann, vol. ii. § 66.

FAIRY, a supernatural being. (F. — L.) ME. faerie, fairye, fairy, 'enchantment;' P. Plowman, B. prol. 6; Chaucer, C. T. 6441 (D 859). [The modern use of the word is improper; the right word for the elf being fay. The mistake was made long ago; and fully established before Shakespeare's time.] — OF. faerie, enchantment. — OF. fae (F. fee), a fairy; see Fay. Der. faury, adj.

FAITH, belief. (F. — L.) The final -th is analogous to the E. suffix -th, as seen in truth, ruth, wealth, health, and other similar sbs. β. ME. feip, feith, feyth; as well as fey. The earliest example of the spelling feith is in Genesis and Exodus, l. 2187 (ab. 1250). We find fayth in the Cursor Mundi, l. 3405; and fai occurs in the same poem, ll. 2354 (riming with delay), and l. 7562 (riming with nai). — OF. fei, feid, feit. — L. fidem, acc. of fides, faith. + Gk. πίστις, faith; πείθειν, to persuade; πίστωθα, I trust. (✓ BHEIDH.) Allied to Bide. Brugmann, i. § 202. ¶ The assumption that OF. feit, feid was at first pronounced as feip, feid, is needless. The AF. fei appears in Phil. de Thaun, L. des Creatures, l. 244 (before 1150); I believe the -th to be a purely E. addition. Der. faith-ful, -ful-ly, -ful-ness; -less, -less-ly, -less-ness. From the same root are fid-el-i-ty, af-fi-ance, con-fide, de-fy, dis-fid-ent, per-fid-y.

FALCHION, a bent sword. (F. — Ital. — Late L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 618. ME. fauchon, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 169; directly from F. fauchon, 'a faulchion;' Cot. — Ital. falcione, a scimeter. — Late L. falcionem, acc. of falcio, a sickle-shaped sword. — L. falci-, decl. stem of falx, a sickle. Allied to flec-tere, to bend; Brugmann, i. § 529 (2). ¶ The word was really taken from the F. fauchon, and afterwards altered to falchion by the influence of the Ital. form. Der. from L. falx are also falc-on, de-falc-ate.

FALCON, a bird of prey. (F. — L.) ME. faukon, King Alisaunder, 567; faucon, Chaucer, C. T. 10725 (F 411). — AF. faucon, Stat. of the Realm, i. 293 (1340); OF. faucon, MF. faulcon, 'a faulcon;' Cot. — Late L. falcōnem, acc. of falcio, a falcon; so called from the hooked shape of the claws. 'Falcones dicuntur, quorum digiti pollices in pedibus intro sunt curuati;' Festus, p. 88; qu. in White and Riddle. That is, falco is derived from falc-, stem of falx, a sickle; see above. The l in falcon was inserted in the 15th century. Der. falcon-er; falcon-ry, from MF. faulconnerie 'a faulconry;' Cot.

FALDSTOOL, a folding-stool. (F. — Low L. — OHG.) Now applied to a low desk at which the litany is said; but formerly to a folding-stool or portable seat. 'Faldstool, a stool placed at the S. side of the altar, at which the kings of England kneel at their coronation;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. He also has: 'Faldistory, the episcopal seat within the chancel.' [Not E., but borrowed from F.] — OF. faldestoel (Godefroy). — Low L. faldistolium, also faldistorium (corruptly), a faldstool. — OHG. faldan (G. fallen), to fold; and stool (G. stuhl), a chair, seat, throne. See Fold and Stool. ¶ We also find AS. faldestol, A. S. Leechdoms, vol. i. p. lxii. l. 3. But had the word been native, it would have been fold-stool. See Fauteuil.

FALL, to drop down. (E.) ME. fallen, Chaucer, C. T. 2664 (A 2662). OMerc. fallan, Matt. x. 29; the AS. form being feallan. + Du. vallen; Icel. falla; Dan. falde (with excrement d); Swed. falla; G. fallen. Teut. type **fallan-*. Cf. Lith. pūlti, to fall; and perhaps L. fallere, to deceive, falli, to err. Brugmann, i. § 757. Der. fall, sb.; be-fall, vb.; and see fell (1), fail.

FILAMENT, a slender thread. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave, to translate MF. filamens, 'filaments;' Cot.—F. filament (Hatzfeld). —Late L. filamentum, a thread; formed (with suffix -mentum) from Late L. filāre, to wind thread. —L. filum, a thread; see File (1).

FILBERT, the fruit of the hazel. (F.—OHG.) Formerly spelt philibert or philiberd. 'The Philibert that loves the vale;' Peacham's Emblems, ed. 1612 (R.). Gower has: 'That Phillis in the same throwe Was shape into a nutte-tre . . . And, after Phillis, philiberd This tre was cleped in the yerd;' C. A. ii. 30. [This is an allusion to the story of Phyllis and Demophon in Ovid, and of course does not account for the word, as it takes no notice of the last syllable.] β. From AF. philbert, a filbert; of which the pl. philbers occurs in Britton, ed. Nichols, i. 371, note 5. Short for noix de philbert, as the name is still noix de filbert in Normandy (Moisy). From the proper name Philibert. Cotgrave has: 'Philibert, a proper name for a man; and particularly the name of a certain Bourgonian [Burgundian] saint; whereof chaine de S. Philibert, a kind of counterfeit chain.' Perhaps the nut was also named after St. Philibert, whose name also thus appears in another connexion. 'Noix de Filebert, aveline; saint F., qui avait beaucoup enrichi l'abbaye de Jumièges [near Rouen], y avait sans doute introduit de meilleures noisettes;' Duméril; Dict. du Patois Normand. St. Philibert's day is Aug. 22 (Old Style), just the nutting season. The name is Frankish. —OHG. filu-bert, i. e. very bright; from filu (G. viel), much, very; and bert = berht, bright, cognate with E. bright. See Hist. of Christian Names, by Miss Yonge, ii. 231; where, however, fili- is equated to wille (will) by a mistake. ¶ Similarly, a filbert is called in German Lambertsnuß as if for Lambert's nut (St. Lambert's day is Sept. 17); but (according to Weigand) the real orig. sense of Lambertsnuß was 'nut from Lombardy.'

FILCH, to steal, pilfer. (Scand.?) [Rob. of Brunne has filchid; tr. of Langtoft, p. 282; but this seems to be a different word.] Filch first appears in 1581, as a slang term; and its origin is quite uncertain. Perhaps allied to ME. felen, to conceal; Icel. fela, to hide; whence Icel. fylgsni, fylksni, a hiding-place. Cf. Goth. fulhsni, secrecy.

FIVES, a disease of horses, the strangles. (F.—Span.—Arab.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 54. For vives, which is short for avives. —F. avives, 'vives'; Hamilton. —Span. avivas, abivas, adivas, 'the vives'; Pineda. —Arab. ad-dhiba, the same disease. —Arab. al, the; dhib, a wolf (which strangles). See Devic (in Litré).

FIX, to bind, fasten. (F.—L.) Originally a pp. as in Chaucer, C. T. 16247 (G 779). [We also find a ME. verb fichen, to fix, pierce; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, ll. 2098, 4239; formed directly from OF. ficher; from Late L. **figicāre* (not found), a secondary form from L. figere.] —OF. fixe, 'fixed, settled'; Cot. —L. fixus, pp. of figere, to fix. Der. fix-ed, -ed-ly, -ed-ness; -at-ion, Gower, C. A. ii. 86; bk. iv. 2520; -i-ty; -ture, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 67; -ure, Troil. i. 3. 101.

FIZZ, to make a hissing sound. (Scand.) We also find fizzle, a frequentative form, in Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, v. 3. 2. Cf. ME. fyse, a blowing, Voc. 679. 23; allied to fist, Prompt. Parv. p. 163. —Icel. fisa, Dan. fise, with the same sense as L. pedere. An imitative word. See Fitchew.

FLABBERGAST, to frighten, greatly astonish. (E.) First in 1772. A dialect word, and more correctly flapper-gast; see E. D. D. The etymology is obvious; viz. to gast (frighten away) with a flapper, i.e. a clapper for frightening birds (E. D. D.). Cf. gaste crowen, to frighten crows; P. Plowman, A. vii. 129; and 'flappe, instrument to smyte wythe flyys' [flies]; Prompt. Parv. See Aghast and Flap.

FLABBY, soft and yielding, hanging loose. (E.) Not in early use. 'Flabbiness, limberness, softness and moistness'; Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. 'His flabby flanks'; Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georg. iii. 780. A variant of flappy, i.e. inclined to flap about. Cf. Low G. flabbe, a hanging lip, flabbsig, flabby (Danneil); MDu. flabbe, a contemptuous name for the tongue, Oudemans; Swed. dial. fläbb, the hanging underlip of animals, flabb, an animal's snout, Rietz; Dan. flab, the chops. See Flap.

FLAG (1), to droop, grow weary. (E.) 'Slow and flagging wings'; 2 Hen. VI. iv. 1. 5. Partly of F. origin (see at end); but also partly imitative, and weakened from the form flack. 'Flack, to hang loosely, to flap'; E. D. D. It is the same word as ME. flakken, to move to and fro, to palpitate, as in Gower, C. A. iii. 315; bk. viii. 1196: 'her herte [began] to flacke and bete.' [Hence the frequentative verb flacker, 'to flutter, quiver'; E. D. D.] From the E. base flak, to waver; appearing in AS. flacor, flying, roving (Grein). + Dan. flagre, to flicker, flutter; cf. Icel. flakka, to rove about; flaka, to flap (said of garments); Swed. flacksa, to flutter; MDu. flakkeren, to waver; G. flackern, to flutter. ¶ The special sense is from OF. flaquir, to flag, MF. flaque, 'weake, feeble, faint, flaggy'; Cot.; from L. flaccus, limp. Cf. also MDu. flaggēren, 'to flagge, or grow wearie'; Hexham. See Flabby, Flap, Flicker. Der. flagg-y, flagg-i-ness.

FLAG (2), an ensign. (E.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 207. —The E. flag occurs in Palsgrave (1530), and is the oldest Teut. form. From ME. flakken, to waver, flutter; see Flag (1). Cf. Dan. flag; Norw. and Swed. flagg, a flag; Du. vlag; G. flagge.

FLAG (3), a water-plant, reed. (E.) Wyclif has flaggy, filled with flags or reeds; Exod. ii. 3. The same word as flag (2); and named from its waving in the wind; see Flag (1). Cf. prov. E. flag, a long, narrow leaf; Dan. flæg, an iris.

FLAG (4), FLAGSTONE, a paving-stone. (Scand.) Properly 'a thin slice' of stone; applied formerly also to a slice of turf. 'Flags, the surface of the earth, which they pare off to burn: Norfolk'; Ray's Gloss. of Southern Words, ed. 1691. ME. flagge; 'flagge of the erthe'; Prompt. Parv. —Icel. flaga, a flag or slab of stone; flag, the spot where a turf has been cut out. [These would regularly give an E. form flaw, as in North E. (see E. D. D.), but flag is an E. Anglian form, found also in South E.] Cf. Swed. dial. flagtorf, a cut turf (Möller). —Icel. flak-, appearing in flakna, to flake off, to split; flagna, to flake off. Flag (4) is closely allied to Flake, q. v.

FLAGELLATE, to scourge. (L.) Flagellation is in Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. —L. flagellātus, pp. of flagellāre, to scourge. —L. flagellum, a scourge; dimin. of flagrum, a scourge. Der. flagellat-ion; flagell-ant, from L. flagellanti, base of pres. pt. of flagellāre; also flail, q. v.; and perhaps flog.

FLAGEOLET, a sort of flute. (F.—Prov.) Spelt flagellate in Hudibras, c. ii. pt. ii. l. 610. —MF. flageolet, 'a pipe, whistle, flute'; Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of OF. flageol, with the same sense; id. —OProv. flaujols, a flageolet; as if from a Late L. type **flaviolus*. Of unknown origin; the fl- may have been suggested by L. flāre, to blow.

FLAGITIOUS, very wicked. (L.) 'Many flagitious actes'; Hall's Chron. Rich. III, an. 3. § 39. ME. flagiciouse; Wyclif has 'most flagiciouse' (Vulg. flagitiosissime); 2 Macc. vii. 34. —L. flagitiōsus, shameful. —L. flagitium, a disgraceful act; cf. flāgitāre, to act with violence, implore earnestly. Spelt flagan in Caxton's ed. of Malory, Morte Arthure, b. vii. c. 14; leaf 117, back, l. 7. —OF. flacon, older form flascon, 'a great leathern bottle'; Cot. —Late L. flascōnem, acc. of flasco, a large flask; augmentative of flascus, flasca, a flask. See Flask.

FLAKE, a strip, thin slice or piece. (Scand.) 'As flakes fallen in grete snowes;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 102. Of Scand. origin; MSwed. flake, a slice; the Norwegian dialects have preserved the word as flak, a slice, a piece torn off, an ice-floe (Aasen); cf. Icel. flakna, also flagna, to flake off, split; Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach, flake; flagna, to peel off. Also Swed. dial. flag, flak, a thin slice; Dan. snee-flage, a snow-flake. Perhaps allied to flay. See Flay, Flaw, Floe, and Flag (4). Der. flak-y, flak-i-ness.

FLAMBEAU, a torch. (F.—L.) In Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 135; and in Dryden, tr. of Juv. Sat. iii. 450. — F. flambeau, 'a linke, or torch of wax;' Cot. This answers to an *OF. flambel, dimin. of OF. flambe, a flame (below).

FLAME, a blaze, warmth. (F.—L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 15983 (G. 515). OF. flame, flamme; whence a secondary form flambe. — L. flamma, a flame. L. flamma = **flag-ma*, from the base flag-, to burn; see Flagrant. Der. flame, verb, flam-ing; flambeau, q.v.; flamingo, q.v. Also flamboyant, characterised by waving lines; from F. flamboyant, pres. pt. of flamboyer, to flame; from OF. flambe, flame.

FLAMEN, a priest of ancient Rome. (L.) In Mandeville's Travels, p. 141; spelt flamyn. — L. flāmen, a priest. ¶ Perhaps for **flag-men* = he who burns the sacrifice; see Flame.

FLAMINGO, a bright red bird. (Span.—Prov.—L.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 403; spelt flamengo, Hakluyt, iii. 520. — Span. flamenco, a flamingo. — Prov. flamenc, flamen, a flamingo; so called from the colour. — Prov. flama, a flame. — L. flamma; see Flame. ¶ The Prov. suffix -enc is an adaptation of the Teut. suffix -ing. The F. form for 'flamingo' is flamant, lit. 'flaming;' but it seems to have been confused with F. Flamand, a Fleming. Palsgrave has: 'Flemmyng, Flammant.'

FLANGE, a projecting rim. (F.—OHG.) A dialectal form connected with prov. E. flange, to project out; E. D. D. Again, flange is a corruption of prov. E. flanch, a projection; cf. flanch in heraldry, an ordinary on each side (or flank) of the shield. — OF. flanche (AF. flanke), fem. sb. allied to F. flanc, side. Cf. MF. flanchere, 'a flanker, side-peece;' Cot. See below.

FLANK, the side. (F.—OHG.) ME. flank, King Alisaunder, 3745. — OF. (and F.) flanc, side. Connected by Diez with L. flaccus, soft; which is unsatisfactory. Now thought to be of OHG. origin. — OHG. hlanca, MHG. lanke, the loin, side (with change of initial hl to fl); cf. MDu. 'de Lancke, the flanks;' Hexham. Allied to AS. hlanc, slender. See Lank. Der. flank, verb; flange, q.v.

FLANNEL, a woollen substance. (Welsh.) 'The Welsh flannel;' Merry Wives, v. 5. 172. Prov. E. flannen, a more correct form; cf. 'apparelled in flanen,' Sidney's Arcadia, II. ii. 1 (ab. 1586). Prob. from W. gwlanen, an article made with wool, from gwlan, wool. The W. gwlan is cognate with E. wool; Rhys, Lect. on W. Philology, p. 10. See Wool.

FLAP, to strike or beat with the wings, &c. (E.) ME. flappen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 187. Also flap, sb., a blow, stroke, id. B. xiii. 67. EFries. flappen. Not found in AS. + Du. flappen, to flap; flap, a stroke, blow, box on the ear. β. A variant of flack, to beat, ME. flakken, to palpitate; see Flag (1); of imitative origin. Der. flap, sb.; flap-er.

FLARE, to burn brightly, blaze, glare. (Scand.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 6. 62. 'His flaring beams;' Milton, Il Pens. 132. Apparently of Scand. origin. Cf. Norweg. flara, to blaze, flame, adorn with tinsel; flar, tinsel, show; Aasen. Ross shows that it stands for fladra, to blaze, to display, to make a show; allied to Swed. fladdra, to flutter, also to blaze, flame (Widegren); Low G. fladdern, G. flattern, to flutter, flicker. From a Teut. base flad, to waver; cf. the base flak, noticed under Flag (1).

FLASH, to blaze suddenly. (E.) In Shak. Timon, ii. 1. 32; used of suddenly breaking out, K. Lear, i. 3. 4. ME. flaschen, to dash; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 63, ii. 369. Cf. Swed. dial. flasa, to burn violently, blaze. And cf. Icel. flasa, to rush; flas, a headlong rushing. Der. flash, sb.; flash-y, flash-i-ly, flash-i-ness. ¶ We find: 'Heo ulaskeð water þeron' = she dashes or casts water on it; Ancren Riwe, p. 314; which seems to be allied.

FLASK, a kind of bottle. (Late L.) In Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 132. AS. flasce, whence by metathesis, the form flacse, written flaxe. [This change of sc to cs or x is common in AS.; as in āscian = ācsian = āxian; mod. E. to ask and prov. E. to ax.] See flasce in Voc. 240. 3; flaxe, id. 109. 5. 'Twā fatu, on folcisc flaxan gehātene' = two vessels, vulgarly called flasks; Gregory's Dialogues, ii. 18 (Bosworth); where the L. text has 'quæ vulgo flascones vocantur.' We find also Icel. flaska

(an old word); Dan. flaske; Swed. flaska; G. flasche; OHG. flasca. β. But it is improbable that the word is really Teutonic; it seems to be rather from Late L. flasca, a flask, of uncertain origin; the deriv. flasco occurs in Gregory (as above), ab. A.D. 600. Perhaps from L. uasculum, a little vessel (Diez). We also find W. fflasg, Gael. flasg (from E.). Der. flagon, q.v.

FLAT, level, smooth. (Scand.) ME. flat; 'sche fel . . . flat to the grounde;' Will. of Palerne, 4414. — Icel. flatr, flat; Swed. flat; Dan. flad. ¶ The connexion with Gk. πλατύς, broad, has not been made out; Curtius, i. 346. And it must be rejected; see Flawn. Der. flat, sb.; -ly, -ness; flatt-en (coined by analogy with length-en, &c.); flatt-ish, flatt-wise.

FLATTER, to coax, soothe. (F.—Scand.; or E.) ME. flateren (with one t); P. Plowman, B. xx. 109. Perhaps from (or at any rate influenced by) OF. flater (later flatter), 'to flatter, sooth, smooth; . . . also to claw, stroke, clap gently;' Cot. But this would have only given a ME. form **flat-en*; so that the -er is an E. addition. β. The OF. flat-er is from Icel. flat-r, flat; with the notion of making smooth. γ. But the base flat may have been of imitative origin, like flak, whence MSwed. fleckra, to flatter (Ihre); Swed. dial. fleka, to caress (Rietz). Cf. ME. flakken, to move to and fro, and G. flach, flat; and note ME. flakeren as a variant of flateren, Ancren Riwe, p. 222. ¶ The sb. flattery is from OF. flaterie, F. flatterie; which, indeed, may have suggested the suffix -er.

FLATULENT, full of wind, windy. (F.—L.) In Minshew; also in Holland's Plutarch, p. 577 (R.). — MF. flatulent, 'flatulent, windy;' Cot. — Late L. flātulentus; not in Ducange, but regularly formed from the base flātu-, by analogy with temulentus, drunken. — L. flātus, a blowing, a breath. — L. flātus, pp. of flāre, to blow; cognate with E. blow. See Blow (1). Der. flatulent-ly, flatulence, flatulenc-y.

FLAUNT, to display ostentatiously. (Scand.) Shak. has flaunts, s. pl. fine clothes, Winter's Ta. iv. 4. 23. 'Yeeld me thy flanting [showy] hood;' Turberville, To his Friend that refused him, st. 10. 'With . . . fethers flaunt-a-flaunt,' i.e. showily displayed; Gascoigne, Steel Glass, 1163. Prov. E. flant, flaunt, to gad about, esp. in finery; flanty or flaunty, giddy, flighty. Of Scand. origin. Cf. Norw. flanta, to gad about; from flana, to climb, to rove about, to gad about; flana, a gad-about, flanen, adj. obtrusive, forward (of children). So also Jutland flanted, adj., as en flanted Tös, a gad-about (flaunting) hussy, from a verb flante (Kok); Jutland flante, a giddy girl, flantet, foolish (Feilberg); Dan. flane, a giddy girl, flane, to flirt. Also Swed. dial. flana, to be unsteady, to be extravagantly hilarious, flana, a flirt; whence also Swed. dial. flanka, to be unsteady, waver, hang and wave about, ramble; and the adj. and adv. flankt, loosely, flutteringly (which = Gascoigne's flaunt-a-flaunt). Perhaps also allied to Bavarian flandern, to flutter, flaunt, Schmeller, i. 792. Cf. Gk. πλάων, a wandering; see Planet.

FLAVOUR, the taste, scent. (F.—L.) Milton, Sams. Agon., 544, says of wine 'the flavor or the smell, Or taste that cheers the heart of Gods or men,' &c. He here seems to distinguish flavour from both smell and taste; but he may have meant the former. ME. flauor (= flavor); Early E. Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 87. But Wyntown has fleuoure, scent, Chron. ix. 26. 107; Henryson has flewer, Moral Fables, p. 66 (N.E.D.). The word must have been modified by the influence of savour. — OF. flēur, fleur, flaur, smell. Cf. Ital. fiatore, a bad odour; answering to a Late L. acc. type **flātor-em*. — L. flātus, pp. of flāre, to blow. (Körting, § 3825.)

FLAW, a crack, break. (Scand.) ME. flawe, used in the sense of 'flake'; 'flawes of fyre' = flakes of fire; Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2556. — Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach; also, a flake; Norw. flaga, a piece flaked off; a place (on a tree-stem) without bark (Ross); see Flake. Cf. prov. E. flaw, a flake (as of snow); also a gust of wind, like Du. vlaag. Der. flaw-less.

FLAWN, a kind of custard. (F.—OHG.) 'Fill ouen full of flawnes;' Tusser, Husb. § 90. st. 5. ME. flawn; 'Pastees and flaunes,' Havelok, 644. — F. flan, OF. flaon. Cotgrave gives flans, 'flawns, custards, egg-pies; also, round plates of metall;' and flaons, 'round plates of metall.' [Cf. Span. flaon, flawn, plate of metal; Ital. fiadone, 'a kind of flawne,' Florio; Low L. flado, flato, a flawn.] — OHG. flado, a broad flat cake, flawn; MHG. vlade; G. fladen, a kind of pan-cake. β. Cf. G. kuh-fladen, a piece of cow-dung; MDu. vlade, 'a flawne,' Hexham; ME. flathe, a flawn, Wright, Vocab. i. 127; a flat fish (Prompt. Parv.). Further allied to Gk. πλατύς, broad, πλάθων, a dish in which cakes were baked, a platter. (See Scheler, Diez, Kluge.)

FLAX, the name of a plant. (E.) ME. flax, Chaucer, C. T. 678 (A 676). AS. fleax; Ælfric's Gloss., ed. Somner, Vestium Nomina, i. 10. + Du. vlas; G. flachs; OHG. vlahs, flahs. β. Cf. Goth. flahta, a plaiting of the hair; it is probable that flax is from the same root; see Curtius, i. 203. If so, the root is PLEK, to weave; whence also

Gk. πλέειν, to weave, plait. Der. flax-en, where -en is an AS. adj. suffix.

FLAY, to strip off skin, slice off. (E.) Formerly spelt flea; see Rich. and Halliwell. ME. flean, pt. t. flow, pp. flain; Havelok, 2502. AS. flēan (in a gloss); Bosworth. + Icel. flā, pt. t. flō, pp. fleginn. Teut. type **flah-an-*, pt. t. **flōh*, to strike. Cognate with Lith. plak-ù, I strike; cf. L. plāga, a stroke. See Plague. Brugmann, i. § 569.

FLEA, a small insect. (E.) ME. flee, pl. fleen; Chaucer, C. T. 16966 (H 17). AS. flēah (O. E. Texts); spelt fleo, as a gloss to pulex, in Ælf. Gloss.; Voc. 121. 38. + Du. vloo; Icel. flō; G. floh. Teut. base **flauh-* (or rather **plauh-*); allied to the verb to flee. See Flee.

FLEAM, a kind of lancet. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt fleame in Cotgrave, s. v. deschaussoir. — OF. flieme, F. flamme, 'a flame'; Hamilton and Legros. [Cotgrave gives only the dimin. flammette, 'a kind of lancet.'] — Late L. flētoma, a lancet (Voc. 400. 11); shortened from flevotomum, phlebotomum, a lancet. — Gk. φλεβοτόμον, a lancet. — Gk. φλεβό-, decl. stem of φλέψ, a vein; and τομ-, 2nd grade of τέμνειν, to cut. See Phlebotomy. ¶ This pardonable abbreviation of too long a word is countenanced by Du. vlijm, G. fliete, and MHG. fliedeme, all various corruptions of the same surgical word.

FLECK, a spot. (Scand.) ME. has only the verb flekken, to spot; Chaucer, C. T. 16033 (G 565). — Icel. flekkr, a spot; flekka, to stain, spot; Swed. fläck, a spot; fläcka, to spot; Du. vlek, sb.; vlekken, vb.; G. fleck, sb.; flecken, vb., to spot, stain, put on a patch.

FLECTION, a bending; see Flexible.

FLEDGE, to acquire (or be furnished with) feathers. (E.) Shak. has fledged, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 32. This pp. fledged is a substitution for an older adj. fledge, meaning 'ready to fly.' ME. flegge, 'ready to fly' (Stratmann), a Kentish form of ME. flygge, ready to fly; spelt fligge in the Prompt. Parv. p. 167 (and note). AS. **flycge*, found in comp. unflycge; as in 'inplumes, unflycge;' O. E. Glosses (Napier), 28. 13. + Du. vlug, MDu. vlugge; Low G. flugge; OHG. flucchi. Teut. type **flugjoz*, adj.; from **flug-*, weak grade of **fleugan-*, to fly. Cf. also Icel. fleygr, able to fly; Icel. fleygja, to make to fly, causal of flýga, to fly. See Fly (1). Der. fledge-ling.

FLEE, to escape, run away. (E.) Not the same word as fly. ME. fleen, pt. t. fleh, fleik; Cursor Mundi, 2818. [We also find the pt. t. fledde, and pp. fled; Chaucer, C. T. 2932; Havelok, 1431.] AS. flēon (pt. t. flēah). + OSax. flōhan, G. fliehen; Icel. flýja (pt. t. flō, also flýði); Swed. fly (pt. t. flydde); Goth. thliuhan. Teut. type **thliuhan-* (pt. t. thlah); so that fl was orig. thl, and there was at first no connexion with the verb to fly, which was at an early date confused with it. ¶ The pt. t. fled, ME. fledde, was due to Icel. flýði, Swed. flydde (above).

FLEECE, a sheep's coat of wool. (E.) Here -ce stands for s, as often. ME. flees, Prompt. Parv. p. 166; Wyclif, Gen. xxx. 35. AS. flēos (Bosw.); earlier flūs (O. E. Texts); also (with mutation) flȳs, Ps. lxxi. 6 (ed. Spelman). + Du. vlies; G. fließ; MHG. vliis; cf. also G. flaus, a woollen coat, MHG. vliis, a sheep-skin. Teut. types **fleusi-*, **fleuso-*, **flūso-*; possibly allied to L. plū-ma. See Plume. (See Kluge.)

FLEER, to mock, to grin. (Scand.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 109; Jul. Cæs. i. 3. 117. ME. flieren, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1088, 2778. Of Scand. origin; cf. Norw. flira, to titter, giggle, laugh at nothing; Aasen. Dan. dial. flire, to jeer. Also Norw. flisa, to titter; Swed. flissa, to titter. β. Another variation of this verb is Swed. flina, to titter; Swed. dial. flina, to make a wry face (Rietz).

FLEET (1), a number of ships. (E.) ME. flete, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1189; fleote, Layamon, 2155. AS. flēot, a ship, Grein, i. 304. [It seems afterwards to have been used collectively.] — AS. flēotan, to 'fleet', i.e. to float, swim. + OSax. flīotan; Du. vlieten, to flow; G. fliessen, to flow; Icel. fljóta, Swed. flyta, Dan. flyde. Teut. type **fleutan-*, pt. t. **flaut*, pp. **flutanoz*; Idg. base **pleud-*, as in Lith. plūdis, a float of a fishing-net. (✓ PLEU.) Cf. Gk. πλέειν, to sail; Skt. plu, pru, to swim, float, flow. β. Hence also the more usual AS. form flota, a ship, Grein, i. 305 (= ME. fote, Havelok, 738); which is cognate with Icel. floti, (1) a raft, (2) a fleet. See Floater (4).

FLEET (2), a creek, bay. (E.) In the place-names North-fleet, Fleet Street, &c. Fleet Street was so named from the Fleet ditch; and fleet was a name given to any shallow creek, or stream or channel of water; see E. D. D. ME. fleet, Prompt. Parv. p. 166. AS. flēot, a bay of the sea, as in sēs flēot = bay of the sea; tr. of Bede, i. 34. Cf. also AS. flēote, a stream. The orig. sense was 'that which flows'; and the deriv. is from the old verb fleet, to float, flow; see above. Cf. OFries. flēt, Icel. fljót, a stream; Du. vliet, a rill, a brook.

FLEET (3), swift. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 261. It does not seem to appear in ME., but the AS. form is flēotig (= fleet-y), Grein, i. 304. It is a derivative from the old verb to fleet, and = fleeting; see Fleet (4). Cf. Icel. fljotr, fleet, swift; from the verb fljóta; see Fleet (1). Der. fleet-ly, -ness.

FLEET (4), to move swiftly. (E.) 'As seasons fleet;' 2 Hen. VI. ii. 4. 4. From Fleet (3). Der. fleet-ing, fleet-ing-ly. ¶ Not the same word as flit, though allied to it; see Flit.

FLESH, the soft muscular covering of the bones of animals. (E.) ME. flesch, fleisch; Chaucer, C. T. 147. AS. flæsc, Grein, i. 302. + Du. vleesch; G. fleisch, flesh; and (with short vowel) Icel. flesk, in the special sense of 'pork,' or 'bacon'; Dan. flesk, pork, bacon; Swed. fläsk, pork, bacon. Teut. type **flaiskos*, neut. Der. flesh, verb, K. John, v. 1. 71; flesh-ed, -less, -ly, -y, -i-ly, -i-ness.

FLETCHER, an arrow-maker. (F.—C.) ME. flecchour, Destruction of Troy, l. 1593. — OF. flechier, a fletcher. — OF. fleche (F. flèche), an arrow. — OIrish flesc, a rod, a wand. Stokes-Fick, p. 287.

FLEUR-DE-LIS, flower of the lily. (F.—L.) ME. floure-de-lice, Minot's Poems (Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 131, l. 25). — OF. fleur de lis; whence also E. flower-de-luce, Winter's Ta. iv. 4. 127. Here lis is from the old pl. form, because there were three flowers-de-lis on the royal shield; the OF. nom. sing. was lil. — L. lilium, a lily. See Flower and Lily.

FLEXIBLE, easily bent. (F.—L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 50; and Hoccleve, De Regim. Princ., 3358. — F. flexible, 'flexible'; Cot. — L. flexibilis, easily bent. — L. flexus, pp. of flectere, to bend. Der. flexible-ness, flexibl-y, flexibil-i-ty; from L. flexus are also flex-ion (wrongly flect-ion), -or, -ile, -ure; from the same source, circum-flex, de-flect, in-flex-ion (wrongly in-flect-ion), re-flect.

FLICKER, to flutter, waver. (E.) ME. flickeren, to flutter; Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1221. AS. flicerian, Deut. xxxii. 11; also flicorian, Ælfric, Hom. ii. 156. β. Here flicerian is a frequentative form from the base flic-, an attenuated form of the base FLAK, to beat; the sense is 'to beat slightly and often.' γ. This is made clear by the occurrence of the stronger form flaker in the ME. flakeren, Ancren Riwle, p. 222; of which the later form flacker occurs in Coverdale's Bible, Ezek. x. 19: 'And the cherubins flackered with their wings.' See Flag (1). ¶ The Icel. flökra, to flutter = E. flacker; Du. flikkeren, to sparkle = E. flicker. Cf. Prov. Du. flik, a light blow (Molema).

FLIGHT (1), the act of flying. (E.) ME. flight, Chaucer, C. T. 190. AS. flyht, Grein, i. 306; allied to AS. flyg-e, flight. Teut. type **fluhtiz*; from **flug-*, weak grade of **fleugan-*, to fly. Der. flight-y, -i-ness. See Fly (1).

FLIGHT (2), the act of fleeing away. (E.) ME. fliht, Layamon, l. 21405; Ormulum, l. 19683. + OSax. and OHG. flucht. Teut. type **thluhtiz*; from **thluh-*, weak grade of **thliuhan-*, to flee; see Flee.

FLIMSY, weak, slight. (Scand.?) 'Flimsy, limber, slight;' Phillips, ed. 1706. In Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 94. Lit. 'like the skim on milk.' Formed by adding -y to Dan. dial. flims, flæms, skim on milk; cf. EFries. flēm, flīm, a film. These forms are allied to E. film. If the ending was -sy (as from EFries. flīm), cf. tip-sy, bump-sy, also limp-sy, given by Webster as the synonym of flimsy in the U. S. A. Der. flimsi-ness.

FLINCH, to shrink back. (F.—Teut.?) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 190. — OF. flenchir, flainchir, to turn aside, bend (given by Godefroy, s. v. flechir). Perhaps from OHG. **hlencan*, answering to G. lenken, to bend, turn. This G. lenken is from OHG. hlanca, the side (Kluge); see Flank. ¶ The initial fl would then be accounted for, as in flank, from OHG. hl. See Link (1).

FLING, to throw, dart, scatter about. (Scand.) The pt. t. flang = flung, occurs in King Alisaunder, 2749. Cf. Swed. flänga, to use violent action, to romp; flänga med hästarna, to ride horses too hard; fläng, sb., violent exercise, i fläng, at full speed (cf. E. to take one's fling); Swed. dial. flänga, to strip bark from trees, to hack, strike (Rietz); MSwed. flenga, to strike, beat with rods (Ihre); Dan. flenge, to slash; i fleng, indiscriminately. β. These forms presuppose a strong verb **fling-a*, which the E. form perhaps represents.

FLINT, a hard stone. (E.) ME. flint, Havelok, 2667. AS. flint, a rock; Numb. xx. 10. + Dan. flint; Swed. flinta. + Gk. πλίνθος, a brick; Brugmann, i. §§ 575, 704. Der. flint-y, -i-ness.

FLIP (1), to fillip, jerk lightly. (Scand.) First in 1616; see further under Flippant.

FLIP (2), a mixture of beer and spirit with sugar, heated. (E.) 'Eat biscuit, and drink flip;' Congreve, Love for Love, A. iii. sc. 4 (Ben). From flip (above), to beat up. Moisy (Dict. of Norman patois) spells it philippe, as if from F. Philippe; but it is borrowed from E.

FLIPPANT, pert, saucy. (Scand.) 'A most flippant tongue she had;' Chapman, All Fools, Act v. sc. 1, prose speech by Gos-tanzo. The suffix -ant is due to the Northern E. pres. pt. in -and; hence flippant = flippand, i. e. prattling, babbling. Or else -ant imitates the F. pres. part., as in ramp-ant. From the base flip-, weak grade allied to Icel. fleipa, to babble, prattle; Swed. dial. flepa, to talk nonsense (Rietz). Cf. flip, the lip. Der. flippant-ness, flippant-y.

FLIRT, to trifle in wooing. (E.) In old authors 'to mock,' or 'scorn,' and often spelt flurt; see The Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, i. 2. 18 (and the note). The oldest sense of flirt was 'to jerk lightly away'; see N. E. D. and E. D. D. We find EFries. flirr, flirt, a light blow; flirtje, a giddy girl. Der. flirt, sb.; flirt-ation.

FLIT, to remove from place to place. (Scand.) ME. flitten; P. Plowman, B. xi. 62; also flutten, Layamon, 30503. — Swed. flytta, to flit, remove; Dan. flytte. From **flut-*, weak grade of Icel. fljōta (Swed. flyta, Dan. flyde), to float, flow. See Fleet (1). Cf. Icel. flyta, to hasten; flytja, to carry, cause to flit; flytjask (reflexive), to flit, remove. Der. flitt-ing, Ps. lvi. 8 (P.-Bk. version). Also flitter-mouse, i. e. a bat; see Flutter.

FLITCH, a side of bacon. (E.) ME. flicche, P. Plowman, B. ix. 169. AS. flisce, str. n., to translate L. succidia; Bosworth. The pl. fliccū occurs in Diplom. Angl., ed. Thorpe, p. 158; gen. flicca, id. p. 460. Teut. type **flik-jom*, n. + Icel. flikki, a flitch; flik, a flap, tatter. β. The Swed. flik is a lappet, a lobe; Dan. flik is a patch; cf. G. flück (in comp.), a patch. Perhaps allied to Fleck.

FLOAT, to swim on a liquid surface. (E.) ME. floten, flotian, flotten; [very rare, the usual form being fleten (AS. flēotan)] ; see Fleet (4). 'A whal . . . by that bot flotte' = a whale floated by the boat; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 248. AS. flotian; as in 'ān scip flotigende, a ship floating; A. S. Chron., an. 1031. Cf. AS. flota, a ship (Grein); allied words to which are Icel. floti, a float, raft, whence flotna, to float to the top; Swed. flotta, a fleet, a raft, flotta, to cause to float; Du. vlot, a raft, whence vloten, to cause to float, to float; G. floss, a raft, whence flößen, to float; see also Fleet (1). Teut. type **flutojan-*, to float; from **flut-*, weak grade of **floutan-*, to float, whence mod. E. fleet. See Fleet (1). ¶ Partly confused with F. floter (OF. floter), to float; from the same Teut. base **flut-*. See Flotilla. Der. float, sb.; float-er, -age, -ing, -at-ion; also flotsam, q. v.

Der. flock-y; and (from L. flocus), flock-ose, flock-ul-ent; also flock-bed, &c. Brugmann, i. § 585 (1). ¶ Not to be confused with flake, with which it is unconnected.

FLOE, a flake of ice. (Dan.) Modern; common in accounts of Arctic Voyages. — Dan. flage, in the comp. iis-flage, an ice-flake; Norw. isflak, isfløk, lit. 'ice-flake.' See Flake. ¶ Strictly, Dan. flage gives E. flaw; the sound was not exactly caught.

FLOG, to beat, whip. (L.?) A late word. It occurs in Cowper's Tirocinium, l. 329; and in Swift (Todd); also in Coles' Dict., ed. 1671, which gives: 'Flog (cant word), to whip.' Perhaps a school-boy's abbreviation from the L. flagellāre, to whip, once a familiar word. See Flagellate. ¶ This is paralleled by the use of Low G. flogger, as a common variant of flegel, a flail; where flegel represents L. flagellum.

FLOOD, a great flow of water. (E.) ME. flod, P. Plowman, B. vi. 326. AS. flōd, Grein, i. 305. + Du. vloed; Icel. flōd; Swed. and Dan. flod; Goth. flōdus, a river; G. fluth. See Plain. Der. floor-ing.

D.). — OF. florin, 'a florin'; Cot. — Ital. florino (= florino), a florin; so named because it bore a lily, the symbol of Florence. — Ital. fiore, a flower; with allusion to L. Flōrentia (Florence). — L. acc. flōr-em, a flower, flōr-ēre, to flourish. FLOSS, a downy substance, untwisted silken filaments. (F.—L.) What is now called floss-silk was formerly called slieve-silk; see Nares. The term floss-silk is modern (first in 1759). Cot. gives 'soye flosche, slieve silk;' whence the E. word seems to have been borrowed. [Cf. Ital. floscio, flaccid, soft, weak; whence floscia seta, 'raveling or slieve silke;' Florio. The Venetian form, according to Wedgwood, is flossa, which exactly agrees with the E. floss.] An adj. formation from OF. flocher, to form into 'flocks' or tufts. — OF. floc; see Flock (2).

From the Teut. base **flut-*; see Float, Fleet (1). (Körting, § 3861.)

FLOTSAM, goods lost in shipwreck, and left floating on the waves. (AF.—E.) and L.) In Blackstone's Comment. b. i. c. 8; spelt flotson in Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. Cotgrave has: 'a flo, floating; choses a flo, flotsens or flotsams.' This is an Old Law F. term, appearing as AF. floteson, Black Book of the Admiralty, ed. Twiss, i. 82; which answers to OF. flotaison, a flooding of fields, F. flott-aison, flotation, formed with suffix -eson, -aison (L. -ationem) from the verb flotter, to float; which is of Teut. origin (above).

FLUKE (2), part of an anchor. (E.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. 'Flouke of an anchor'; Phillips (1658). Also spelt flook. Apparently the same word as fluke (1), applied to the flattened end of the hook. Apparently distinct from G. flunke, the fluke of an anchor; and from Icel. akkerisflenn, Dan. ankerflig, Swed. ankarsfly, G. ankerflügel, the fluke of an anchor.

FLUMMERY, a light kind of food. (W.) 'Flummery, a wholesome jelly made of oatmeal'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - W. llymrū, llymrūwd, flummery, sour oatmeal boiled and jellied. - W. llymus, sharp, tart.

FLUNKY, a footman. (F.-OHG.) In Burns, Twa Dogs, l. 54. Its origin is clearly due to F. flanquer, to flank; it seems to be put for flanker. 'Flanquer, to flanke, run along by the side of; to defend, support, or fence; to be at ones elbow for a help at need'; Cot. See Flank.

FLUOR, FLUOR-SPAR, a mineral. (L.) Latinised from G. fluss, a flowing, fusion; a term applied by G. Agricola (in 1546) to minerals used as fluxes in smelting. The L. fluor (lit. a flowing) was formerly in use as a term in alchemy and chemistry. 'Fluor, a flux, course, or stream'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - L. fluere, to flow; see Fluent.

FLURRY, agitation, hurry. (E.) 'The boat was overset by a sudden flurry [gust of wind] from the North'; Swift, Voyage to Lilliput; c. i. And see Rich. Dict. From flurr, to whirl (N. E. D.); prov. E. flurr, to ruffle, to disarrange (E. D. D.); of imitative origin. Cf. FLUSH (1), to flow swiftly. (E.) 'The swift recourse of flushing blood'; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 6. 29. G. Douglas uses flusch to signify 'a pool'; prol. for flū, l. 54; spelt fluss in Barbour, Bruce, xiii. 20. From flush, vb., to fly up quickly, like a startled bird; cf. flusk, to make a whirring or fluttering sound (E. D. D.). Apparently of imitative origin; cf. EFries. flōstern, flustern, to fly with a noise, to rustle (as wind); murmur (as water). [MDu. fluyssen, 'to gush or break out violently' (Hexham), Dan. dial. fluse, to gush out, are from OF. fluir (pres. pt. fluissant), to flow; and may be independent.]

FLUSH (2), to blush, to redden. (E.) Perhaps the same word as the above, but much influenced by Flash, and perhaps by Blush. Shak. has flushing = redness; Hamlet, i. 2. 155. ME. flushen, to redden, as in 'flush for anger'; Rich. the Redeless, ed. Skeat, ii. 166. Cf. Swed. dial. flossa, to burn furiously, to blaze (Rietz); Norw. dial. flosa, passion, vehemence, eagerness; Aasen. And see Fluster. Der. flush, sb., flush-ing.

FLUSH (3), level, even. (E.) Perhaps from Flush (1); as an adj., it meant 'in full flow'; Dampier has: 'Small brooks . . . that run flush into the sea'; Voy. i. 393. Hence, even or level, like a stream when running full.

FLUSH (4), a term at cards; a hand containing a prescribed number of cards of the same suit is 'a flush.' (F.-L.) 'He facithe owtie at a flushe, with shewe, take all!' Skelton, Speke Parrot, l. 424. - F. flux, 'a flowing, . . . a flux, . . . also, a flush at cardes'; Cot. - L. fluxus, a flowing; from the pp. stem of fluere, to flow; see Fluent and Flux.

Prov. flauto, flauto, flaguto, a flute (Mistral). Prob. of imitative origin; the fl- may have been suggested by L. flāre, to blow, cognate with E. blow; see Blow (1). Der. flageolet, q. v.; and see flout.

FLUTTER, to flap the wings. (E.) ME. floteren, to fluctuate, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, l. 156; Wyclif, Isa. xxix. 9. AS. flotorian, to float about (fluctibus ferri); Gloss. to Prudentius, p. 150, l. 1; cf. AS. flot, the sea; flota, a ship. - AS. flot- (Teut. **flut-*), weak grade of flēotan, to float. β. Thus the orig. sense was to fluctuate, hover on the waves; and the form of the word is due to Float. The word was afterwards applied to other vibratory motions, esp. to the flapping of wings; cf. Low G. fluttern, flutter, flit about, Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 431, which is closely allied to flit; cf. prov. E. flittermouse, a bat; also EFries. fluttern, to fly noisily; Norw. flotra, to swim with difficulty (Ross). See Flit, which is likewise a derivative of Teut. **flut-*.

L. plūma, a feather, wing; see Plume. ¶ Not allied to flee, but early confused with it. Der. fly, sb. = AS. flēoge (Grein); fly-boat, fly-blown, -catcher, -fishing, -leaf, -wheel, -ing-fish, fly-er; also flight = AS. flyht, Grein, i. 306; flight-y, -il-y, -i-ness.

FŒTUS; see Fetus.

FOG, a thick mist. (Scand.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. i. 90. See N. E. D., where it is shown that the earliest sense of fog was coarse or rank winter-grass; see Early Eng. Allit. It also meant 'moss'; and hence the adj. foggy, covered with rank grass, mossy, marshy, damp; whence fog, sb., damp, as a back-formation. — Norw. fogg, long-strawed, weak, scattered grass in a moist hollow (Ross). It occurs as AS. fald, in John, x. 1; but this is contracted from an older form falod, also spelt falud, faləd (Sweet, O. E. Texts). Allied words are Du. vaalt, Low G. faal, EFries. folt, fold, a dung-pit; Dan. fold, a sheep-pen (Franck).

T. 4087 (A 4089). Prob. of Fries. origin, as the sb. answers to EFries. fone, fōn, a maid, girl, weakling, simpleton (Koolman). This form has a large number of variants, as OFries. famne, fomme, fonne, fone, and appears to be ultimately the same word as AS. fæmne, Icel. feima, a virgin. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 102. Der. fond-ly, -ness; also fond-le, frequentative verb, to caress, used by Swift and Gay; also fond-ling (with dimin. suffix -ling = -l + -ing), Shak. ME. forcastel, Destruction of Troy, 5657. A short deck placed in front of a ship, above the upper deck, is so called, because it used in former times to be much elevated, for the accommodation of archers and crossbowmen. From fore and castle; see Castle. ¶ Commonly corrupted to foe'sle or foxle.

FORECLOSE, to preclude, exclude. (F.—L.) 'Foreclosed, barred, shut out, or excluded for ever;' Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691; with a reference to 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39. FOREJUDGE (1), to judge beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Levins. [The pp. foriugyd, cited from Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1400 (R.), has the prefix for-, not fore-.] Spenser has forejudgement; Muiopotmos, l. 320. From fore and judge. Der. forejudge-ment.

FOREJUDGE (2), FORJUDGE, to deprive a man of a thing by the judgment of a court. (F.—L.) Still in use as a law-term, and quite distinct from the hybrid word fore-judge, to judge beforehand. Better spelt forjude; indeed, Blount's Nomolexicon (1691) has: 'forjudged the court, is when an officer of any court is banished or expelled the same.' The pp. foriugit is in the Kingis Quair, l. 21. — F. forjurer, 'to judge or condemn wrongfully, also to disinherit, deprive, dispossess of'; Cotgrave. — OF. for-, prefix, out, outside; and juger, to judge. FOREMOST, most in front. (E.) A double superlative, due to the fact that the old form was misunderstood. α. From the base fore was formed the AS. superlative adj. forma, in the sense of first; a word in common use; see Grein, i. 329. Hence the ME. forme, also meaning 'first'; see Stratmann. β. A double superlative formest was hence formed, as a by-form to the regular fyrmost; cf. 'þat fyrmoste bebod,' the first commandment; Matt. xxii. 38. This became the ME. formest, both adj. and adv.; as in Will. of Palerne, 939. See examples in Stratmann. γ. Lastly, this was corrupted to foremost, by misdividing the word as for-mest instead of form-est. Spenser has formost, F. Q. v. 7. 35. See FORMER. ¶ The Mæso-Gothic also has frumists, a double superlative; the single superlative being fruma, cognate with Gk. πρῶτος, πρόμος, first, from πρό, before. Brugmann, i. § 518 (1).

ME. forest, King Alisaunder, 3581. — OF. forest, 'a forest'; Cot. — Late L. foresta, a wood; forestis, an open space of ground over which rights of the chase were reserved. Medieval writers oppose the forestis or open wood to the walled-in wood or parcus (park). FORFEIT, a thing forfeited or lost by misdeed. (F.—L.) Properly a pp. as in 'So that your lif be noght forset,' Gower, C. A. i. 194; bk. ii. 1039. Hence ME. verb forfeten, P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 25; and the ME. sb. forfeture, forsfaiture, Gower, C. A. ii. 153; bk. v. 780. — OF. forfait, forfet, forsfail, a crime punishable by fine, a fine (Supp. to Godefroy; cf. AF. forfeit, Laws of Will. See FOR- (2) and FENCE. ¶ The spelling forefend is bad.

FORGE, a smith's workshop. (F.—L.) In Gower, C. A. i. 78; bk. i. 1087; hence ME. forgen, to forge, Chaucer, C. T. 11951 (C 17). — OF. forge, a forge; whence forgier, to forge. — Folk-L. **faurga* < **faurega* (Schwan); for L. fabrica, a workshop, also a fabric. Cf. Der. forgiv-ing, forgive-ness.

FORGO, FOREGO, to give up. (E.) The spelling forego is as absurd as it is general; it is due to confusion with foregone, in the sense of 'gone before,' from a verb forego of which the infinitive is little used. ME. forgon, Chaucer, C. T. 8047 (E 171). AS. forgān, to pass over; 'he forgæð þæs huses duru' = he will pass over the door of the house; Exod. xii. 23. — AS. for-, prefix; and gān, to go. See FOR- (2) and LOSE. Der. forlorn hope, in North's Plutarch, p. 309 (R.), or p. 372, ed. 1631, a vanguard; a military phrase borrowed from MDu. de verloren hoop = the forlorn hope (of an army); Kilian. More, Works, p. 125 f; -al-ly, -al-ism, -al-ist, -al-i-ty; -at-ion, -at-ive, cf. L. formātus, pp. of formāre, to form; form-er, sb.; form-ul-a, from L. formula, dimin. of forma; -ul-ar-y. Also con-form, de-form, in-form, per-form, re-form, trans-form, uni-form, &c. ¶ Form, a bench, is the same word. See F forme in Cotgrave.

FORMER, more in front, past. (E.) First in latest text of AS. Gospels, Matt. xxi. 36 (ab. 1160). In Shak. Jul. Cæs. v. 1. 80. Spenser has formerly, F. Q. ii. 12. 67. a. The word is really of secondary formation, and due to the mistake of supposing the ME. formest (now foremost) to be a single superlative instead of a double one; see this explained under FOREMOST. β. Just as ME. form-est was formed from AS. forma by adding -est to the base form-, so form-er was made by adding -er to the same base; hence form-er is a comparative made from the old superlative for-m-a. Cf. L. prī-m-us, first. γ. We may therefore resolve for-m-er into for- (= fore), -m-, superlative suffix, and -er, comparative suffix. Der. former-ly.

FORMIC, pertaining to ants. (L.) First in 1671; chiefly used of 'formic acid.' Short for **formic-ic*. — L. formica, an ant. Brugmann, i. § 413 (8). Der. chloro-form.

FORMIDABLE, causing fear. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 649. Fisher has formydale; Works (E. E. T. S.); Ps. 38, p. 53, l. 27. — F. formidable, 'fearful'; Cot. — L. formidābilis, terrible. — L. formidāre, to dread; formido, fear. Der. formidabl-y, formidable-ness.

FORMULA, a prescribed form. (L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — L. formula, dimin. of forma, a form; see FORM. Der. formula-te, -ar-y.

FORNIFICATE, to commit lewdness. (L.) The E. verb fornicate is of late use, appearing in the Works of Bp. Hall (R.); and first in 1552. It was certainly developed from the sbs. fornication and fornicator, both in early use. Chaucer has fornicatioun, C. T. 6886 (D 1302); and fornicatour is in P. Plowman, C. iii. 191 (footnote). These are, respectively, OF. fornication and fornicateur; Cot. — L. fornicātus, pp. of fornicāre, to seek a brothel. — L. fornic-, base of fornix, (1) a vault, (2) a brothel. Perhaps allied to FURNACE; cf. OL. fornus, L. furnus, an oven (of vaulted shape). Der. fornicat-ion, fornicat-or, explained above.

FORSAKE, to give up, neglect. (E.) ME. forsaken, Chaucer, C. T. 14247 (B 3431). AS. forsacan, Ælfred's tr. of Orosius, i. 12. sect. 3. The orig. sense seems to be 'to contend strongly against,' to 'oppose.' — AS. for-, intensive prefix; and sacan, to contend, Exod. ii. 13. β. This verb sacan is a strong verb, cognate with Goth. sakan, to strive, dispute; and is represented in E. by the derived sb. sake. Cf. Dan. forsage, to forsake; Swed. försaka; Du. verzaken. See FOR- (2) and SAKE.

FORSOOTH, in truth, verily. (E.) ME. for sothe = for the truth, verily; P. Plowman, B. iv. 2. — AS. for, for; and sōðe, dat. of sōð, truth. See SOOTH.

FORSWEAR, to deny on oath, esp. falsely. (E.) ME. forsweren, Prompt. Parv. p. 173; earlier forswerien, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 13, l. 11. AS. forswerian; Grein, i. 332. — AS. for-, prefix; and swerian, to swear. See FOR- (2) and SWEAR.

FORT, a stronghold. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, i. 4. 28. — OF. fort, 'a fort, hold'; Cot. — Late L. fortis (domus), strong (house). — L. fortis, strong. See FORCE. Der. fort-al-ice, q. v.; fort-i-fy, q. v.; fort-i-tude, q. v.; fort-r-ess, q. v. From L. fortis we have also Ital. forte, loud (in music), with its superl. fortissimo.

FORTALICE, a small outwork of a fort. (Late L. — L.) Rare; see Jamieson's Scottish Dict. Cf. OF. fortesce, a fortress; Span. fortaleza. — Late L. fortalitia, fortalitium. See FORTRESS.

FORTIFY, to make strong. (F.—L.) In Shak. K. John, iii. 4. 10. — OF. fortifier, 'to fortify, strengthen'; Cot. — Late L. fortificāre. — L. forti-, decl. stem of fortis, strong; and fic-, from facere, to make. See FOR, FORCE. Der. fortifi-er; fortific-at-ion, from Late L. pp. fortificatus.

FORTITUDE, strength. (F.—L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 154.

— F. fortitude (Littre). — L. fortitudo, strength; see 'spiritus fortitudinis' in P. Plowman, B. xix. 284. — L. fortis, strong. See FORT.

Shrew, v. 1. 96. Also forth-with, in a poem of the 15th century called Chaucer's Dream, l. 1109, substituted for earlier forth mid = 'forth along with,' O. E. Hom. i. 117, l. 18; cf. also ME. forthwithall, Gower, C. A. iii. 262; bk. vii. 5064.

FORTNIGHT, a period of two weeks. (E.) ME. fourtenight, (trisyllable), Chaucer, C. T. 931 (A 929). Written fourten niȝt, Rob. of Glouc. p. 533, l. 17; l. 11010. From ME. fourten = fourteen; and niȝt, old pl. = nights. The AS. form was feowertȳne niht; Laws of Ine, § 55. β. Similarly, we have sennight = seven night; the phr. seofon niht (= a week) occurs in Cædmon, ed. Grein, l. 1349. It was usual to reckon by nights and winters, not by days and years; see Tacitus, Germania, c. xi. Der. fortnight-ly.

FORTRESS, a small fort. (F.—L.) ME. fortresse, King Alisaunder, 2668. — OF. forteresce, a variant of fortesce, a small fort (Burguy). — Late L. fortalitia, a small fort. — Late L. fortis, sc. domus, a fort. — L. fortis, strong; see FORT, FORTALICE.

MS.; see the footnote.] Englished, by change of -us to -ous (as in arduous, strenuous, &c.) from L. fortuitus, casual. — L. fortū-, related to forti-, decl. stem of fors, chance (below). Der. fortuitous-ly, -ness.

FORTUNE, chance, hap. (F.—L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 1254 (A 1252); Cursor Mundi, 23719. — F. fortune. — L. fortūna, — L. fortū-, allied to forti-, decl. stem of fors, chance, orig. 'that which is produced'; from for-, weak grade of fer-, as in Latin fer-re, to bear; cf. E. bear. — ✓ BHER, to bear; see BEAR. See Bréal. Der. fortun-ate, ME. fortunat, Chaucer, C. T. 14782 (B 3966), from L. pp. fortūnātus; -ate-ly, -ate-ness; fortunē-less, -hunter, -teller; from the same source, fortu-it-ous (above).

MS., where the other 5 MSS. have forthward. AS. foreweard, adj.; Grein, i. 322. — AS. fore, before; and -weard, suffix; see TOWARD. Der. forwards, ME. forwardes, Maundeville, p. 61, where -es is an adv. suffix, orig. the sign of the gen. case (cf. Du. voorwaarts, G. vorwärts); forward, verb, Shak. 1 Hen. IV, i. 1. 33; forward-ly; forward-ness, Cymb. iv. 2. 342.

to Putrid. Brugmann, i. § 113. Der. foul-ly, -ness, -mouth-ed; also foul, vb.; de-file, q.v.

FOUMART, a polecat. (E.) Lowland Sc. fowmart; Jamieson. ME. folmard, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 534; also fulmart, fulmard, as in Stratmann, s.v. ful=foul. From AS. fūl, foul, stinking; and AS. meard, a marten. Thus it means 'foul marten'; see Foul and Marten.

FOUND (1), to lay the foundation of. (F.—L.) ME. founden, Wyclif, Heb. i. 10; P. FOUNDER, to go to the bottom. (F.—L.) ME. foundren, said of a horse falling; 'and foundred as he leep'; Chaucer, C. T. 2689 (A 2687).—OF. fondrer, chiefly in the comp. afondrer (obsolete) and effondrer, to fall in (still in use), as well as in the sb. fondrière, a place to founder in, a slough, bog; see fond in Burguy, and fondrière in Hatzfeld. The sense seems to have been 'to sink in,' and the deriv. is from F. fond, the bottom of anything.—L. fundus, the bottom; see Found (1). ¶ The form of the OF. verb should rather have been fonder; the r is intercalated, as in chanvre=chanve, hemp, from L. cannabis; and may have been due to the influence of OF. fondre, to melt; see Found (2). We have similar instances in E. part-r-idge, t-r-easure, cart-r-idge, &c.

FOUNDLING, a deserted child. (E.) ME. fundeling, Will. of Palerne, 481; fundling, King Horn, 228.—AS. fund-, weak grade of findan, to find; and -ling=-l-ing, double dimin. suffix. + Du. vondeling; similarly formed. See Find.

FOUR, twice two. (E.) ME. fewer, fower, seour, four, Layamon, 25, 194, 1902, 2092, 25395. Chaucer adds a final e, and treats it as a pl. adj. 'With fourē white bolēs in the trays'; C. T. 2141 (A 2139). AS. fēower, Grein, i. 296. + OFries. flower, fiuwer, fior; Icel. fiörir; Dan. fire; Swed. fyra; Du. vier; Goth. fidwor; OHG. fior; G. vier. + W. pedwar; Gael. ceithir; OIrish ceithir; L. quatuor; Gk. τέτταρες, τέσσαρες; dial. misupes; Russ. chetvero; Lith. keturi; Pers. chehār; Skt. chatvāras. All from Teut. type **fugloz*, m.; certainly for **fugloz*, by dissimilation; the form fluglas, pl., occurs in Matt. xiii. 32 (Rushworth gloss); flugles, gen., in the Erfurt glossary, 1085; and cf. flugol, adj., flying. Thus it is from **flug-*, weak grade of Teut. **fleugan-*, to fly. See Fugleman and Fly. Brugmann, i. § 491. Der. fowl-er=ME. foulere, Wyclif, Prov. vi. 5; fowl-ing-piece.

FOX, a cunning quadruped. (E.) ME. fox, also (Southern ME.) vox; P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 44; Owl and Nightingale, 817. AS. fox; Grein, i. 334. + Du. vos; G. fuchs. Teut. type **fuhs*, masc. We also find Icel. fōa, Goth. fauhō, fem., a vixen; Teut. type **fuhā*. Both from a base **fuh-*. A suggested connexion with Skt. puchchha, 'tail,' is doubtful. Der. fox-hound, fox-y; also fox-glove, a flower=AS. foxes glōfa, Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 327 (cf. Norw. revhandske=foxglove, from rev, a fox, also Norw. revbjōlla (fox-bell), a foxglove; and prov. E. fox-fingers, a fox-glove). And see vix-en.

'Hoping . . . to give you a friendly foy,' Howell, Letters, vol. ii. let. 12 (1634).—MDu. foy (Du. fooi), [a] 'banquet given by one at his parting from his friends'; Hexham. Prob. from F. voie, a way, journey; from L. uia, a way; as suggested by Kilian. ¶ But Franck derives it from F. foi, from L. acc. fidem; because Late L. fidēs occurs with the sense of 'payment.'

FRACAS, an uproar. (F.—Ital.—L.) Not in Johnson; borrowed from mod. F. fracas, a crash, din.—F. fracasser, to shatter; borrowed from Ital. in 15th cent. (Hatzfeld).—Ital. fraccassare, to break in pieces; whence fracasso, a crash.—Ital. fra-, prefix, from fra, prep. amongst, short for L. infra, within; and cassare, to break. Imitated (or translated) from L. interrumpere, to break in amongst, destroy (Diez). The vb. cassare is from L. quassāre, to shatter, intensive of quātere, to shake. See Quash.

E. fratch, to squabble, quarrel, chide with another; see E. D. D. Cf. ME. fracchen, to creak as a cart; 'Frachyn, as newe cartys'; Prompt. Parv. p. 175. Of imitative origin. β. But it also occurs (in 1725) in the sense of 'refractory,' as if formed from fraction, in the (obsolete) sense of 'dissension'; see N. E. D. See Fraction (above).

FRAGILE, frail. (F.—L.) In Shak. Timon, v. i. 204.—F. fragile, 'fraile'; Cot.—L. fragilis, easily broken; from the base frag-, to break; see Fraction. Der. fragil-i-ty. Doublet, frail, q.v.

The older form is fleël, whence freël by dissimilation.—L. flagellum, a whip; but also a vine-shoot, whence baskets for grapes could conveniently be made. β. Verified by observing that both fleël and flagellum had the peculiar sense of a certain measure of wax; thus Godefroy has 'quatre fleaus de chandele de cire'; and Ducange, s.v. fleolum, has 'unum flagellum ceræ, quorum sex debent ponderare libram.' Cf. Gk. φραγέλλιον, for flagellum, in John ii. 15. (Athenæum, Mar. 9, 1901).

The AS. adj. fram, excellent, is cognate with Icel. framr, Du. vroom, G. fromm, good; see Kluge. Der. frame, sb.=ME. frame, a fabric (Prompt. Parv.), also profit, Ormulum, 961; cf. Icel. frami, advancement; also fram-er, fram-ing, frame-work.

FRAMPOLD, quarrelsome. (Low G.) Obsolete. In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 94. Spelt frampald, frampard, and explained as 'fretful, peevish, cross, forward' in Ray, Gloss. of South-Country Words. Allied to prov. E. rantipole, a romping child. β. The former part of the word is explained by EFries. frante-pot, wrante-pot, a peevish man; from EFries. franten, wranten, to be cross; MDu. wranten, to chide, Dan. wrante, to be peevish; Dan. wranten, peevish. Cf. also Dan. wrampet, warped; Low G. wrampachtigh, morose (Lübben); Low G. frampe, a coarse, violent man (Berghaus). More exactly, the root is supplied by MDu. wrimpen, 'to wring the mouth,' Hexham. Note also Lowl. Sc. frample, to disorder, and E. frump. γ. The second element, viz. -old, -ald, -art, -(p)art, may have arisen from EFries. pot, a pot (a term of contempt), confused with E. poll, the head.

See further in Nares; also Dodsley's O. Plays, iv. 60, vi. 179. Apparently from OF. frainant, one who infringes (law); orig. pres. pt. of OF. fraindre, freindre, to break; hence, to infringe. —L. frangere, to break. See Fragile. ¶ Perhaps somewhat confused with F. fainéant, an idle fellow, lit. 'one who does nothing.'

FREEBOOTER, a rover, pirate. (Du.) Bacon, in his Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 129, l. 28, says that Perkin Warbeck's men were chiefly 'strangers born, and most of them base people and free-booters.' These strangers were mostly Flemings; see p. 112, l. 11, &c. In a letter dated 1597, in the Sidney State Papers, ii. 78, is a mention of 'the freebutters of Flushenge;' Todd's Johnson. —Du. vrijbuit, a freebooter. —Du. vrijbuiten, to rob, plunder. —Du. vrijbuit, plunder, lit. 'free booty.' The Du. vrij is cognate with E. free; and buit is allied to booty. See Free and Booty. Doublet, filibuster, q. v.

FREIGHT, a cargo. (F.—OHG.) ME. freyte (1463); 'freight or huyr,' i. e. hire, Caxton, Golden Legend, St. Giles, § 3. Freighted occurs in North's Plutarch; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 16, l. 3. Apparently an altered spelling of OF. fret, 'the freight of a ship, also the hire that's paid for a ship;' Cot. —OHG. frēht, earnings, hire (supposed to be the same word as G. fracht, a cargo). β. The OHG. frēht is thought to represent an OHG. type **fra-aihtiz*; from fra-, prefix (see Fret (1)), and **aihtiz* > AS. æht, acquisition, property, from āgan, to own. See Own (1). Der. freight, vb., freight-age.

FRENZY, madness, fury. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. frenesye [not frenseye as in Tyrwhitt], Chaucer, Troil. i. 727; P. See Farce. Brugmann, ii. § 713. Der. frequent-ly, -ness, frequenc-y; also frequent, vb. < MF. frequenter, 'to frequent,' Cot. < L. frequentāre; frequent-at-ion, -at-ive.

T. 367 (A 365). — OF. fres, freis (fem. fresche), fresh. — OHG. frisc (above). β. Also fersch, fersh; spelt fersse (= fershe), Rob. of Glouc. p. 397, l. 8187; also uersc (= fersc), O. Eng. Homilies, i. 175, l. 248; representing AS. fersc; 'ne fersc ne mersc' = neither fresh water nor marsh; Ancient Laws, ed. FRET (1), to eat away. (E.) ME. freten, a strong verb; Chaucer, C. T. 2070 (A 2068). AS. fretan, pt. t. fræt; Grein, i. 340. Contracted from **fra-etan*, as is clearly shown by the Gothic form; from Teut. fra-, intensive prefix, and etan, to eat. + Swed. fräta, to corrode; Du. veten (ver-eten); G. fressen (ver-essen); Goth. fraitan, from fra-, intensive prefix, and itan, to eat. See For (2) and Eat. Der. fret-ful, Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 403; -ful-ly, -ful-ness; frett-ing. ¶ The strong pp. occurs in Levit. xiii. 55, in the form fret; contr. from the ME. strong pp. freten, frete; see Chaucer, C. T. 4895 (B 475).

FRET (2), to ornament, variegate. (F.) ME. fretten, to adorn with interlaced work, esp. with gold or silver embroidery. 'Fyoles fretted with flores and fleez of gold, phials [cups] adorned with flowers and fleeces of golde,' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1476; cf. P. Plowman, A. ii. 11. — OF. fretter, to adorn; from frete, an (interlaced) fret (in heraldry, F. frette). See Fret (3). ¶ It can hardly have been influenced by AS. fratwan, to adorn, as this would become ME. fratwen, fratewen; see Matt. xii. 44 (AS. version). Der. fret-work.

FRET (3), a kind of grating. (F. — L. or G.) A term in heraldry, meaning 'a bearing composed of bars crossed and interlaced.' See explanation in Minshew, ed. 1627. Kersey, ed. 1715, has: 'in heraldry, a bearing wherein several lines run crossing one another.' — OF. frete, F. frette, a fret. Cotgrave gives 'fretté, fretty, a term of blazon' [heraldry]. According to Diez, frettes, pl., means an iron grating. Roquefort gives: 'freter, to cross, interlace.' Cf. Span. fretes, 'frets, narrow bands of a shield, a term in heraldry' (Meadows); from a sing. frete. β. Of doubtful origin. According to Diez, from a Late L. type **ferrilla*; from L. ferrum, iron; cf. Ital. ferrata, a grate of iron (Florio). Another suggestion (also doubtful) is to derive it from OSax. feter-, in feter-ōs, pl., fetters, AS. feter, a fetter. See Körting, §§ 3700, 3715. Der. frett-y.

FRET (4), a stop on a musical instrument. (F. — L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 150. A fret was a stop such as is seen on a guitar, to regulate the fingering; formed by thin pieces of metal or wires running like bars across the neck of the instrument; see Levins. I take it to be a particular use of OF. frete, a ferrule; or 'the iron band or hoop that keeps a wooden toole from riving,' Cot. Cf. Ital. ferretti, little irons, tags for points (Florio). Perhaps the same word as the above; but this is doubtful.

FRIABLE, easily crumbled. (F. — L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23. § 5. — MF. friable, 'bruizeable, easie to be broken'; Cot. — L. friabilis, easily crumbled. — L. friāre, to rub, crumble. Der. friable-ness, friabil-ity.

FRIBBLE, to trifle. (Flem. — Du.) 'Than those who with the stars do fribble,' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 36; and see Spectator, no. 288. To fribble away is to waste foolishly and triflingly. — W. Flemish fribbelen, wribbelen, to rub between the finger and thumb (as a thread), to roll together by rubbing (De Bo); cf. Low G. wribbelen, to rub between the fingers, to rub away. (Hence, to twiddle, trifle.) Frequentative of Du. (and EFries.) wrijven, to rub, rub with the hand, rub away, grind (pt. t. wreef, pp. gewreven); G. reiben, to rub.

FRICASSEE, a dish made of fowls. (F. — L.?) 'A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce,' Todd's Johnson. 'Soups, and olios, fricassees, and ragouts,' Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 7; id. — F. fricassée, a fricassée; 'any meat fried in a panne,' Cot.; fem. pp. of fricasser, to fry, also, to squander money. Of unknown origin (Brachet). ¶ Perhaps a derivative of frigere, to fry; with c inserted by a fancied connexion with fricāre, to rub; cf. Körting, § 3990. We once had fricasy in the sense of rubbing; as in 'fricasyes or rubbings,' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32.

FRICTION, rubbing, attrition. (F. — L.) 'Hard and vehement friction,' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxviii. c. 4. — F. friction, 'a friction, or frication'; Cot. — L. frictionem, acc. of frictio, a rubbing. — L. fric-

tus, usual pp. of fricāre, to rub; allied to friāre, to crumble. Der. friction-wheel; cf. friable.

FRIDAY, the sixth day of the week. (E.) ME. Friday, Chaucer, C. T. 1536 (A 1534). AS. frige-dæg; rubric to S. Mark, xi. 11. — AS. Frige, gen. case of Frig, the wife of Woden (considered as the goddess of love) and dæg, a day; see Grein, i. 349. — ✓PREI, to love; see Friend. Cf. Icel. frjādagr, Friday, OHG. Friatag, Frigetag, Friday. The Teut. type (of AS. Frig) is **frijā*, fem. of **frijoz*, dear, beloved, 'free'; Skt. priyā, wife, loved one. Brugmann, i. § 309 (2). See Free, Friend. ¶ AS. Frige dæg was meant to translate L. dies Veneris.

FRIEND, an intimate acquaintance. (E.) ME. frend, freond; Ormulum, 443, 1609, 17960. AS. frēond; Grein, i. 346. Orig. pres. pt. of frēon, frēogan, to love; so that the sense is 'loving'; id. 345. + Du. vriend, a friend; cf. vrijen, to court, woo; Icel. frændi, a kinsman, from frjā, to love; Dan. frænde, Swed. frände, a kinsman; Goth. frijōnds, a friend, pres. pt. of frijōn, to love; G. freund, a friend; OHG. frūnt. — ✓PREI, to love; cf. Skt. pri, to love. Der. friend-ly (AS. adv. frēondlice), -li-ness, -less (AS. frēondleas), -less-ness, -ship (AS. frēondscipe).

FRIEZE (1), a coarse woollen cloth. (F. — Du.) Palsgrave (1530) has: 'Fryse, rough clothe, drap frise.' Cf. 'a gowne of grene frise, in 1418; Fifty E. E. Wills, ed. Furnivall, p. 37, l. 1. 'Panni lanei de Frise,' Earl of Derby's Expeditions, 1390-3, p. 280, l. 25. 'Woven after the manner of deep, frieze rugges,' Holland's tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 48. — MF. frise, frize, 'frise'; Cot. He also gives drap de frise as an equivalent expression; lit. cloth of Friesland. — Du. Vriesland, Friesland; Vries, a Frieslander. ¶ The ME. Frise, meaning 'Friesland,' occurs in the Romaunt of the Rose, 1093. Similarly, the term 'cheval de Frise' means 'horse of Friesland,' because there first used in defensive warfare.

FRIEZE (2), part of the entablature of a column. (F. — L.) In Shak. Macb. i. 6. 6. — MF. frize ' (in architecture) the broad and flat band, or member, that's next below the cornish [cornice], or between it and the architrave; called also by our workemen the frize;' Cot. Cf. Span. friso, a frieze, Ital. fregio, 'a fringe, lace, border, ornament, or garnishment'; Florio. Whether F. frise is from Ital. fregio is not clear. The source is L. Phrygium (opus), Phrygian work; cf. Phrygiam chlamydem, embroidered cloak, Æn. iii. 484.

FRIGATE, a large ship. (F. — Ital.) In Cotgrave; spelt frigat in Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 665 (last line). — MF. fragate, 'a frigate, a swift pinnace'; Cot. — Ital. fregata, 'a frigate, a spiall ship'; Florio. ¶ Of uncertain origin; Diez supposes it to stand for **fargata*, a supposed contracted form of fabricata, i.e. constructed, from fabricāre, to build; but this explanation is not now accepted. Der. frigat-oon (Ital. fregatone), frigate-bird.

FRIGHT, terror. (E.) ME. frygt; Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 948. It stands for fyrjt, by the shifting of r so common in English, as in bride, bird, brimstone, &c. ONorthumb. fyrhto, Matt. xxviii. 4; AS. fyrhto, fyrhtu, fright; Grein, i. 362. Cf. fyrht, timid; āfyrhtan, to terrify. + OSax. forhta, fright; Goth. faurhtei, fright; faurhtjan, to fear; G. furcht, OHG. forhta, forokhta, forakhta, fright; G. fürchten, to fear. Allied to OSax. forht, OHG. forakt, Goth. faurhts, timid, fearful. Der. fright, verb (later form fright-en); Shak. uses the form fright only; fright-ful, Rich. III, iv. 4. 169; -ful-ly, -ful-ness.

FRIGID, cold, chilly. (L.) 'The frigid region,' Chapman, The Ball, A. iv. sc. 2 (Lamont). Frigidity is in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 4. — L. frigidus, cold. — L. frigere, to be cold. — L. frigus, sb. cold. + Gk. ψυχος, cold; see Brugmann, i. § 875. Der. frigid-ly, -ness, -ity.

FRILL, a ruffle on a shirt. (Low G.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. The N.E.D. quotes 'that can fril and paint herself' (1574); and 'their flaunting ruffles, their borrowed frilles' (1591). Of Teutonic (prob. Low G.) origin; but insufficiently recorded. Represented by W. Flem. frul, frulle, a wrinkled plait, wrinkled fold in a small shred or band; De Bo cites 'frullen round the bottom of a dress,' and 'sleeves with frullen.' Another trace of it occurs in Swed. dial. fräll, fröll, a wrinkled or curled strip, as on a woman's cap, whence fryllig, wrinkled. This points to a Teut. **frulle*, a frill, whence a verb **fryllan*; so that the E. form frill appears to be verbal.

FRINGE, a border of loose threads. (F. — L.) Palsgrave has: 'Frenge, frenge.' Chaucer has frenges, pl.; Ho. of Fame, iii. 228. — OF. frenge, fringe (Supp. to Godefroy); F. frange. Cot. has: 'Fränge, fringe.' The Wallachian form (according to Cihac) is frimbie, which stands for **fimbrie*, by a transposition of r, for greater ease of pronunciation; cf. F. brebis from L. ueruēcem. — L. fimbria, fringe; chiefly in the pl. fimbriæ, curled ends of threads, fibres. Brugmann, i. § 875. See Fibre. Der. fringe, verb, fringed, Tempest, i. 2. 408; fring-y.

FRIPPERY, worn out clothes, trifles. (F. — L.) 'Some fripperies to hide nakedness,' Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble, A. i. sc. 1 (R.).

Drayton has: 'Both in the tufty frith and in the mossy fell,' Polyolbion, song 17. ME. frith, peace, Layamon, l. 2549; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 90; also in the sense of enclosed land, enclosure, park for hunting, forest, wood; thus in Layamon, 1432, where the older MS. speaks of hunting in the king's frith [frith], the later MS. speaks of hunting in the king's park [parc]. See numerous examples in Mätzner, and cf. AS. frid-gæard, an enclosed space, lit. 'peace-yard' or 'safety-yard,' for which see Thorpe, Anc. Englished from Late L. fritillaria, coined from L. fritillus, a dice-box.

FRITTER (1), a kind of pancake. (F. — L.) Spelt frytowre in Prompt. Parv. Cotgrave has: 'Friteau, a fritter.' But the E. word rather answers to OF. friture, a frying, a dish of fried fish. On the other hand, it was certainly understood as being named after a frog (though it is hard to see why), because it was also called a frush, which much resembles frosch, a ME. form of frog; see Frog (1); though this might also be a substitute for F. fourche, a fork, and this for F. fourchette. 'As for talkers and futile persons, they are commonly vain;' Bacon, Essay VI. — F. futile, 'light, vain;' Cot. — L. futilis, futilis, that which easily pours forth; also, vain, empty, futile. Formed with suffix -ilis from the base **fud-*, to pour; cf. ef-fut-ire, for **effutire*, to blab (Bréal). — ✓ GHEU, to pour; see Fuse. Der. futile-ly, futil-i-ty.

FUTTOCKS, certain timbers in a ship. (E.) 'Futtocks, the compassing timbers in a ship, that make the breadth of it;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Called foot-hooks in Bailey. Explained as foot-hooks in 1644; hook referring to the bent shape of the timbers. Cf. 'Cour-baston, a crooked peece of timber teamed a knee, or futtock;' Cot.

FUTURE, about to be. (F.—L.) ME. futur; Chaucer, C. T. 16343 (G 875). — OF. futur, m. future, f. ## G

dion. See Fairholt, Dict. of Terms in Art; and Boutell's Heraldry. Modern; and due to a mistake. MS. Lansdowne 874, at leaf 190, has fylyfot, meaning a space in a painted window, at the bottom, that fills the foot. This was erroneously connected (in 1842) with the 'gammadion,' as the cross was rightly named.

GABARDINE, GABERDINE, a coarse frock for men. (Span.—Teut.) In Shak. Merch. i. 3. 113; and in Du Wes, Supp. to Palsgrave, p. 907, col. 1: 'the gabardine, la gawardine.'—Span. gabardina, a coarse frock. Cf. Ital. gavardina (Florio); and OF. galvardine, 'a gaberdine,' Cot.; whence ME. gawbardyne. Prob. T. 15072 (B 4256); P. Plowman, B. iii. 179. Of imitative origin; cf. gaggle, jabber, gobble. ¶ The ME. gabben, to mock, from OF. gaber, to mock, is from Icel. gabba, to mock, and is prob. of imitative origin. Cf. Icel. gap, 'gab, gibes'; Norw. gapa, to clamour. See Gape; and compare Babble. Der. gabbl-er, gabbl-ing.

GABION, a bottomless basket filled with earth, as a defence against the fire of an enemy. (F.—Ital.—L.) 'Gabions, great baskets 5 or 6 foot high, which being filled with earth, are placed upon batteries,' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Also found in Minsheu; and in Marlowe, 2 Tamb. iii. 3. 56.—F. gabion, 'a gabion'; Cot.—Ital. gabione, a gabion, large cage; augmentative form of gabbia, a cage. The Ital. gabbia also means 'the top of the mast of a ship where the shrouds are fastened' (Florio); the Span. gavia is used in the same sense. The Ital. gabbia, in the latter sense, is also spelt gaggia, which is allied to F. and E. cage. β. All from Late L. cavea, L. cauea, a hollow place, cage, den, coop.—L. cauus, hollow. See Cage, Cave, Gaol. Der. gabionnade (F. gabionnade, Cot.; from Ital. gabbionata, an intrenchment formed of gabions).

Further allied to OIrish gabul, a fork, gallows; W. gafl, the fork of the thighs. With a different gradation, we find Goth. gibla, pinnacle, G. giebel, Du. gevel, gable, OHG. gebal, head; also Gk. κεφαλή (Idg. *ghebhālā). See Gaff. Der. gable-end.

GABY, a simpleton. (Scand.) A dialectal word; see E. D. D. Also in the form gawby. Prob. Scand.; cf. MDan. gabe, also gäbe (Jutland), a fool (Kalkar); Dan. dial. gabenar, a simpleton (Dan. nar means 'fool'). Allied to Dan. gabe, to gape. Cf. also Icel. gapi, a rash, reckless man; gapamuðr (lit. gape-mouthed), a gaping, heedless fellow; Icel. gapa, to gape. See Gape.

GAD (1), a bar of steel, goad. (Scand.) 'A gad of steel,' Titus Andron. iv. 1. 103. Also 'upon the gad,' i.e. upon the goad, suddenly; K. Lear, i. 2. 26. 'Gadde of steele, quarreau dacier,' Palsgrave. ME. gad, a goad or whip; 'bondemen with her gaddes' = husbandmen with their goads or whips; Havelok, 1016.—Icel. gaddr (for **gazdr*), a spike, sting, hence a goad. + Goth. gazds, a rod; Irish gath, a spear, sting; L. hasta, a spear. ¶ Much influenced by goad, with which it is not etymologically connected. Der. gad-fly, i.e. sting-fly; and see gad (2).

GAD (2), to ramble idly. (Scand.?) 'Where have you been gadding?' Romeo, iv. 2. 16. 'Gadde abrode, vagari,' Levins, 7. 47. Perhaps the orig. sense was to run about like cattle stung by a gad-fly. Cf. to have a gadfly, to gad about (1591); in N. E. D.—Icel. gadda, to goad.—Icel. gaddr, a goad. See above. ¶ Or possibly a back-formation from ME. gadeling, a vagabond, for which see Gather.

GAFF, a light fishing-spear; also, a sort of boom. (F.—Teut.) The gaff of a ship takes its name from the fork-shaped end which rests against the mast. 'Gaff, an iron hook to pull great fishes into a ship; also, an artificial spur for a cock,' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—OF. gaffe, 'an iron hook wherewith sea-men pull great fishes into their ships,' Cot.; and see Supp. to Godefroy. Cf. Span. and Port. gafa, a hook, gaff. β. Of Teut. origin.—Low G. gaffel, a two-pronged hayfork; EFries. gaffel, a fork, a ship's gaff; Du. gaffel, a pitchfork, a ship's gaff. Allied to G. gabel, a fork. See Gable. (Körting, § 4101.)

GAFFER, an old man, grandfather. (Hybrid; F. and E.) 'And gaffer madman,' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Captain, iii. 5. Similarly, gammer is a familiar name for an old woman, as in the old play of 'Gammer Gurton's Needle,' in which 'gaffar vicar' also occurs; A. v. sc. 2. The words are corruptions of gramfer and grammer, which are the West of England forms of grandfather and grandmother; see E. D. D.

GAG, to stop the mouth forcibly, to silence. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 94; v. 384. ME. gaggen, to suffocate; Prompt. Parv. Of imitative origin; cf. gaggle, guggle. Of similar formation is the Irish gaggach, stammering. See Gaggle. Der. gag, sb.

GAGE (1), a pledge. (F.—Teut.) ME. gage, King Alisaunder, 904.—F. gage, m., 'a gage, pawne, pledge,' Cot. Cf. Late L. uadium, a pledge.—Teut. type **wadjom*, n., a pledge; as in Goth. wadi, AS. wedd, a pledge. See Wed, and see Wage. From the same source are Ital. gaggio, Span. and Port. gage, a pledge (Hatzfeld). Der. gage, vb.; en-gage, dis-en-gage.

GAGE (2), to gauge; see Gauge.

GAGGLE, to cackle as geese. (E.) ME. gaglen, Rich. Redeles, iii. 101. An imitative word; a frequentative from the base gag-. Cf. cack-le, gabb-le; also Icel. gagl, a wild goose; gagg, a fox's cry; Lithuan. gagiti, to gaggle. Cf. Guggle.

GAIN (1), profit, emolument. (F.—Teut.) First in 1496; Palsgrave has: 'Gayne or gettyng,' p. 224; and 'I gayne, I wyne,' p. 559.—OF. gain, m., F. gagne, f. sb.; from OF. gaigner, F. gagner, to gain; see Gain (2) below. ¶ It displaced ME. gain, advantage, which was of Scand. origin; from Icel. gagn, gain, advantage; Swed. gagn, Dan. gavn. Allied to the (obsolete) ME. verb gainen, to profit, be of use, avail, gen. used impersonally; see Chaucer, C. T. 1178 (A 1176); this answers to Icel. and Swed. gagna, to encounter, to suit. Der. gain-ful, gain-ful-ly, gain-ful-ness, gain-less, gain-less-ness.

GAIN (2), to acquire, get, win. (F.—Teut.) Not in early use. 'Yea, though he gaine and cram his purse with crounes,' Gascoigne, Fruits of Warre, st. 69. Again, he has just above, in st. 66: 'To get a gaine by any trade or kinde.' See Gain (1). [This verb superseded the old use of the ME. gainen, to profit.] β. The etymology of F. gagner, OF. gaigner (Cotgrave), gaaignier, gaaignier (Burguy) = Ital. guadagnare, is from the OHG. weidenen (for **weidin-jan*), to pasture, which was the orig. sense, and is still preserved in the F. sb. gagnage, pasturage, pasture-land.—OHG. weida (G. weise), pasturage, pasture-ground; cf. MHG. weiden, to pasture, hunt. + Icel. veidr, hunting, fishing, the chase; veida, to catch, to hunt; AS. wād, a hunt; Grein, ii. 636. Cf. L. uenārī, to hunt. Further allied to Skt. vēti, he follows after (Uhlenbeck).

GAINLY, suitable, gracious. (Scand.) Nearly obsolete, except in ungainly, now meaning 'awkward.' In Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 83; B. 728. Formed, with suffix -ly, from Icel. gegn, ready, serviceable, kind, good. See Ungainly.

GAINSAY, to speak against. (Scand. and E.) In the A. V. Luke, xxi. 15. ME. geinseien, a rare word. 'That thei not gein-seye my sonde' = that they may not gainsay my message; Cursor Mundi, 5769 (Trinity MS.). The Cotton MS. reads: 'þat þai noht sai agains mi sand.' β. The latter part of the word is E. say, q. v. The prefix is rather the Icel. gegn, against, than the AS. gegn, against, as occurring in the sb. gegnwide, a speech against anything. The latter is better known in the comp. ongegn, ongean, signifying again or against. See Again. Der. gainsay-er, A. V. Titus, i. 9; gainsaying, A. V. Acts, x. 29.

GAIRISH, GARISH, gaudy; see Garish.

GAIT, manner of walking. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 102. A particular use of ME. gate, a way. 'And goth him forth, and in his gate' = and goes forth, and in his way; Gower, C. A. iii. 196; bk. vii. 3314.—Icel. gata, a way, path, road; Swed. gata, a street; Dan. gade, a street. + Goth. gatuō, a street; G. gasse, a street. See Gate (2).

GAITER, a covering for the ankle. (F.—Teut.) Modern. Not in Johnson's Dict.—F. guêtre, a gaiter; formerly spelt gwestre. 'Gwestres, startups, high shooes, or gamashes for countrey folkes,' Cot. Marked by Brachetas 'of unknown origin.' β. However, the form of the word shows it to be of Teutonic origin; and prob. from the same source as MHG. wester, a child's chrisom-cloth (G. wester-hemd) and the Goth. wasti, clothing; cf. Skt. vastra, a cloth, garment; see Vesture, Vest. But see Körting, § 10014.

GALA, pomp, festivity. (F.—Ital.—OHG.) Chiefly in the comp. 'a gala-day' or 'a gala-dress.' Modern; not in Johnson. Sheridan has: 'the annual gala of a race-ball,' Sch. for Scandal, i. 2.—F. gala, borrowed from Ital. gala, ornament, finery, festive attire. Cf. Ital. di gala, merrily; closely connected with Ital. galante, gay, lively.

See Gallant. Der. gala-day = F. jour de gala, Span. and Port. dia de gala.

GALAXY, the 'milky way' in the sky; a splendid assemblage. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'See yonder, lo, the galaxye Which men clepeth the milky wey;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 428. — OF. galaxie, 'the milky way;' Cot. — L. galaxiam, acc. of galaxias. — Gk. γαλαξίας, the milky way. — Gk. γαλακς, for γαλακτ, stem of γάλα, milk. Certainly allied to L. lact, stem of lac, milk; see Lacteal.

GALE (1), a strong wind. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. v. 314. To be explained from Dan. gal, mad, furious; the Norweg. galen is particularly used of storm and wind, as ein galen storm, eit galeit veer, a furious storm (Aasen). We say, 'it blows a gale.' Cf. Icel. gola, a breeze, ffall-gola, a breeze from the fells. β. The Icel. galinn, furious, is from gala, to sing, enchant. Cf. F. galerie, a north-west wind.

GALE (2), a plant; the bog-myrtle. (E.) ME. gayle; Cath. Anglicum. AS. gagel; AS. Leechdoms, iii. 6. + Du. gagel.

GALINGALE, the pungent root of a plant. (F. — Span. — Arab. — Pers. — Chinese.) ME. galingale, Chaucer, C. T. 383 (A 381). — OF. galingal (Godefroy); the form garingal is more common, and the usual later F. form is galangue, as in Cotgrave. — Span. galanga, the same. — Arab. khalanjān, galingale; Rich. Dict. p. 625. — Pers. khalanjān; id. p. 639. Said to be of Chinese origin; see N. E. D. See Devic, Supp. to Littré; Marco Polo, ed. Yule, ii. 181.

GALIOT, a small galley; see Galliot.

GALL (1), bile, bitterness. (E.) ME. galle; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 155. O Merc. galla, AS. gealla; Matt. xxvii. 34. + Du. gal; Icel. gall; Swed. galla; Dan. galde (with excrement d); G. galle. + L. fel; Gk. χολή. β. From the same root as E. yellow; so that gall was named from its yellowish colour; Prellwitz. Cf. Russ. jelch(e), gall (j = zh); jeltui, yellow. See Yellow. Der. gall-bladder.

GALL (2), to rub a sore place, to vex. (F. — L.) 'Let the galled jade wince;' Hamlet, iii. 2. 253. ME. gallen. 'The hors . . . was . . . galled on the bak;' Gower, C. A. ii. 46; bk. iv. 1344. — OF. galler, 'to gall, fret, itch, rub;' Cot. — OF. galle, 'a galling, fretting, itching of the skin;' id.; F. gale, a scab on fruit. — Late L. galla, a soft tumour, app. the same word as L. galla, a gall-nut; see below. ¶ But also partly E.; cf. AS. gealla, (1) gall, bile; (2) a gall on a horse. So also Du. gal. Der. gall, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 6522 (D 940).

GALL (3), GALL-NUT, a vegetable excrescence produced by insects. (F. — L.) In Shak.; 'Though ink be made of gall;' Cymb. i. 1. 101. ME. galle, Prompt. Parv. — OF. galle, 'the fruit called a gall;' Cot. — L. galla, an oak-apple, gall-nut.

GALLANT, gay, splendid, brave, courteous. (F. — OHG.) 'Good and gallant ship;' Shak. Temp. v. 237. 'Like young lusty galantes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 105 (R.). ME. galaunt, Polit. Poems, ed. Wright, i. 274. — OF. gallant; Cotgrave gives 'gallant homme, a gallant, goodly fellow;' properly spelt galant (with one l), as in mod. F. β. Galant is the pres. part. of OF. galer, to rejoice; Cotgrave has: 'galler le bon temps, to make merry, to pass the time pleasantly.' — OF. gale, show, mirth, festivity; the same word as Ital., Span., and Port. gala, ornament, festive attire. γ. Of Teutonic origin; and prob. from MHG. wallen, OHG. wallōn, to go on pilgrimage (Hatzfeld). Der. gallant, sb., whence also gallant, vb.; gallant-ly, gallant-ness; also gallant-r-y (Spectator, no. 4) from MF. gallanterie, 'gallantness,' Cot. Also see gala, gall-oon.

GALLEON, a large galley. (Span.) Cotgrave explains MF. gallion as 'a gallion, an armada, a great ship of warre;' but the word is Spanish. — Span. galeon, a galleon, Spanish armed ship of burden; formed, with augmentative suffix -on, from Late L. galea, a galley. See Galley.

GALLERY, a balcony, long covered passage. (F. — Late L.) 'The long galleries;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, b. ii. l. 691. — OF. gallerie, galerie, 'a gallerie, or long roome to walke in;' Cot. — Late L. galeria, a long portico, gallery; Ducange. β. Uncertain; perhaps from Gk. κάλον, wood, timber (Körting). See below.

GALLEY, a long, low-built ship. (F. — Late L.) In early use. ME. galeie; King Horn, ed. Lumby, 185. — OF. galie (Godefroy); gallée (Cotgrave). — Late L. galea, a galley. Of unknown origin; perhaps from Gk. κάλον, wood, also sometimes a ship (Körting). Der. galley-slave; see galle-on, galli-as, galli-ot.

GALLIARD, a lively dance. (F. — C. ?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 127, 137. 'Dansyng of galyardes;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, bk. ii. c. 33. — F. gaillarde, fem. of gaillard, lively; cf. galop gaillard, 'the galliard;' Cot. Span. gallarda [in which ll is pronounced as ly], a kind of lively Spanish dance; Span. gallardo, pleasant, gay, lively. β. Of uncertain origin; Diez rejects a connexion with gala and gallant (Span. galante) on account of the double l and the F. form gaillard. The OF. gaillard meant 'valiant' or 'bold;' perhaps of Celtic origin. Cf. Bret. galloud, power, galloudek, strong; Corn. galludoc, able; Irish and Gael. galach, valiant, brave; W. gallu, to be able. Cf. Lith. galū, I am able (Thurneysen).

GALLIAS, a sort of galley. (F. — Ital. — Late L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 380. — OF. galeace, 'a galeass;' Cot. — Ital. galeazza, a heavy, low-built galley. — Ital. and Late L. galea, a galley. See Galley. ¶ On the termination -ace, see Cutlass.

GALLIGASKINS, large hose or trousers. (F. — Ital. — L.) a. Cotgrave has: 'Garguesques, a fashion of strait Venitians without cod-peeces.' Also: 'Greguesques, slops, gregs, gallogascoins, Venitians.' Also: 'Gregues, wide slops, gregs, gallogascoins, Venitians, great Gascon or Spanish hose.' Also: 'Greguesque, the same as Gregeois, Grecian, Greekish.' β. Here it is clear that Garguesques is a corruption of Greguesques; that Greguesque originally meant Greekish; and that Gregues (whence obs. E. gregs) is a mere contraction of Greguesque. γ. And further, Greguesque is borrowed from Ital. Grechesco, Greekish, a form given by Florio; which is derived (with suffix -esco = E. -ish) from Ital. Greco, Greek. — L. Græcus, Greek. δ. Finally, it seems probable that gallogascoin is nothing but a derivative of Ital. Grechesco, a name given (as shown by the evidence) to a particular kind of hose or breeches originally worn at Venice. The corruption seems to have been due to a mistaken notion on the part of some of the wearers of galligaskins, that they came, not from Venice, but from Gascony. ¶ This suggestion is due to Wedgwood; it would seem that galligaskins = garisgascans < garguesquans; where the suffix -an is the same as in Greci-an, &c. The word was also influenced by E. galley; they were thought to be 'like shipmen's hose;' N. E. D.

GALLIMAUFREY, a hodge-podge, a ragout. (F.) Robinson, in his tr. of More's Utopia, has: 'a tragycall comedye or gallymal-freye;' ed. Arber, p. 64. — F. galimafree a hodge-podge; spelt calimafree in the 14th cent. (Hatzfeld). Of unknown origin.

GALLINACEOUS, pertaining to a certain order of birds. (L.) Modern. Englished from L. gallinæus, belonging to poultry. Formed from L. gallina, a hen. — L. gallus, a cock.

GALLIOT, a small galley. (F. — Late L.) ME. galiote, Minot's Poems, Expedition of Edw. III to Brabant, l. 81 (Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 129). — OF. galiote, 'a galliot;' Cot. — Late L. galeota, a small galley; dimin. of galea, a galley. Cf. Ital. galeotta, a galliot. See Galley.

GALLIPOT, a small glazed earthen pot. (F. and E.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iii. 1. 43. Similarly earthen tiles were called galley-tiles. Wedgwood (ed. 1872) quotes from Stow: 'About the year 1570, I. Andries and I. Janson, potters, came from Antwerp and settled in Norwich, where they followed their trade, making galley-tiles and apothecaries vessels' [gallipots]. Apparently so called because at first brought over in galleys. Cf. galley-halfpenny. See N. E. D. Phillips, ed. 1706, says that the galley-men came in galleys from Genoa, 'landed their goods at a place in Thames-street nam'd galley-key, and traded with their own silver small coin call'd galley-halfpence.' From Galley and Pot.

GALLON, a measure holding 4 quarts. (F.) ME. galon, galun, galoun; P. Plowman, B. v. 224, 343; Chaucer, C. T. 16973 (H 24). Spelt galun in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1123. — OF. gallon, galon, jalon, a gallon (Godefroy); Late L. galōna (also galo), an English measure for liquids; Ducange. β. The suffix -on is augmentative; and a shorter form appears in mod. F. jale, a bowl, which evidently stands for an older form **gale*, just as jalon is for galon. Thus the sense is 'a large bowl.' Of unknown origin.

GALLOON, a kind of lace or narrow ribbon. (F. — OHG.) The compound galloon-laces occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, v. 4. 46. Cotgrave has: 'Galon, galloon-lace.' — F. galon, as in Cotgrave (like E. balloon from F. ballon); cf. Span. galon, galloon, lace; orig. any kind of finery for festive occasions. — OF. gale, Span. gala, parade, finery, court-dress; the suffix -on being augmentative, as in balloon. See Gallant, Gala.

GALLOP, to ride very fast. (F. — Teut.) 'Styll he galoped forth right;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 140. We also find the form walopen, in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, 4827 (and note on p. 259); and the pres. pt. walopande, Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 2827. — OF. galoper, to gallop; of which an older form must have been waloper, as shown by the derivative walopin in Roquefort, spelt galopin in mod. F. The sb. galop also appears as walop in OFrench (Bartsch); and may be the original whence the verb was derived. The sense was perhaps 'Celtic running.' — OSax. Walh, a Celt; and hlōpan, to run, to leap; see Walnut and Leap. The Norw. vallhopp, a gallop (Aasen); lit. 'a bounding over a field,' or 'field-hop,' would account for the word even better; but is merely an adaptation from Teutonic. Der. gallop-ade.

GALLOW, to terrify. (E.) In Shak. King Lear, iii. 2. 44. Prov. E. (Somerset). gally. ME. galwen. AS. galwan, in the comp.

āgalwan, to astonish; 'þa wearð ic āgælwed' = then was I astonished; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiv. § 5; lib. iii. pr. 10.

GALLOWAY, a nag, pony. (Scotland.) So called from Galloway in Scotland; the word occurs in Dryton's Polyolbion, s. 3. l. 28. Cf. Galloway-nag in Shak. 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 205.

GALLOW-GLASS, GALLOGLASS, a heavy-armed foot-soldier. (Irish.) In Macbeth, i. 2. 13. — Irish galloglach, a servant, a heavy-armed soldier. — Irish gall, a foreigner, an Englishman; oglach, a youth, servant, soldier (from og, OIrish ōac, ōc, young). It meant 'an English servitor'; according to Spenser, View of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 640; but gall orig. referred to Danes (Windisch). (N. and Q. 6 S. x. 145.)

GALLOWES, a gibbet, an instrument for hanging criminals. (E.) ME. galwes, Chaucer, C. T. 6240 (D 658). AS. galga, gealga, a cross, gibbet, gallows; Grein, i. 492. Hence was formed ME. galwe, by the usual change from -ga to -we (and later still to -ow); and it became usual to employ the word in the plural galwes, so that the mod. E. gallows is also, strictly speaking, a plural form. + Icel. gālgi, the gallows, a gibbet; Dan. and Swed. galge, a gibbet; Du. galg; Goth. galga, a cross; G. galgen. Teut. type **galgon-*; cf. Lith. žalga, a pole (ž = zh).

GALOCHE, a kind of shoe or slipper. (F. — Late L. — Gk.) ME. galoche, Chaucer, C. T. 10869 (F 555); P. Plowman, B. xviii. 14. — F. galoche, 'a wooden shoe or patten, made all of a piece, without any latchet or tie of leather, and worn by the poor clown in winter'; Cot. — Late L. **galopia*, **calopia*, formed from **calopūs* = Gk. καλόπους (Hatzfeld); we find Late L. calopedia, a clog, wooden shoe (Brachet); also calopodium = Gk. καλοπόδιον, dimin. of καλόπους, καλόπους, a shoe-maker's last. — Gk. kālo-, stem of kālon, wood; and poūs (gen. ποδός), a foot, cognate with E. foot.

GALORE, abundantly, in plenty. (C.) First in 1675. Also spelt gelore, gilore in Jamieson, and golare in Todd's Johnson. 'Galloor, plenty, North'; Grose (1790). — Irish goleor, sufficiently; where go, lit. 'to', is a particle which, when prefixed to an adjective, renders it an adverb, and leor, adj., means sufficient; Gael. gu leor, gu leoir, which is the same. Cf. Irish lia, more, allied to L. plūs (Stokes-Fick, p. 41).

GALT (1), GAULT, a series of beds of clay and marl. (Scand.) A modern geological term. Prov. E. galt, clay, brick-earth, Suffolk (Halliwell). Perhaps of Scand. origin. — Norw. gald, hard ground, a place where the ground is trampled hard by frequent treading, also a place where snow is trodden hard; Icel. gald, hard snow, also spelt galdr. (Doubtful.)

GALVANISM, a kind of electricity. (Ital.) Named from Luigi Galvani, of Bologna in Italy, inventor of the galvanic battery in A.D. 1791. Der. galvani-c, galvani-se.

GAMBADO, a kind of legging. (F. — Ital. — L.) 'Gambadoes, much worn in the west, whereby, while one rides on horseback, his legs are in a coach, clean and warme;' Fuller's Worthies, Cornwall (R.). An E. adaptation, simulating Spanish, of F. gambade, of which the usual sense is 'gambol'; see Gambol.

GAMBESON, a military tunic, sometimes padded. (F. — Teut.) 'A band of Moorish knights gaily arrayed in gambesons of crimson silk;' Longfellow, Outre-Mer (Ancient Spanish Ballads). ME. gambisoun, King Alisaunder, 5151. — OF. gambison, gambeison, wambison (Godefroy); cf. Late L. wambasium. So called from covering the belly. — OHG. wamba, belly; see Womb.

GAMBIT, an opening at chess. (F. — Ital. — L.) F. gambit. — Ital. gambetto, a tripping up. — Ital. gamba, the leg; see Gambol.

GAMBLE, to play for money. (E.) Comparatively a modern word. It occurs in Cowper, Tirocinium, 246; and Burns has gambling, Twa Dogs, 154. Formed, by suffix -le (which has a frequentative force), from the verb to game, the b being merely excrescent; so that gamble = gamm-le. This form, gamm-le (Yorkshire, see E. D. D.) has taken the place of the ME. gamenien or gamenen, to play at games, to gamble, which occurs in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 5461. AS. gamenian, to play at a game, in the Liber Scintillarum, § 55 (p. 172). — AS. gamen, a game. See Game. Der. gambl-er.

GAMBOGE, a gum-resin, of a bright yellow colour. (Asiatic.) In Johnson's Dict. 'Brought from India by the Dutch, about A.D. 1600;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The word is a corruption of Cambodia, the name of the district where it is found. Cambodia is in the Annamese territory, not far from the gulf of Siam. 'The derivation is given by Dampier in 1699; Supp. to Voy. round the World, vi. 105;' (N. E. D.).

GAMBOL, a frisk, caper. (F. — Ital. — L.) In Shak. Hamlet, v. i. 209. Older spellings are gambold, Phaer, tr. of Virgil, Æn. vi.

(l. 643 of Lat. text); gambawd, or gambaud, Skelton, Ware the Hawk, 65; gambolde, gambalde in Palsgrave, s. v. Fetche; gambauld, Udal, Flowers of Lat. Speaking, fol. 72 (R.). — OF. gambade, 'a gamboll'; Cot. — Ital. gambata, a kick (Brachet). — Ital. gamba, the leg; the same word as F. jambe, OF. gambe. — Late L. gamba, earlier spelling camba; cf. acc. pl. cambas, glossed by AS. homme in A. S. Leechdoms, vol. i. p. lxxi; 'the bend' of the leg. Cf. Gael. and W. cam, crooked, answering to OCelt. **kambos* (fem. **kambā*), bent, crooked; Stokes-Fick, p. 78. ¶ The spelling with l seems to have been due to the confusion of the F. suffix -ade with F. suffix -alde, the latter of which stands for an older -alde. Hence gambade was first corrupted to gambaude (Skelton); then written gambauld (Udal) or gambold (Phaer); and lastly gambol (Shakespeare), with loss of final d. Der. gambol, vb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 168.

GAME, sport, amusement. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 240. ME. game, Chaucer, C. T. 1808 (A 1806); older form gamen, spelt gammyn and gamyn in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, iii. 465, ix. 466, &c. AS. gamen, gomen, a game, sport; Grein, i. 366. + OSax. gaman; Icel. gaman; Dan. gammen, mirth, merriment; MSwed. gamman, joy (Ihre); OHG. gaman, MHG. gamen, joy. Root unknown. Der. game, vb., gam-ing; game-some, ME. gamsom (= gamen-sum), Will. of Palerne, 4193; game-ster (Merry Wives, iii. 1. 37), where the suffix -ster, orig. feminine, has a sinister sense, Koch, Engl. Gram. iii. 47; also game-cock, game-keeper. Doublet, gammon (2).

GAMMER, an old dame; lit. 'grandmother'; see Gaffer.

GAMMON (1), the thigh of a hog, pickled and dried. (F. — L.) 'A gammon of bacon;' 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 26. Older form gambon, Book of St. Alban's, fol. f 2, back, l. 9. — OF. gambon (Picard gambon), the old form of F. jambon, corresponding to OF. gambe for jambe. Cotgrave explains jambon by 'a gammon'; and Florio explains Ital. gambone by 'a hanche [haunch], a gammon.' Formed, with suffix -on, from OF. gambe, a leg. See Gambol.

GAMMON (2), nonsense, orig. a jest. (E.) A slang word; but really the ME. gamen preserved; see Backgammon and Game. Cf. 'This gamon shall begin;' Chester Plays, vi. 260. And Stanihurst has gamenig, i. e. 'gambling'; Virgil, ed. Arber, p. 153.

GAMUT, the musical scale. (Hybrid; F. — Gk. and L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 1. 67, 71. A compound word, made up from OF. game or gamme, and ut. 1. Gower has gamme in the sense of 'a musical scale'; C. A. iii. 90; bk. vii. 172. — OF. game, gamme, 'gamut, in musick'; Cot. — Gk. γάμμα, the name of the third letter of the alphabet. Cf. Heb. gimel, the third letter of the alphabet, so named from its supposed resemblance to a camel, called in Hebrew gāmāl (Farrar, Chapters on Language, 136). Brachet says: 'Guy of Arezzo [born about A.D. 990] named the notes of the musical scale a, b, c, d, e, f, g, in which a was the low la on the violoncello; then, to indicate one note below this a, he used the Gk. γ, which thus standing in front of the whole scale, has given its name to it.' 2. The word ut is Latin, and is the old name for the first note in singing, now called do. The same Guy of Arezzo is said to have named the notes after certain syllables of a monkish hymn to S. John, in a stanza written in sapphic metre. The lines are: 'Ut queant laxis resonare fibris Mira gestorum famuli tuorum Solue polluti labii reatum Sante Iohannes;' the last term si being made from the initials of the final words.

GANDER, the male of the goose. (E.) ME. gandre, Mandeville's Travels, p. 216. AS. gandra; Ælfric's Gram. De Tertia Declinatione, sect. xviii; where it translates L. anser. Also spelt ganra, Voc. 131. 23. + Du. gander; Low G. ganner (Berghaus). β. The d is excrescent, as in thunder, and as usual after n; gandra stands for the older gan-ra. Teut. type **gan-ron-*, m. See further under Gannet, Goose.

GANG (1), a crew of persons. (Scand.) The word gang occurs in ME. in the sense of 'a going,' or 'a course.' The peculiar use of gang in the sense of a 'crew' is late, and is rather Scand. than E. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Gang, a company, a crew;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. He adds that 'in sea-affairs, gangs are the several companies of mariners belonging to a ship.' But in the sense of a 'set' of things, it occurs as early as 1340 in Northern E. (N. E. D.). — Icel. gangr, a going; also, collectively, a gang, as mūsagangr, a gang of mice, þjófagangr, a gang of thieves. Cf. Swed. gång, a going, a time; Dan. gang, walk, gait; AS. gang, a going, a procession; Du. gang, course, pace, gait, tack, way, alley, passage; Goth. gaggs (= gangs), a way, street. β. The ME. gang, a course, way, is from AS. gang, a journey (Bosworth); which is from AS. gangan, to go; Grein, i. 367, 368. So also Icel. gangr is from Icel. ganga, to go. See Gang (2). Der. gang-days, from Icel. gangdagar, pl.; gang-week, AS. gang-wuce; gang-way, from AS. gang-weg, a way, road; gang-board, a Dutch term, from Du. gangboord, a gangway.

GANG (2), to go. (Scand.) In Barbour's Bruce, ii. 276, iv. 193, x. 421. — Icel. ganga, to go. + AS. gangan; OHG. gangan; Goth.

Hist., § 333; and in Cotgrave.—MF. gangrene, 'a gangreen, the rotting or mortifying of a member'; Cot.—L. gangræna.—Gk. γάγγραινα, an eating sore. A reduplicated form. Allied to γέρων, an old man, Skt. jaraya, to consume, jaras, old age; see Prellwitz. Der. gangrene, vb.; gangren-ous.

GANNET, a sea-fowl, Solan goose. (E.) ME. gante (contracted from ganet); Prompt. Parv. p. 186; see Way's note. Formed with suffix -ot (-et), from the base gan-; for which see Gander, Goose.

GANTLET (1), a spelling of Gauntlet, q. v.

GANTLET (2), also GANTLOPE, a military punishment. (Swed.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. Formerly written gantlope, but corrupted to gantlet or gaunilet by confusion with gaunilet, a glove. 'To run the gantlope, a punishment used among souldiers'; Phillips' Dict., ed. 1658. Again, the n is inserted, being no part of the orig. word, which should be gatlope.—Swed. gatlopp (older form gatullopp), lit. 'a running down a lane,' because the offender has to run between two files of soldiers, who strike him as he passes. Widegren's Swed. Dict. (1788) has: 'löpa gatullopp, to run the gantelope.'—Swed. gata, a street, lane; see Gate (2); and lopp, a course, career, running, from löpa, to run, cognate with E. Leap. ¶ Prob. due to the wars of Gustavus Adolphus (died 1632).

GAOL, JAIL, a cage, prison. (F.—L.) Spelt gayole in Fabyan's Chron. (1516), an. 1293; gayhol in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 153, l. 219. The peculiar spelling gaol is due to the OF. gaole (Godefroy, s. v. jaiole), and has been preserved in Law French. Chaucer has gayler, C. T. 1476 (A 1474); whence jailer and jail.—AF. gaole, OF. jaiole, gaole, mod. F. geôle, a prison, cage for birds. 'In the 13th cent. people spoke of the geôle d'un oiseau as well as of the geôle d'un prisonnier'; Brachet. [But it must be remembered that the 13th cent. spelling was not geôle, but gaole.]—Late L. gabiola, a cage, in a charter of A. D. 1229, cited by Brachet. A dimin. of Late L. gabia, for cavea, a cage; Ducange.—L. cauea, a cage, coop, lit. a hollow place, cavity.—L. cauus, hollow. See Cage, Cave, and Gabion. Der. gaol-er or jail-er.

GAPE, to yawn, open the mouth for wonder. (Scand.) ME. gapen, P. Plowman, B. i. 41.—Icel. gapa, Swed. gapa, Dan. gape, to gape. So also EFries., Du., Low G. gafen.+G. gaffen. Cf. Skt. jabh, jambh, to gape, yawn. Der. gap-er; and gaby, q. v. Also gap, sb., ME. gappe (dat.) in Chaucer, C. T. 1641 (A 1639); a word which is rather Scand. than E.; cf. Icel. and Swed. gap, a gap, breach, abyss, from gapa, vb.; Dan. gab, mouth, throat, gap, chasm, from gape, vb.

GAR (1), GARFISH, a kind of pike. (E.) A fish with a long slender body and pointed head. ME. garfysche; Prompt. Parv. Prob. named from AS. gār, a spear, from its shape; see Garlic. GAR (2), to cause. (Scand.) Common in Lowland Scotch; and see P. Plowman, B. i. 121; v. 130; vi. 303.—OIcel. gōrva (Noreen), Icel. gōra; Dan. gjøre; Swed. göra, to cause, make, do; lit. 'to make ready.'—Icel. gōrr, ready; cognate with E. yare. See Yare. So also AS. gearwan, gearwian, to make ready, from gearu, ready, yare; see below.

GARB (1), dress, manner, fashion. (F.—Ital.—OHG.) Used by Shak. to mean 'form, manner, mode of doing a thing' (Schmidt); Hamlet, ii. 2. 390; K. Lear, ii. 2. 103.—MF. garbe, 'a garbe, comeliness, handsomenesse, gracefulness, good fashion,' Cot.; (whence F. galbe, contour).—Ital. garbo, 'grace, handsomeness, garbe,' Florio.—OHG. garwī, garawī, preparation, getting ready, dress, gear; MHG. gerwe, garwe; allied to OHG. garawen, MHG. gerwen, to get ready.—OHG. garo, MHG. gar, gare, ready; cognate with E. yare. See Gear.

GARB (2), a sheaf. (F.—OHG.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. ME. garbe, in A. Neckam; Wright's Vocab. i. 113. An heraldic term.—AF. and Picard garbe (F. gerbe), a sheaf.—OHG. garba, a sheaf (G. garbe). Lit. a handful, or 'what is grabbed.' Cf. E. grab, Swed. gräbba, to grasp; Skt. grah (Vedic form grabh), to seize. See Grab. Brugm. i. § 531.

GARBAGE, offal, refuse. (F.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 5. 57. 'The garbage, alius, intestina,' Levins, 11. 13. Florio translates the Ital. tara by 'the tare, waste, or garbish of any merchandise or ware.' Palsgrave has: 'garbage of a foule,' i. e. a fowl's entrails. It agrees in form with OF. garbage, gerbage, a tax paid in garbs or sheaves; and is prob. similarly formed from OF. garbe, a handful, small bundle, Low L. garba, the same. See above.

GARBLE, to select for a purpose, to mutilate or corrupt an account. (F.—Ital.—Arab.—L.) The old sense was 'to pick out,' or 'sort,' so as to get the best of a collection of things. The statute 1 Rich. III, c. 11, was made 'for the remedie of the excessive price and badnesse of bowstaues, which partly is growen because the merchants will not suffer any garbeling [or sorting] of them to be made.' There was an officer called the Garbler of spices, whose business was to visit the shops, examine the spices, and garble, or make clean the same; mentioned an. 21 Jacob. c. 1. See Blount's Nomolexicon, where it is further explained that 'garbling of spice, drugs, &c. (1 Jacob. cap. 19) is nothing but to purifie it from the dross and dirt that is mixed with it.'—OF. garbeller (in Godefroy, entered by mistake under gerbele), usually garbeller, 'to garbell spices, also to examine precisely, sift neatly'; Cot. The same word as Span. garbillar, to sift, garble; Ital. garbellare, 'to garbel spices' (Torriano); and Low L. garbelläre, to sift, a word which occurs A. D. 1269 (Ducange). Cf. Span. garbillo, a coarse sieve, sifter.—Pers. gharbil, a sieve; Arab. ghirbāl, a large sieve; Arab. kirbāl, a sieve; gharbala, karbala, to sift. Prob. not an Arabic word, but adapted from L. cribellum, dimin. of cribrum, a sieve; allied to L. cernere, to sift. Rich. Dict., pp. 1046, 1177, 1178. See Riddle (2).

GARBOIL, a disturbance, commotion. (F.—Ital.) In Shak. Antony, i. 3. 61; ii. 2. 67.—OF. garbouil, 'a garboile, hurliburly, great stirre'; Cot. Cf. Span. garbullo, a crowd, multitude.—Ital. garbuglio, 'a garboile, . . . tumult, disorder'; Florio. β. Of uncertain origin. Referred by Diez to L. garr-ire, to prattle, chatter; in conjunction with bullire, to boil, bubble, boil with rage. γ. The latter part of the word is thus well accounted for; see Boil. The former part is less sure, and seems to be more directly from the Ital. gara, strife, since Florio has 'garabullare, to rave.' The source is probably imitative; see Jar, to creak.

GARDANT, in heraldry: looking full at the spectator. (F.—Teut.) Also guardant.—MF. gardant, pres. pt. of garder, 'to ward, watch, regard'; Cot. See Guard.

GARDEN, a yard, enclosure. (F.—Teut.) ME. gardin, Chaucer, C. T. 1053 (A 1051); King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1028.—AF., O. North F. (Norm. dial. and Picard) gardin; F. jardin.—OSax. gardo, a yard; cf. OHG. gartin, gen. and dat. of OHG. garto, a yard, garden (Diez). The stem gartin- was retained in compounds, such as OHG. gartin-āri, a gardener; and this prob. suggested a Late L. form **gard-inum* (with L. suffix -inum), whence the OF. form. β. The OSax. gardo is cognate with AS. geard, whence E. yard; see Yard. The substitution of OHG. t (as in gart-) for Low G. d is regular. Der. garden, vb.; garden-ing, garden-er.

GARFISH, a kind of pike. See Gar (1).

GARGLE, to rinse the throat. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) In Cotgrave. Modified from F. gargouiller, just as the ME. gargyle (a gargoyle) is from F. gargouille.—F. gargouiller, 'to gargle, or gargarize'; Cot.—F. gargouille; for which see Gargoyle. The ME. gargarise, used by Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 10, is from MF. gargarizer, to gargle (Cot.), borrowed (through L. gargarizāre) from Gk. γαργαρίζω, to gargle. From an imitative base, viz. Gk. γαργ-; cf. Gk. γαργαρέων, the uvula. Hence also Ital. garg-agliare, to murmur, garg-atta, the throat (see below). Der. gargle, sb.

GARGOYLE, in architecture, a projecting spout. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) ME. gargoyle, also spelt gargyll. The spelling gargoyle is in Lydgate's Siege of Troy, bk. ii. c. 11 (fol. F 5, back, col. 1); we read of 'gargylles of gold fierly faced with spoutes running' in Hall's Chron. Henry VIII, an. 19.—F. gargouille, 'the weesle or weason [weazand] of the throat; also, the mouth of a spout, a gutter'; Cot. Cf. Span. gargola, a gargoyle. β. We find, in Ital., not only gargatta, gargozza, the throat, windpipe, but also gorgozza, the throat, gullet, dimin. of gorga, the throat. Thus garg-ouille is from the imitative Gk. base γαργ- (see above), just as Ital. gorga and E. gorge are from the parallel L. base gurg-; see Gorge. (Körting, §§ 4169, 4401.)

GARISH, glaring, staring, showy. (Scand.) 'The garish sun'; Romeo, iii. 2. 25. 'Day's garish eye'; Milton, Il Penseroso, 141. Chaucer uses the form gauren, to stare; C. T. 5332 (B 912); with which cf. 'gaurish in colour,' Ascham, Scholemaster, ed. Arber, p. 54. Perhaps from Norw. gagra, to bend the head backwards (Ross); from gag, adj., bent backwards. From the attitude adopted in staring or gazing fixedly. The change ag>au is regular.

GARLAND, a wreath. (F.—Teut.?) In early use. ME. gerlond, Chaucer, C. T. 668 (A 666). The form gerlaundesche occurs in Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 23.—OF. garlande, 'a garland'; Cot. [The mod. F. guirlande is borrowed from Ital. ghirlanda.] Cf. Span. guirnalda, Ital. ghirlanda, a garland. β. Of uncertain origin; see the discussion of the word in Diez. It seems as if formed with a suffix -ande from a MHG. **wierel-en*, a supposed frequentative of wieren, to adorn; from OHG. wiara, MHG. wiere, gold wire, fine ornament. (Körting, § 10389.) Cf. E. wire. Der. garland, vb.

GARLIC, a plant of the genus Allium. (E.) Lit. 'spear-plant'; from the shape of the leaves. ME. garleek, Chaucer, C. T. 636 (A 634). AS. gārleac, used to translate L. allium in Ælfric's Glossary, Nomina Herbarum. — AS. gār, a spear; and leac, a leek, plant. + Icel. geirlaukr (similarly formed). See Gar (1), Gore, and Leek. ¶ The W. garleg is borrowed from E.

GARMENT, a robe, coat. (F.—Teut.) A corruption of ME. garnement, P. Plowman, C. x. 110. — OF. garnement, garniment, a robe, lit. a defence; formed (with suffix -ment = L. -mentum) from OF. garnir, to protect, garnish, adorn. See Garnish.

GARNER, a granary, store for grain. (F.—L.) ME. gerner; Chaucer, C. T. 595 (A 593). — OF. gernier, a variant of grenier, a granary (Supp. to Godefroy). — L. granārium, a granary. Doublet, granary, q. v. Der. garner, verb.

A corruption of granat, a form also used in E., and found in Cotgrave. — OF. grenat [also granat], 'a precious stone called a granat, or garnet;' Cot. Cf. Span. granate, Ital. granato, a garnet. — Late L. grānātus, a garnet. 'So called from its resemblance in colour and shape to the grains or seeds of the pomegranate;' Webster. — L. grānātus, having many grains or seeds; grānātum (for mālum grānātum), a pomegranate. — L. grānum, a grain; see Grain.

GARNISH, to embellish, decorate. (F.—Teut.) In Spenser, Verses addressed to Lord Ch. Howard, l. 2; Prompt. Parv. p. 188. Also spelt warnish in ME.; the pp. warnished is in Will. of Palerne, l. 1083. — OF. garnis, warnis-, stem of pres. pt. of garnir, guarnir, older form warnir, to avert, defend, fortify, garnish (Godefroy). — OHG. **warnōjan*, OHG. warnōn, to guard against; cf. OHG. warna, foresight, care. See Ware (2). Der. garnish, sb., garnish-ment, garnish-er; also garniture (Cotgrave), from F. garniture, 'garniture, garnishment' (Cot.), Low L. garnitūra, from Low L. garnire, to adorn, which is merely the F. word Latinised; also garnish-ee = 'the party in whose hands another man's money is attached' (Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715), barbarously formed on the model of a F. pass. part. as opposed to garnisher considered as an agent; also garment, q. v., and garrison, q. v.

GARRET, a room at the top of a house. (F.—OHG.) ME. garite (with one r), Prompt. Parv. p. 187; P. Plowman's Creed, ed. Skeat, 214. It properly means 'a place of look out,' or 'watch-tower.' — OF. garite, a place of refuge, place of look-out, watch-tower (F. guérite). — OF. garir, older spelling warir, to preserve, save, keep. — OHG. warjan, to defend; cf. AS. werian, to defend. Allied to Weir, q. v.

GARRISON, a supply of soldiers for defending a fort. (F.—Teut.) 1. ME. garrison, provision, in La Belle Dame sans Mercy, l. 175; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvii. 294 (footnote), where another spelling is warnyson, and other reading is varnyng. — OF. garrison, store, provision, supply (Norm. dial. garrison, Moisy). — OF. garnis-ant, pres. part. of garnir, to supply, garnish; see Garnish. Thus garrison is allied to garniture. 2. But it was supplanted by ME. garison or warison, defence, safety; from OF. garis-, pres. pt. stem of garir, to defend; see Garret.

GARROTE, GARROTE, a method of effecting strangulation. (Span.—C.) 'Garrote, a machine for strangling criminals, used in Spain. Many attempts to strangle were made by thieves called garrotters, in the winter of 1862–63. An act was passed in 1863 to punish these acts by flogging;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. [See garrot and garroter in Cotgrave.] — Span. garrote, a cudgel, tying a rope tight, strangling by means of an iron collar; Minsheu says, 'a cudgel to wind [twist] a cord.' Formed, with dimin. suffix -ote, from Span. garra, a claw, a talon, clutch, whence also the phrase echarle a uno la garra, to grasp, imprison; Minsheu has 'garra, a paw of a beast;' cf. Prov. garra, leg (Mistral). Of Celtic origin; connected with Breton gar, garr, W. and Corn. gar, the shank of the leg (Diez); Celtic type **garris*; Stokes-Fick, p. 107. See Garter. Der. garrotte, verb; garrotter. (Körting, § 4160.)

GARRULOUS, talkative. (L.) 1. Milton has garrulity, Sams. Agonistes, 491; and it occurs in Cotgrave, to translate F. garrulité, from L. acc. garrulitatem, talkativeness. 2. The adj. garrulous occurs in Chapman's Homer, Comment. on Iliad, b. iii; note 2. It is borrowed from L. directly, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, &c. — L. garrulus, talkative. Formed, with suffix -(u)lus, from garr-ire, to prattle. — ✓ GAR, to shout, call; whence also W. gar-m, an outcry, Irish gairm. Brugmann, i. § 638. Der. garrulousness; also garrul-ity, as above.

GARTER, a band round the leg, for fastening the hose. (F.—C.) 'Eek ther be knightes old of the garter;' The Flower and the Leaf (15th cent.), l. 519. Hoccleve has a poem addressed to 'Knights of the Garter.' The order was instituted by Edw. III, ab. 1344. — AF. garter, Stat. of the Realm, i. 380 (an. 1363); OF. gartier, in dialects of N. France (Hécart), Walloon gartier (Sigart), spelt jartier in Cotgrave, and explained by him as 'a garter;' mod. F. jarretière. Closely connected with OF. garet (Godefroy), mod. F. jarret, the ham of the leg. — Bret. gar, garr, the shank of the leg; cf. W. gar, the shank; see Garrote. Der. garter, verb, All's Well, ii. 3. 265.

GARTH, a yard, enclosure, fence. (Scand.) Northern; the pl. garthis is in Hampole, Psalm xxxvi. 2. — Icel. garðr, a yard. + AS. geard, a yard; see Yard.

GAS, an aeriform fluid. (Dutch.) The term is known to have been a pure invention. The Belgian chemist Van Helmont (died A.D. 1644) invented two corresponding terms, gas and blas; the former came into use, the latter was forgotten. We may call it a Dutch word, as gas is the Du. spelling. ¶ Van Helmont says that it was suggested by the Gk. chaos:—'Halitum illum gas vocavi, non longe a Chao veterum secretum;' Ortus Medicinæ, ed. 1652, p. 59 a (N.E.D.). Der. gas-e-ous, gas-o-meter.

GASCONADE, boasting, bragging. (Gascony.) 'That figure of speech which is commonly distinguished by the name of Gasconade;' The Tatler, no. 115 (part 2). — F. gasconnade, boasting; said to be a vice of the Gascons. — F. Gascon, an inhabitant of Gascony, formerly Vasconia. Der. gasconade, verb, gasconad-ing, gasconad-er.

GASH, to hack, cut deeply. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) 'His gashed stabs;' Macbeth, ii. 3. 119. A corruption of an older form garsh or garse. 'A garse or gashe, incisura;' Levins, 33. 14. 'Garsshe in wode or in a knife, hoche;' Palsgrave. The pl. sb. garcen (another MS. has garses) occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 258, in the sense of 'gashes caused by a scourge.' — OF. garser, to scarify, pierce with a lancet (Roquefort, and see jarser, garser in Godefroy); garscher, to chap, as the hands or lips (Cotgrave). Cf. Late L. garsa, scarification, or the making of numerous small incisions in the skin and flesh; an operation called by the Greeks ἐγχαράτις; Ducange. β. Origin obscure; it is possible that OF. garser represents Late L. caraxāre, short for incaraxāre, incharaxāre, to pierce, incise; from Gk. χαράσσειν, to furrow, scratch. See Character. ¶ Diez suggests a Late L. form **carptiāre*, founded on carpere, to pluck. Note ME. carsare, as a gloss to scarificator, Voc. 652. 7. Der. gash, sb.

GASP, to gape for breath. (Scand.) ME. gaspen, Gower, C. A. ii. 260; bk. v. 3975. Also gaipen (Northern), Allit. Morte Arthure, 1462. The latter is from Icel. and Norw. geispa, to yawn; Swed. gäspa; cf. Dan. gispe. The former suggests a cognate AS. **gāspan* (not found). Note that sp commonly represents an earlier ps; thus clasp is ME. clapsen, hasp was formerly haps, and asp is from aps. Hence Icel. geispa is for **geipsa*; from a Teut. base **geip* (weak grade gip); cf. Du. gippen, to gasp, AS. gipung, a gaping. Der. gasp, sb.

GASTRIC, belonging to the belly. (Late L.—Gk.) Coles (1684) has gastrick; so also Blount, ed. 1656. — Late L. gastricus, gastric; formed with suffix -ic from gastri = gastro-. — Gk. γαστρικός, for γαστήρ, the belly (stem γαστρέω). Der. from the same root, gastro-nomy; from Gk. γαστρό-, and -νομία, derivative of νόμος, usage.

GATE (1), a door, opening, way. (E.) [In Prov. E. and ME. we often find gate = a street; see below.] ME. gate, yate, yate. Spelt gate, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 237, l. 31; yate, Will. of Palerne, 3757; yēt, Ancien Riwle, p. 74. ME. gate, Ormulum, 12749. — Icel. and Norw. gata, Swed. gata, a way, path, street, lane; Dan. gade; cf. Goth. gatiwō, a street, G. gasse. Perhaps allied to Gate (1). β. Gate (1) answers to Teut. type **gatom*, n.; but gate (2) to Teut. type **gatiwōn*, f. See Gait, Gantlet (2).

GATHER, to draw into a heap, collect. (E.) Just as father corresponds to ME. fader, so gather corresponds to ME. gaderen or gaderien, to gather; as also mod. E. together corresponds to ME. togideres. 'And gadred hem alle togideres' = and gathered them all together; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 80. AS. gædrian, gaderian; Luke, vi. 44; Grein, i. 366, 373. β. Formed, with causal suffix -ian, from AS. gader, together, preserved in the compound gader-tang, associated with (Grein, i. 365), and also as gador- or geador, together (Grein, i. 491); see Together. γ. From a base gad-; cf. AS. gæd, society, fellowship, company; whence also the AS. ge-gada, a companion, and AS. gæd-el-ing, an associate, comrade; cf. Goth. gad-il-iggs (= gad-il-ings), a sister's son, Col. iv. 10. + Du. gaderen, to collect, from gader, together; Low G. gadden, to collect (Berghaus); the base appears in Du. gade, a spouse, consort; cf. G. gatte, a husband, gattin, a wife. The base **gad*- prob. meant 'fit' or 'suitable;' cf.

Low G. gad, pleasant (Berghaus); Russ. godnuii, suitable, OSlav. godŭ, fit season. See Good. Der. gather, sb.; gather-ing, gather-er.

T. 12323 (C 389). —OF. gaudir, to rejoice, to jest at. —L. gaudium, gladness, joy; used in Late L. of 'a large bead on a rosary; whence ME. gauded, furnished with large beads. 'A peire of bedes gauded al with grene;' Chaucer, C. T. 159. —L. gaudere, to rejoice, pt. t. gāuisus sum; from a base gau- + Gk. γῆθειν, to rejoice; allied to γαίειν (= γaf-íein), to rejoice; γαῦπος, proud. Brugmann, i. § 589. ii. § 694. Der. gaud-y, i.e. show-y; gaud-i-ly, gaud-i-ness.

GAUGE, GAGE, to measure the content of a vessel. (F.—Low L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 208 (where the old edd. have gage). Also Low L. gaugātum, the gauging of a wine-cask; gaugētum, a tribute paid for gauging, a gauge; gaugiātor, a gauger. Origin unknown. Cf. gaugour, a gauger; Stat. of the Realm, i. 331 (1353). Der. gaug-ing, gaug-er.

GAULT, clay and marl. See Galt (1).

GAUNT, thin, lean. (Scand.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 1. 74. 'His own gaunt eagle;' Ben Jonson, Catiline, iii. 1. 'Gawnt, or lene;' also 'Gawnte, or slendyr;' Prompt. Parv. p. 189. 'Gant, slim, slender;' Ray's South- and East-Country Words, ed. 1691. Also mentioned in Forby as a Norfolk, and in Moor as a Suffolk word; also in Yks. Linc. Lanc.; see E. D. D. It corresponds to Norweg. gand, a thin pointed stick, a tall and thin man, an overgrown stripling (Aasen); we also find Swed. dial. gank, a lean and nearly starved horse (Rietz). Cf. 'arm-gaunt steed,' i.e. slender in the fore-leg, Shak. Ant. and Cleop. i. 5. 48. Der. gaunt-ly, gaunt-ness.

GAUNTLET (1), an iron glove. (F.—Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 43. ME. gauntelet, Sir T. Malory, Morte Darthur, bk. xix. c. 4 (end). —OF. gantellet, 'a gantlet, or arming-glove;' Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffixes -el and -et, from OF. gant, a glove. Of Scand. origin. —OSwed. wante, a glove (Ihre); whence Low L. wantus and OF. gant by the usual change of w to g in French; see Garnish; Dan. vante, a mitten; Icel. vötr (stem vatt=vant), a glove. OTeut. type **wantuz*. β. The most probable source is Teut. **windan* (pt. t. wand), to wind, hence to involve, wrap, E. wind, verb. See Wind (2). Cf. G. gewand, a garment; Low G. want, cloth (Lübben). Noreen, § 257 (5).

GAUNTLET (2). (Scand.) In the phr. 'to run the gauntlet,' we have a corruption of an older gantlope. It appears as run the gantlope in Bailey (1735), Kersey (1715), Phillips (1706), and Blount (1674). Bailey correctly defines it as 'to run through a company of soldiers, standing on each side, making a lane, with each a switch in his hand to scourge the criminal.' See further under Gantlet (2).

GAUZE, a thin silken fabric. (F.—Palestine?) 'Gawz, a thin sort of silk-stuff;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. —MF. gaze, 'cushion canvas, the thin canvas that serves women for a ground unto their cushions or pursework; also, the sleight stuffe tiffany;' Cot. And see Hatzfeld. Perhaps so called because first brought from Gaza, in Palestine. Cf. Low L. gazētum, wine brought from Gaza; gazzātum, (perhaps) gauze. ¶ Several kinds of stuffs are named from places; e.g. damask from Damascus, calico from Calicut, &c.; but in this instance evidence is lacking.

GAVELKIND, a peculiar sort of tenure. (E.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Gavelkind, a tenure, or custom, whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons;' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. ME. gavelkind; earliest spelling gavelikind in 1205 (N. E. D.). The latter answers to AS. gafelgecynd; from AS. gafel, tribute, payment, and gecynd, kind, sort; see Kind. β. The AS. gaf-ol (whence Low L. gabulum) is from Teut. **gab-*, 2nd grade of the verb to give; see Give. ¶ Early misunderstood and misrepresented; and wrongly supposed to be of Celtic origin.

GAVOTTE, a kind of dance. (F.—Prov.) Spelt gavot in Arbutnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus, as quoted in Todd's Johnson. —MF. gavote, 'a kind of brawle [dance], danc'd, commonly, by one alone;' Cot. —Prov. gavoto, f. a gavotte (Mistral). Fem. of Gavot, a mountaineer of the Upper Alps (id.). Of historical origin; 'orig. a dance of the Gavotes, i.e. people of Gap;' Brachet. Gap is in the department of the Upper Alps, and in the old province of Dauphiné.

GAWK, awkward. (F.—Scand.) The orig. sense is left-handed. It is short for E. dial. gawk-handed, left-handed (E. D. D.); and gawk is contracted from gallack, gaulick, adj., left (of the hands); where -ick is a suffix (N. E. D.). Of F. origin; cf. Burgund. gôle, numb with cold, said of the fingers (Mignard). —Swed. Dan. valen, benumbed; whence Swed. dial. val-händt, Norw. val-hendt, having numbed hands. ¶ Not from F. gauche (N. E. D.). Der. gawk-y, awkward, ungainly.

Explained as 'a gazelle' in Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 440.

GAZETTE, a small newspaper. (F.—Ital.) 'As we read a gazett;' Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 1 (R.). [Ben Jonson has the (supposed) Ital. pl. gazetti; Volpone, v. 2 (l. 7 from end).] —MF. gazette, 'a certain Venetian coin scarce worth our farthing; also, a bill of news, or a short relation of the generall occurrences of the time, forged most commonly at Venice, and thence dispersed, every month, into most parts of Christendom;' Cot. β. The word is certainly from Ital. gazzetta, but that word has two meanings, viz. (1) 'a young piot or magot a pie' [mag-pie]; and (2) 'a small coine in Italie;' Florio. Now the value of the latter (less than a farthing) was so small, that Mr. Wedgwood's objection would seem to be sound, viz. 'that it never could have been the price either of a written or a printed sheet;' so that this (the usual) explanation is to be doubted. But in Hatzfeld, it is suggested that the coin gazzetta was paid, not for the gazette itself, but for the privilege of reading it; and it is added that it was a periodical which appeared at Venice about the middle of the 16th century. γ. Gazzetta, a small coin, is prob. a dimin. from L. gaza, treasure, wealth, a word borrowed from Gk. γάσα, wealth, a treasury; which, again, is said to be from Pers. ganj, a treasure. ¶ The word gazet, a small coin, occurs in Massinger, Maid of Honour, iii. 1 (speech by Jacomo), and in Ben Jonson, The Fox, ii. 1 (speech by Peregrine). Der. gazett-er, orig. a writer for a gazette, now used to denote a geographical dictionary (since 1704).

Note that the Du. dimin. suffix -ken was formerly used (as explained by Ten Kate) where the dimin. suffix -je now occurs; so that agurkje stands for an older form **agurkken*, whence the E. gherkin must have been borrowed, with the loss merely of initial a. Koolman gives agurken as the EFriesic form. γ. Sometimes explained from Gk. γῆ, the earth, as if the word meant 'earth-born.' Der. gigant-ic, q. v.; giant-ess.

GIAOUR, an infidel. (Ital. — Pers.) 'In Dr. Clarke's Travels, this word, which means infidel, is always written djour. Lord Byron adopted the Ital. spelling usual among the Franks of the Levant;' note 14 to Lord Byron's poem of The Giaour. — Pers. gāwr, an infidel; Rich. Dict. p. 1227. A variant of Pers. gabr, a Gueber; see Gueber.

GIBBERISH, nonsensical talk. (E.) Holinshed speaks of 'gibberish Irish'; Descr. of Ireland, c. 1. 'All kinds of gibb'rish he had learnt to know;' Drayton, The Mooncalf, l. 913. Cotgrave has: 'Bagois, gibridge, strange talke. The hard g seems to separate it from the old verb gibber, to gabble; Hamlet, i. 1. 116; which is allied to jabber and gabble. But the g in gibber may have been sometimes hard, as in gibble-gabble (N. E. D.). If so, the derivation is from gib-, variant of gab-, an imitative utterance; see Gabble. β. Johnson's derivation, from Gebir, an alchemist of the 8th cent., is unlikely, as the word is not spelt gebirish.

GIBBET, a gallows. (F.) ME. gebet, gibet, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 106; 'hongen on a gibet;' Ancrén Riwlé, p. 116. — OF. gibbet, 'a gibbet'; Cot. (mod. F. gibet). β. Of unknown origin; Littré suggests a comparison with OF. gibet, a large stick (Roquefort); apparently a dimin. of OF. gibbe, a sort of arm, an implement for stirring the earth and rooting up plants, apparently a hoe (Roquefort). Perhaps Scand.; cf. Swed. dial. gippa, to jerk up, Norw. gippa, gjeppa, to jerk up. This form gippa seems to be imitated from Swed. vippa, to see-saw, to tilt up; cf. MDu. wippe, 'a gibbet' (Hexham), Swed. vipp-galge, a gibbet.

GIBBON, a kind of ape. (F.) Cf. F. gibbon, in Buffon.

GIBBOUS, humped, swelling. (F. — L.) 'Its round and gibbous back;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 26. § 5. The suffix -ous is for F. -eux, by analogy with other words in which -ous represents OF. -ous (later -eux). — F. gibbeux, 'hulch, bunched, much swelling'; Cot. — L. gibbōsus, hunched. Formed, with suffix -ōsus, from L. gibbus, a hump, hunch; cf. gibbus, bent; gibber, a hump. Der. gibbous-ness.

GIBE, to mock, taunt. (E.) 'And common courtiers love to gybe and fleare;' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 714. Of imitative origin; cf. EFries. gibeln, to mock; Du. gijbelen, to sneer. Note also Swed. dial. gipa, to gape, also, to talk rashly and foolishly (Rietz); Icel. geipa, to talk nonsense; Icel. geip, idle talk; Norw. geipa, to make grimaces. ¶ Also spelt jibe. Der. gibe, sb.

GIBLETS, the various parts of a fowl that are removed before cooking. (F.) 'And set the hare's head against the goose gyblets;' Harrington's tr. of Orlando Furioso, b. xliii. st. 136 (R.); the date of the 1st edition is 1591. 'May feed on giblet-pie;' Dryden, tr. of Persius, vi. 172. 'Sliced beef, giblets, and pettitoes;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman-hater, i. 2. ME. giblet; see Wright's Vocab. i. 179. — OF. giblet, which, according to Littré, is the old form of F. gibelotte, stewed rabbit. Of unknown origin; not necessarily related to F. gibier, game.

GIDDY, unsteady, dizzy. (E.) ME. gidi, gydi; Rob. of Glouc. p. 68; l. 1542. Late AS. gidig, frantic; in Napier's Glosses; for earlier **gydig*, as shown by the hard g. Teut. type **gudigoz*, i.e. possessed by a god (like Gk. ἐνθεός). — Teut. type **gudom*, a god. See God. Der. giddy-ly, giddy-ness.

GIER-EAGLE, a kind of eagle. (Du. and F.) In Levit. xi. 18. The first syllable is Dutch, from Du. gier, a vulture; cognate with G. geier, MHG. gîr, a vulture. Allied to G. gier-ig, greedy, and to E. Yearn. See Gyrfalcon. The word eagle is F. See Eagle.

GIFT, a thing given, present. (E.) ME. gift, commonly gîft, jeft; Rob. of Glouc. p. 122, l. 2600; P. Plowman, B. iii. 99. [The word is perhaps rather Scand. than E.] AS. gift, gyft, rare in the sing., but common in the pl. (when it often has the sense of 'nuptials,' with reference to the marriage dowry). In Bosworth's Dict. is given a passage from the Laws of Ine, no. 31, in which the word gyft appears as a fem. sing., with the sense of 'dowry;' see Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 122, sect. 31. Or from Icel. gift, gîft (pron. gift), a gift. + Du. gift, a gift, present; Goth. -gibts, -gifts, only in comp. fragibts, fragifts, promise, gift, espousal; G. -gift, in comp. mitgift, a dowry. β. All from the corresponding verb, with the suffix -t, for -ti; Teut. type **giftiz*, fem. See Give. Der. gift-ed; heaven-gifted, Milton, Samson Agon. 36.

GIG, a light carriage, a light boat. (Scand.) The orig. idea is that of anything that easily whirls or twirls about. In Shak. gig means a boy's top; L. L. L. iv. 3. 167; v. 1. 70, 73. Cf. whirligig. [In Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 852, we have: 'This hous was also ful of giggis;' where the sense is uncertain; it may be 'full of whirling things;' since we find 'ful . . . of other werkinges' = full of other movements, immediately below.] β. The hard g shows it to be of Scand. origin, as distinguished from jig, the French form. Cf. Norw. giga, to totter, shake about; gigra, gigla, to shake about (Ross); the latter is the prov. E. giggle, to shake about, be unsteady; E. D. D. Also Norw. geiga, to swing one's arms about (Ross). See Jig.

GIGANTIC, giant-like. (L. — Gk.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 659; Sams. Agon. 1249. A coined word, from the decl. stem giganti- of L. gigas, a giant; see Giant.

GIGGLE, to laugh lightly, titter. (E.) 'Giggle, to laugh out, laugh wantonly;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. 'A set of giggers;' Spectator, no. 158. 'Some gygyll and lawgh;' Barclay, Ship of Fools, i. 63. An attenuated form of ME. gagelen, 'to gaggle,' or make a noise like a goose. 'Gagelin, or cryn as gees, clingo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 184. Cf. Icel. gagl, a goose; EFries. gicheln, Low G. giggeln (Danneil), G. kichern, to giggle. A frequentative form, from an imitative root. See Cackle. Der. giggle, sb., giggle-er.

GIGLET, GIGLOT, a wanton woman. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. v. 352; 1 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 41. Earlier, in Prompt. Parv. p. 194; and see the note. Cf. giglotrye, giddiness; How the Good Wife taught her Daughter, l. 159 (in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat). A dimin., with suffix -et or -ot, from an older giggle or gigle. Cotgrave has: 'Gadrouillette, a minx, gigle, flirt, callet, gixie.' Here again, gig-le and gixie (= gig-sy) are connected with ME. gigge, a flighty girl, Plowman's Tale, 759 (cf. Ancrén Riwlé, p. 204; N. E. D.). Prob. from the base gig, applied to rapid motion, and thence to lightness of behaviour. See Gig, Giggle.

GILD, to overlay with gold. (E.) ME. gilden, Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 29. AS. gyldan; only in the pp. gegylde, A. S. Psalter, ed. Spelman, xlv. 11 (xlv. 9); and in comp. be-gyldan, ofer-gyldan. Teut. type **gulthjan-*. The y is the usual substitution, by vowel-change, for an original u, which appears in the Goth. gulth, gold. Cf. Icel. gylla (for gylda), to gild. See Gold. Der. gilt, contracted form of gild-ed; gild-er, gild-ing.

GILL (1), an organ of respiration in fishes. (Scand.) 'Gylle of a fische, branchia;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt gile, Wyclif, Tobit, vi. 4. Allied to Dan. giælle, a gill; Swed. gäl; MDan. galle, MSwed. gel. Cf. Gk. χέλος, Æolic χέλλος, a lip.

GILL (2), a ravine, yawning chasm. (Scand.) Also spelt ghyll; common in place-names, as Dungeon Ghyll. — Icel. gil, a deep narrow glen with a stream at the bottom; Norw. gil; and cf. Icel. geil, a ravine; Swed. dial. gilja, a defile.

GILL (3), with g soft; a quarter of a pint. (F. — L.?) ME. gille, gylle; P. Plowman, B. v. 346 (where it is written Iille = jille). — OF. gelle, a sort of measure for wine; Roquefort. Cf. Low L. gillo, a wine-vessel; gella, a wine-vessel, wine-measure; Ducange. Godefroy equates OF. gille, gelle with OF. gerle, a jar; cf. Ital. gerla, a basket. Possibly from Late L. gerula, a basket carried on the back, also, a measure of wine (Ducange). From L. gerere, to carry (Körting, § 4233).

GILL (4), with g soft; a woman's name; ground-ivy. (F. — L.) The name Gill is short for Gillian, which is in Shak. Com. Errors, iii. 1. 31. And Gillian is from F. Juliane, from L. Iuliana. This personal fem. name is formed from L. Iulius; see July. β. The ground-ivy was hence called Gill-creep-by-the-ground (Halliwell); or briefly Gill. Hence also Gill-ale, the herb ale-hoof (Hall.); Gill-burnt-tail, an ignis fatuus; Gill-hooter, an owl; Gill-flirt, a wanton girl; flirt-gill, the same, Romeo, ii. 4. 162. St. Juliana's day is Feb. 16.

GILLIE, a boy, page, menial. (C.) Used by Sir W. Scott; but Spenser also speaks of 'the Irish horse-boys or cuilles, as they call them;' View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 641, col. 2. — Gael. gille, giolla, Irish giolla, a boy, lad, youth, man-servant, lacquey; OIrish gilla, a servant.

GILLYFLOWER, a kind of flower, a carnation, a stock. (F. — L. — Gk.) Spelt gelliflowres in Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, 137. Spelt gilloflower by Cotgrave. By the common change of r to l, gilloflower stands for giroflower, spelt gerafloure in The Kingis Quair, st. 190; where the ending flower is a mere E. corruption, like the fish in crayfish, q. v. — MF. giroflée, 'a gilloflower; and most properly, the clove gilloflower;' Cot. β. Here we have clove-gilloflower as the full form of the name, which is Chaucer's clowe gilofre, C. T. 13692 (B 1952); thus confirming the above derivation. γ. From F. clou de girofle, where clou is from L. clāuus, a nail (see Clove); and girofle is from Late L. caryophyllum, a Latinised form of Gk. καρύφυλλον, strictly 'nut-leaf,' a clove-tree. (Hence the name means 'nut-leaf,' or 'nut-leaved clove.') — Gk. κάρυο-, for κάρυον, a nut; and φύλλον, a leaf (= L. folium, whence E. foli-age).

GIMBALS, a contrivance for suspending a ship's compass so as to keep it always horizontal. (F. — L.) The contrivance is one which admits of a double movement. The name gimbals is formed (with excrecent b) from the older word gimmals, also called a gemmow or gemmow-ring. See also gimbol and gimmal in Halliwell; and the remarks in Nares. 'Gemmow, or Gemmow-ring, a double ring, with two or more links;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. In Shak. 'a gimmal bit' is a horse's bit made with linked rings; Hen. V, iv. 2. 49. 'Item, . . . pro haspis, gemewis, et clavis;' Earl of Derby's Expeditions, p. 221, l. 29 (1392). The forms gemmow and gimmal correspond to MF. gemeau and OF. gemel, a twin. — L. gemellus, a twin; a dimin. form from L. geminus, double. See Gemini.

GIMLET, GIMBLET, a tool for boring holes. (F.—Teut.) 'And see there the gimblets, how they make their entry;' Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, i. 1. ME. gymlot, Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, l. 357. — MF. gimbelet, 'a gimlet or piercer;' Cot. = mod. F. gibelet (by loss of m). Formerly (better) spelt guimbelet (Godefroy); Norm. dial. guimblet, vimblet (Moisy). Spelt guinbelet in 1412 (Godefroy). A dimin. of wimble, as shown by the Norm. dial. vimbl-et. See Wimble. And cf. Icel. vindla, to wind up, Norw. vindel, a gimlet (Ross).

GIMMAL, GIMMAL-RING; see Gimbals.

GIMP (with hard g), a kind of trimming, made with twisted silk, wool, or cotton. (F.—Teut.) 'My guimp petticoat;' Dryden, Marriage-a-la-Mode, iii. 1. 'Gimp, a sort of mohair thread covered with the same, or a twist for several works formerly in use;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. [It seems to have been influenced by confusion with F. guimpe, a wimple, OF. guimpe, whence OF. guimpler, to adorn, attire (Godefroy), and MF. guimpier, a maker of wimples. See Wimple.] Cf. also Low G. gimpen, gimp (Berghaus). In sense it answers to the F. guipure, a thread of silk lace. The F. guipure is of Teutonic origin, from the base **wip-*, to twist or bind round, appearing in Goth. weipan, to crown. See Guipure.

GIN (1), to begin. (E.; pron. with g hard.) Obsolete; or only used as a supposed contraction of begin, though really the orig. word whence begin is formed. It need not be denoted by gin; the apostrophe should be omitted. Common in Shak. Macb. i. 2. 25, &c. ME. ginnen; Chaucer, C. T. 3020 (A 3018). AS. -ginnan, to begin; only used in the compounds on-ginnan, to begin, Matt. iv. 7; and be-ginnan, to begin; so that perhaps ME. ginnen is for a-ginnen. + Du. be-ginnen; the simple ginnen being unused; OHG. bi-ginnan; G. be-ginnen; Goth. -ginnan, only in the comp. du-ginnan, to begin. See Brugmann, i. § 376. Der. be-gin.

GIN (2), a trap, snare. (F.—L.) ME. gin; 'uele ginnas heþ þe dyeucl uor to nime þet uolk' = many snares hath the devil for to catch the people; Ayenbite of Inwytt, ed. Morris, p. 54. (Pron. jin.) Also in a far wider sense, and certainly a contraction of F. engin < L. ingenium, a contrivance or piece of ingenuity. Thus, in describing the mechanism by which the horse of brass (in the Squieres Tale) was moved, we are told that 'therein lyth th'effect of al the gin' = therein is the pith of all the contrivance; C. T. 10636 (F 322). See Engine. ¶ Particularly note the use of the word in P. Plowman, B. xviii. 250; 'For gygas the geaunt with a gynne engyned' = for Gigas the giant contrived by a contrivance.

GIN (3), a kind of spirit. (F.—L.) Formerly called geneva, whence gin was formed by contraction. Pope has gin-shops; Dunciad, iii. 148. 'Geneva, a kind of strong water;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. So called by confusion with the town in Switzerland of that name; but really a corruption. — MF. genevre, 'juniper;' Cot. [It is well known that gin is flavoured with berries of the juniper.] — L. iuniperum, acc. of iuniperus, a juniper. See Juniper.

GINGER, the root of a certain plant. (F.—L.—Gk.—Skt.—Malayalam.) So called in Skt. (but by a popular etymology) because shaped like a horn; the resemblance to a deer's antler is striking. In early use. ME. ginger; whence ginger-bred (ginger-bread); Chaucer, C. T. 13783 (B 2044). An older form gingiuere (= gingivere) occurs in the Ancien Riwele, p. 370. — OF. gingibre, gingibre (Supp. to Godefroy, s.v. gingembre); Norm. dial. gengivre (Moisy, ed. 1895); mod. F. gingembre. — Late L. gingiber; L. zingiber, ginger. — Gk. ζῳγγίβερις, ginger. — Skt. çṛṇṇāvāra, ginger. — Skt. çṛṇṇāga, a horn; and vāra, body (i.e. shape); adapted from Malayalam inchi-ver, green ginger; from inchi, a root (Yule). Der. ginger-bread.

GINGERLY, with soft steps. (F.—L.) 'Go gingerly;' Skelton, Garl. of Laurell, l. 1203; see Dyce's note. Palsgrave has: 'Gyngerly, a pas menu; as, allez a pas menu, ma fille.' Prob. formed, with E. suffix -ly, from OF. gensor, genzor, properly a comparative from OF. gent, but also itself used as a positive, with the sense 'pretty, delicate.' — OF. gent, gentle, orig. well-born. — Folk-L. gentum, for L. genitum, acc. of genitus, born, pp. of gignere, to beget. See Gentle. (So in N. E. D.; cf. gent in Hatzfeld.)

GINGHAM, a kind of cotton cloth. (F.—Malay.) Spelt gingham in 1615 (Yule). — F. guingan. — Malay ginggang, a striped or checkered cotton. (C. P. G. Scott.)

GINGLE, another spelling of Jingle, q. v.

GIPSY, the same as Gypsy, q. v.

GIRAFFE, the camelopard, an African quadruped with long neck and legs. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'Giraffa, an Asian beast, the same with Camelopardus;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. First in 1594, spelt gyraffa; spelt giraffe in 1605. [Here giraffa = Span. girafa. We now use the F. form.] — MF. giraffe (F. girafe). — Span. girafa. — Arab. zarāf or zarāfa(t), a camelopard; Rich. Dict. p. 772, col. 2. See Dozy, who gives the forms as zarāfa, zorāfa, and notes that it is also called jorāfa.

GIRD (1), to enclose, bind round, surround, clothe. (E.) ME. gurden, girden, gerden; the pp. girt is in Chaucer, C. T. 331 (A 329). AS. gyrdan, to gird, surround; Grein, i. 536. + Du. gorden; Icel. gyrða, to gird; Dan. gjorde; Swed. gjorda; G. gürten; OSax. gurdian. β. These are weak verbs, of which the Teut. type is **gurdjan-*; from **gurd-*, weak grade of Teut. **gerdan-* (pt. t. **gard*) to enclose; as in Goth. bi-gairdan, to begird. Der. gird-er; gird-le, q. v.; girth, q. v. From the same root we also have garden, yard; and even horticulture, cohort, court. See Yard (1).

GIRD (2), to jest at, jibe. (E.) A peculiar use of ME. girden, gurden, to strike, cut. 'Gurdeth of Gyles hed,' cut off Guile's head; P. Plowman, B. ii. 201. Of obscure origin. Hence, to gird at = to strike at, jest at; a gird is a cut, sarcasm; Tam. Shrew, v. 2. 58. ¶ Not from AS. gerd, gyrd, a rod, as that became E. yard (2); a connexion with MDu. geerde, a rod (Hexham) is possible; but not very probable.

GIRDLE, a band for the waist. (E.) ME. girdel, gerdel; Chaucer, C. T. 360 (A 358). AS. gyrdel, a girdle; Mark, i. 6. + Du. gordel; Icel. gyrðill; Swed. gördel; G. gürtel. β. From the AS. gyrdan, to gird, with suffix -el; see Gird (1). Allied to girth.

GIRL, a female child, young woman. (E.) ME. gerle, girle, gyrle, formerly used of either sex, and signifying either a boy or girl. In Chaucer, C. T. 3767 (A 3769) gerl is a young woman; but in C. T. 666 (A 664), the pl. girlas means young people of both sexes. In Will. of Palerne, 816, and King Alisaunder, 2802, it means 'young women;' in P. Plowman, B. i. 33, it means 'boys;' cf. B. x. 175. Answering to an AS. form **gyr-el-*, Teut. **gur-wil-*, a dimin. form from Teut. base **gur-*. Cf. NFries. gōr, a girl; Pomeran. goer, a child; O. Low G. gōr, a child; see Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 528. Cf. Swiss gurre, gurrl, a depreciatory term for a girl; Sanders, G. Dict. i. 609, 641; also Norw. gorre, a small child (Aasen); Swed. dial. gärrä, gurre (the same). Root uncertain. Der. girl-ish, girl-ish-ly, girl-ish-ness, girl-hood.

GIRON, GYRON, in heraldry, an eighth part of a shield. (F.—OHG.) It is made by drawing a diagonal line from the top (dexter) corner to the centre, and from the centre horizontally to the same side; a right-angled triangle. Spelt gyron, geron in Blount (1681). — MF. gyron, guyron, 'a tearme of blasonrie;' Cot. — MHG. gēre, OHG. gēro, G. gehre, a gusset, a gore. — OHG. gēr, a spear; see Gore (2).

GIRTH, the measure round the waist; the bellyband of a saddle. (Scand.) ME. gerth. 'His gerth and his stiropes also;' Richard Coer de Lion, 5733; and see Prompt. Parv. This is a Scand. form. — Icel. gjörð, a girdle, girth; gerð, girth round the waist; Swed. gjord; Dan. giord, a girth. + Goth. gairda, a girdle, Mark, i. 6. Teut. type **gerdā*, f. From the Teut. base **gerd-*, to enclose; see Gird. Der. girth, verb; also written girt. Allied to girdle.

GIST, the main point or pith of a matter. (F.—L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. A legal term (see Blackstone, Comment. iv. 333) denoting the real ground of an indictment, or the point wherein the action lies. — OF. gist (F. gît), it lies. Cf. the old F. proverb, given by Cotgrave, s. v. lievre. 'Je scay bien ou gist le lievre, I know well which is the very point, or knot of the matter,' lit. I know well where the hare lies. This gist is the mod. F. gît, and similarly we have, in modern French, the phrase 'tout gît en cela,' the whole turns upon that; and again, 'c'est là que gît le lievre,' there lies the difficulty, lit. that's where the hare lies; Hamilton's F. Dict. β. From the vb. gēsir, to lie, of which the 3 pers. pres. was gist (mod. F. gît). — L. iacēre, to lie; an intransitive verb allied to iacere, to throw. See Jet (1).

GITTERN, a kind of guitar. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. giteren (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 12400 (C 466); P. Plowman, B. xiii. 233. — OF. guiterne, a guitar (Godefroy). A variant of cittern or cithern; see Cithern and Guitar.

GIVE, to bestow, impart, deliver over. (E.) ME. yeuen, yiuen, yeuen, yiuen (with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 232. In old Southern and Midland English, the g almost always appears as y (often written ȝ); the modern hard sound of the g seems to be due to the influence of Northern English. 'Gifand and takand woundis wyd;' Barbour's Bruce, xiii. 160. The pt. t. is yaf or yaf, Northern gaf, changing to yeuen or yeuen in the pl. number; pp. yiuen, ȝiuen, ȝouen, yoven, rarely ȝifen, gifen. AS. giefan, geofan, giefan, gifan, Grein, i. 505; pt. t. ic geaf, pl. wē geāfon, pp. gifen. + Du. geven; Icel. gefa; Dan. give; Swed. giva; Goth. giban; G. geben. Teut. type **geban-*, pt. t. **gab*. Cf. OIrish gab-im, I give, I take. Der. giv-er; also gif-t, q. v.

GIZZARD, a second stomach in birds. (F.—L.) Spelt gisard in Minshew. The d is excrescent. ME. giser. 'The fowl that highte voltor that eteth the stomak or the giser of Tityus' = the bird that is named the vulture, that eats the stomach or gizzard of Tityus; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12. l. 28.—OF. gezier, jugier, juisier (mod. ME. glace, OF. glacier, to glide, slip, glance (Godefroy).—F. glace, ice.—Folk-L. glacia, for L. glaciēs; see Glacier. ¶ The ME. glenten answers to the causal form of the str. vb. glinta, still in use in Swed. dial. Der. glass-blow-er, glass-wort, glass-y, glass-i-ness; also glaze = ME. glasen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 49, 61; whence glaz-ing, glaz-i-er (= glaz-er, like bow-y-er, law-y-er = bow-er, law-er).

GLAUCOUS, grayish blue. (L.—Gk.) A botanical word; see Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. First in 1671 (Ray). 'To gleame corne, spicili-gere;' Levins, 208. 20. 'To gleme corne, spicilegium facere; Gleamer of corne, spicilegus;' Huloet. Apparently due to some confusion with gleam; cf. prov. E. gleen, to shine (E. D. D.). Der. glean-er.

GLEEK (1), a scoff, a jest. (F.—Du. ?) It means a 'scoff' in Shak. 1 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 123; 'a glance of the eye' in Beaum. and Fletcher, Maid in the Mill, ii. 2. See examples in Nares. Prob. a peculiar use of the word below. To gleek sometimes meant to beat at the game of glee.

GLEEK (3), a game at cards. (F.—Du.) So in Ben Jonson, Alchem. v. 2 (Subtle); it is said that Catharine of Arragon played 'at gleeke'; Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, sect. liv; vol. iii. p. 258, note c, ed. 1840. See Nares. The earliest quotation in N.E.D. is dated 1533; but we find mention of the card-games 'post and glyeke' in Roy, Rede Me (ed. Arber), p. 117 (1528). It should rather have been spelt glik, but the E. ee represents the F. i. The expression 'I shall gleek some of you' occurs in Greene's Tu Quoque (Nares).—OF. glic, an old F. game at cards (mentioned in Rabelais, bk. i. c. 22), Roquefort; also spelt ghelicque (Godefroy). One object in the game was to get three cards alike (as three kings); this was called a gleek.—MDu. gelijck, alike.—MDu. ge-, ghe-, prefix (=AS. ge-, G. ge-, Goth. ga-); and MDu. -lijck, Du. -lijk, cognate with E. like; see Like. ¶ Hexham has MDu. gelijk ofte ongelijk spelen, 'to play at even or odds.'

GLIB (1), smooth, slippery, voluble. (E.) The orig. sense is 'slippery'; Shak. has 'glib and oily'; K. Lear, i. 1. 227; 'glib and slippery'; Timon, i. 1. 53. We also find glibbery. 'What, shall thy lubrical and glibbery muse, &c.'; Ben Jonson, Poetaster, Act v (Tibullus). A native word; common in dialects; see E. D. D. Cf. EFries. glibberig, slippery; glippen, to slip.—Du. glibberig, slippery; glibberen, to slide; related to glippen, to slip away; Low G. glibbrig, slippery (Berghaus), glippig, glib, smooth (Schambach), Low G. glippen, v.; Dan. glippe, to fall, to slip. β. We also find a somewhat similar prov. E. gliddery, slippery, which is related to AS. glidan, to glide. Der. glib-ly, glib-ness.

GLIB (2), a lock of hair. (C.) 'Long glibbes, which is a thick curled bush of heare, hanging downe over their eyes'; Spenser, View of State of Ireland; Globe ed. p. 630, col. 2.—Irish and Gael. glib, also Irish clib, a bushy lock of hair.

GLIB (3), to castrate; obsolete. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 1. 149. The g is merely prefixed, and may have been suggested by Du. ge-, as in MDu. ge-lubi, 'gelt'; Hexham. The orig. form is lib. 'Accaponare, to capon, to gelde, to lib, to spleaie'; Florio, ed. 1612. Here lib answers to an AS. **lybban*, where y arose, by mutation, from an older u. Clearly cognate with Du. lubben, to castrate. See Left, adj.

GLIDE, to slide, flow smoothly. (E.) ME. gliden, pt. t. glod or glood; Chaucer, C. T. 10707 (F 393). AS. glidan, Grein, i. 516.—Du. gliden; Dan. glide; Swed. glida; G. gleiten. Teut. type **gleidan-*, pt. t. **glaid*, pp. **glidanoz*.

GLIMMER, to shine faintly. (E.) ME. glimeren, whence the pres. part. glimerand, Will. of Palerne, 1427. The AS. form does not occur.—Low G. glimmern, frequent. of glimmen, to shine; MSwed. glimra (Ihre); Dan. glimre, to glimmer; glimmer, glitter, also mica; Swed. dial. glimmer, to glitter, glimmer, a glimmer, glitter; Swed. glimmer, mica (from its glitter); G. glimmer, a glimmer, mica; glimmern, to glimmer. β. The simple forms appear in Dan. glimme, to shine, Swed. glimma, to glitter, Du. glimmen, G. glimmen, to shine. Cf. also prov. G. glimm, a spark (Flügel); Swed. dial. glim, a glance (Rietz). We even find the sb. glim, brightness, in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1088; and AS. gleomu (for **glimu*), splendour. All from Teut. **glim-*, weak grade of **gleim-*; see Gleam. Der. glimmer, sb.; and see below.

GLIMPSE, a short gleam, weak light; hurried glance or view. (E.) The p is excrement; the old word was glimse. ME. glimsen, to glimpse; whence the sb. glimsing, a glimpse. 'Ye have som glimsing, and no parfit sighte'; Chaucer, C. T. 10257 (E 2383). Formed by suffixing -s- to the base glim-. See above.

GLINT, to glance, to shine. (Scand.) Obsolete; but important as having influenced the form of glance; see Glance. For ME. glenten, to move quickly aside, to glance aside; in later E., to shine. 'Hir eyen glente Asyde'; Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1223; cf. Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 70, 114, 671, 1026; B. 218.—Swed. dial. glänta, glinta, to slip or glance aside.—G. glänzen, to make bright; from G. glanz, brightness. β. We also find (really from a different root) MDan. glinte, to shine, a nasalised form of glit- (in glitter); MHG. glinzen, to shine.

GLISSADE, a sliding; a gliding step. (F.—Teut.) F. glissade, a sliding.—F. glisser, to slide, glide. From OF. glie-, to glide; influenced by OF. glacier, F. glacer, to slide (Hatzfeld). β. OF. glie- is from OHG. glitan (G. gleiten), to glide; see Glide. OF. glacier is from glace, ice; see Glacier. ¶ It seems simpler to derive glisser from Low G. glidschen or glisken, both meaning 'to glide,' and secondary formations from the weak grade of Teut. **gleidan-*.

GLISTEN, GLISTER, to glitter, shine. (E.) These are mere extensions from the E. base glis-, to shine, which appears in ME. glisien, to shine; 'in glysynde wede'=in glistening garment; An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 91, l. 21. AS. glisian, to shine; Voc. 121. 25; glisnian, to gleam, Grein, i. 516; cf. Swed. dial. glis-a, to shine. A. Glisnian is formed from the base glis- by the addition of the n so often used to extend such bases; and hence we had ME. glisnien, with pres. part. glisnande, glittering; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 165. This ME. glisnien gave a later E. glissen, but the word is now spelt glis-t-en, with an excrement t, which is usually, however, not sounded. β. Similarly, from the base glis-, with suffixed -t and the frequentative -er, was formed ME. glisteren or glistren. 'The water glistred over al'; Gower, C. A. ii. 252; bk. v. 3734. Cf. MDu. glisteren (Oudemans); now nasalised into mod. Du. glinsteren, to glitter.

GLITTER, to gleam, sparkle. (Scand.) ME. gliteren (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 979 (A 977); 'glytered and glent'; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 604.—Icel. glitra, to glitter; frequentative of glita, to shine, sparkle; Swed. glittra, to glitter; glitter, sb. glitter, spangle. Cf. AS. glitinian, to glitter, Mark, ix. 3; Goth. glitmunjan, to shine, Mark, ix. 3. β. Shorter forms appear in AS. glitian, to shine, Mone, Quellen, p. 355; Icel. glit, sb. glitter. γ. All from Teut. base **glit-*, weak grade of **gleit-*, as in OSax. glitan, G. gleissen, to shine. Cf. Gk. χλιδ-ή, luxury. From Idg. base GHLEI, whence also gleam. See Gleam. Der. glitter, sb.; and see glisten, glister.

GLOAMING, twilight. (E.) 'Darker gloaming brought the night'; Burns, Twa Dogs, 232. But Hogg has: 'Tween the gloaming and the mirk'; Song. Here the gloaming means the evening glow of sunset. 'Fra the glomyng of the nycht'; Wyntoun, Chron. iv. 7. 827. The oa is from AS. short o; as in æfen-gloμμung, twilight, in A. S. Hymnary (Surtees Soc.), 16. 16. But the ō is usually long; as in æfen-glōm, evening glow, twilight; Grein, i. 64. Here glō-m is from Teut. root glō-, as in AS. glōwan, to glow. See Glow. ¶ Distinct from Gloom.

GLOAT, to stare, gaze with admiration. (Scand.) Also spelt glote. 'So he glotes [stares], and grins, and bites'; Beaum. and Fletcher, Mad Lover, ii. 2. 'Gloting [peeping] round her rock'; Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odyssey, xii. 150.—Icel. glotta, to grin, smile scornfully; Swed. dial. glotta, glutta, to peep (Rietz); G. glotzen, to stare (Flügel).

GLOBE, a ball, round body. (F.—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 153.—OF. globe, 'a globe, ball'; Cot.—L. globum, acc. of globus, a ball; allied to glomus, a ball, clue. See below. L. v. 753, also written glob-ous, id. v. 649; glob-y; glob-ule (L. glob-ul-us, dimin. of globus); glob-ul-ar, glob-ul-ous, glob-ul-ar-i-ty.

ME. gloumen, to lower, as in 'The wedire gloumes', Wars of Alexander, 4142; also gloumben (with excrement b), to frown; Rom. of the Rose, 4356. The ME. gloumen answers to AS. **glūmian* (not found); cf. E. room < ME. roum < AS. rūm. Allied to Glum. Der. gloom-y, Shak. Lucrece, 803; gloom-i-ly, gloom-i-ness; but not gloom-ing.

GLORY, renown; fame. (F.—L.) ME. glorie, Ancren Riwle, p. 358.—OF. glorie, later gloire.—L. glōria, glory; prob. for **clōria*; cf. L. inclutus (in-clu-tus), renowned; Gk. κλέος, glory; κλυτός, renowned; Irish clū, glory (Bréal). Der. glori-ous, in early use, Rob. of Glouc. p. 483; glori-ous-ly, P. GNARLED, twisted, knotty. (E.) 'Gnarled oak;' Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 116. Gnarled means 'full of gnarls,' where gnar-l is a dimin. form of gnar or knar, a knot in wood. ME. knarre, a knot in wood; Wyclif, Wisdom, xiii. 13; whence the adj. knarry, full of knots. 'With knotty knarry barein treës olde;' Chaucer, C. T. 1979 (A 1977). β. The spelling knur or knurr (for knar) also occurs; 'A bounche [bunch] or knur in a tree;' Elyot's Dict., ed. 1559, s. v. Bruscum. Der. gneiss-o-id, with a Gk. suffix, as in Asteroid.

GNOME, a kind of sprite. (F. — Gk.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 63. — F. gnome, a gnome. Littré traces the word back to Paracelsus; it seems to be an adaptation of Gk. γνώμη, intelligence, from the notion that the intelligence of these spirits could reveal the secret treasures of the earth; but this is conjecture. The gnomes were spirits of earth, the sylphs of air, the salamanders of fire, and the nymphs of water. β. The Gk. γνώμη is from γνῶναι, to know (below).

GNOMON, the index of a dial, &c. (L. — Gk.) 'The style in the dial called the gnomon;' Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 72. — L. gnōmōn, which is merely the Gk. word. — Gk. γνώμων, an interpreter, lit. 'one who knows;' an index of a dial. — Gk. γνῶναι, to know. — ✓ GEN; whence also E. Know, q. v. Der. gnomon-ic, gnomon-ics, gnomon-ic-al.

GNU, a kind of antelope. (Kaffir.) Found in S. Africa. Orig. a Kaffir word; see the Kaffir Dict. by Davis, who gives it in the form nqu, where the q represents a click. It was sometimes written gnu, whence gnu by an erroneous substitution of g for q. (N. and Q., 9 S. v. 45.)

GO, to move about, proceed, advance. (E.) ME. gon, goon, go; Chaucer, C. T. 379 (A 377); common. The OHG. gā-m, I go, shows that the OTeut. **gai-* belonged to the class of 'verbs in -mi.' Der. go-by, go-cart, go-er, go-ing; also gait, q. v. The pt. t. went is from wend; see Wend.

GOAD, a sharp pointed stick for driving oxen. (E.) ME. gode. 'Wij a longe gode;' P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 433. AS. gād, not common; but we find 'ongēan þa gāde' = against the goad (cf. Acts, ix. 5); Ælfric's Hom. i. 386. l. 9. We find also the early form gaad; O. E. Texts, p. 99, l. 1937. Teut. type **gaidā*, fem.; verified by the Lombardic form gaida (Ducange). From the Teut. base **gai-*, whence also AS. gā-r, Icel. gei-rr; cf. OIrish gai, a spear. See GORE (2). ¶ Not allied to gad or yard (2).

GOAL, the winning-post in a race. (E.) A term in running races. 'As, in rennyng, passynge the gole is accounted but rasshenesse,' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 21. 'No person . . . should haue wone the ryng or gott the gole before me;' Hall's Chron. Rich. III, an. 2. § 2. ME. gōl, a limit; Shoreham's Poems, p. 145, l. 4. It answers to an AS. form **gāl* (not found), which may have meant 'barrier' or 'impediment'; whence gēlan, to impede, ā-gēlan, to delay. ¶ Not of F. origin, as often said.

GOAT, the name of a well-known quadruped. (E.) ME. goot, gote; Chaucer, C. T. 690 (A 688). AS. gāt; Grein, i. 373. + Du. geit; Dan. ged; Swed. get; Icel. geit; G. geiss, geisse; Goth. gaits. + L. haedus, a kid. Idg. base **ghaid-*. Der. goats-beard, goat-moth, goat-sucker.

GOBBET, a mouthful, a little lump, small piece. (F.—C.) The short form gob is rare. 'Gob or Gobbet, a great piece of meat;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. ME. gobet, a small piece; P. Plowman, C. vi. 100; Chaucer, C. T. 698 (A 696). 'Thei tooken the relifs of brokun gobetis, twelue cofyns ful;' Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 20. — OF. gobet, a morsel of food (Godefroy); not given in Burguy or Cotgrave, but preserved in the modern F. gobet, in use in the Norman dialect (Du Bois). A dimin. form, with suffix -et, allied to MF. gob, a gulp, as used in the phrase 'l'avalla tout de gob' = at one gulp, or, as one gobbet, he swallowed it; Cot. — OF. gober, 'to ravine, devour, feed greedily;' Cot. β. Of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. gob, the beak or bill of a bird, or (ludicrously) the mouth; Irish gob, mouth, beak, snout; see Macbain. ¶ The prov. E. gob, the mouth, is borrowed from Celtic directly. And see Gobbler.

GOBBLE, to swallow greedily. (F.—C.; with E. suffix.) 'Gobble up, to eat gobs, or swallow down greedily;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. First in 1601. A frequentative, formed by adding -le, of OF. gober, 'to ravine, devour, feed greedily, swallow great morsels, let down whole gobbits;' Cot. See Gobbet. ¶ At a late period the word gobble was adopted as being a suitable imitative word (cf. gabble), to represent the sound made by turkeys. In this sense, it occurs in Prior, The Ladle, l. 74: 'Fat turkeys gobbling at the door.'

GOBELIN, a rich French tapestry. (F.) 'So named from a house at Paris, formerly possessed by wool-dyers, whereof the chief (Giles Gobelin) in the reign of Francis I. [1515–1547] is said to have found the secret of dyeing scarlet;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

GOBLET, a large drinking-cup. (F.—L.) 'A goblet of syluer;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. ii. c. 87. 'In grete goblettez;' Morte Arthure, l. 207. — F. gobelet, 'a goblet, bole, or wide-mouthed cup;' Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of OF. gobel, (later form gobbeau) which Cot. explains by 'a mazer or great goblet.' — Late L. cūpellum, acc. of cūpellus, a cup; a dimin. of L. cūpa, a tub, cask, vat. See Coop. Cf. Picard gobe, a great cup. (Körting, § 2693; but doubtful.)

GOBLIN, a kind of mischievous sprite, fairy. (F.—Low L.—G.) Formerly gobeline, in 3 syllables. 'The wicked gobbelines;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 73. ME. gobelyn; Wyclif, Ps. xc (xci). 6. — OF. gobelin, 'a goblin, or hob-goblin;' Cot. — Low L. gobelinus, a goblin; prob. from the same source as G. kobold, a goblin (see Kluge). If so, it is from MHG. kobel, a hut, with L. suffix -inus. The sense is to be explained from the cognate AS. cof-godas, 'penates,' or household gods. β. MHG. kobel is the dimin. of MHG. kobe, a stall, cognate with Icel. cofi, a hut, AS. cofa, a chamber; see Cove. ¶ So in Kluge, and Körting, § 2279. Diez derives it from Gk. κόβαλος, a rogue, a knave, also, a goblin invoked by knaves. But kobold (at any rate) is prob. Germanic.

GOBY, a kind of sea-fish. (L.—Gk.) 'Gobio or Gobius, the gudgeon or pink, a fish;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. The goby is a mere corruption of L. gōbius (cf. F. gobie), orig. applied to the gudgeon; also spelt cōbius. — Gk. καβίος, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench. See Gudgeon.

GOD, the Supreme Being. (E.) ME. god (written in MSS. with small initial letter); Chaucer, C. T. 535 (A 533). AS. god; Grein, i. 517. + Du. god; Icel. guð; Dan. gud; Swed. gud; Goth. guth; G. gott. β. Teut. type **guthom*; Idg. type **ghutom*, perhaps 'the being who is worshipped;' a pp. form from Idg. **ghu*, to worship, as in Skt. hu, to sacrifice (to), whence Skt. huta, one to whom sacrifice is offered. ¶ In no way allied to good, adj. Der. godd-ess, q. v.; god-child; god-father, q. v.; god-head, q. v.; god-less, god-like, god-ly, god-send, god-son; also good-bye, q. v.; gospell, q. v.; gossip, q. v.

GODESS, a female divinity. (E.; with F. suffix.) ME. god-desse (better godesse), a hybrid compound, used by Chaucer, C. T. 1103 (A 1101). Made by adding to God the OF. suffix -esse (= L. -issa = Gk. -ισσα). ¶ The AS. word was gyden (Grein, i. 536); correctly formed by vowel-change and with the addition of the fem. suffix -en (Teut. -ina), as in Vixen, q. v. Cf. G. göttin, fem. of gott.

GODFATHER, a male sponsor in baptism. (E.) ME. god-fader, Rob. of Glouc. p. 69; l. 1571. Earlier, in William of Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 69 (temp. Edw. II). From god, God; and fader, father. β. Other similar words are godchild, Ancren Riwele, p. 210; ME. goddochter = god-daughter, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 48; ME. godmoder = god-mother, id. same page; ME. godsune = god-son, Wright's Vocab. i. 214, col. 2. And see Gossip.

GODHEAD, divinity, divine nature. (E.) ME. godhed, Chaucer, C. T. 2383 (A 2381); spelt godhod, Ancren Riwele, p. 112. The suffix is wholly different from E. head, being a variant of the suffix which is commonly written -hood. This -hood is from the AS. hād, office, state, dignity; as in 'pri on hādum' = three in (their) Persons; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 42. β. This AS. hād properly passed into -hood, as in E. man-hood; but in ME. we also find the suffix -hede or -hed, as in manhede, Will. of Palerne, 431; as if from an AS. mutated form -hæd-; cf. OFries. -hēd, Du. -heid, OSax. -hēd, equivalents of AS. -hædu; Teut. type **haidjā*, f. AS. hād < Teut. **haidoz*, m. This accounts for the double form maiden-hood and maiden-head.

GODWIT, the name of a bird. (E.) 'Th' Ionian godwit;' Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Odes, lib. v. od. 2, l. 53. Of unknown origin; but the former syllable may well be a shortened form of gōd, good, as it was famous as a delicacy. The latter syllable -wit probably stands for ME. wight, AS. wiht, a wight, a creature, which could be used (in AS.) of a bird; see Cynewulf, Crist, l. 981. Various corrupted to god-wike in 1612 (N. E. D.); god-wipe (1579).

GOFFER, to flute or crimp a frill, &c. (F.—O. Low G.) Not in Johnson, and not much used before 1800. (The o is long.) — MF. gauffrer, 'to print (a garment); also, to deck or set out with puffs;' Cot. Orig. to mark like the edging of pie-crust, or like wafers. — MF. gauffre, goffre, 'a wafer; also, a honny-combe;' Cot. See further under Wafer.

GOGGLE-EYED, having rolling and staring eyes. (E.) 'They goggle with their eyes hither and thither;' Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, c. 1. 'Glyare, or gogul-eye, limus, strabo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 199. 'Gogyl-eyid, gogelere, limus, strabo;' id. p. 201. Wyclif translates L. luscum by 'gogil-ized' = goggle-eyed; Mark, ix. 46. 'Goggle-eyed man, louche;' Palsgrave. The suffix -le is, as usual, frequentative; the base appears to be imitative; cf. prov. E. goggle, to shake, gog, a quagmire (because it shakes). We find also Irish and Gael. gogshuil, goggle-eyed, having wandering eyes; from gog, to move lightly, and suil, the eye, look, glance; but this gog seems to be of E. (and imitative) origin. Cf. prov. E. coggle, Bavar. gageln, to be unsteady; and E. jog, joggle. Der. goggle, verb, to roll the eyes (Butler, Hudibras, ii. i. 120); goggles, i. e. a facetious name for spectacles.

GOITRE, a swelling in the throat. (F.—Prov.—L.) Spelt goytre in Howell, Letters, i. 1. 43. Used in speaking of the Swiss peasants who are afflicted with it. — F. goitre, a swelled neck; a back-formation from the adj. goitreux, afflicted with goitre (Hatzfeld). — Prov. goitros, adj.; from goit, sb., the throat (in Mistral). — L. guttur, the throat; see Juvenal, Sat. xiii. 162.

GOLD, a precious metal. (E.) ME. gold, Chaucer, C. T. 12704 (C 770). AS. gold; Grein, i. 519. + Du. goud [for gold]; Icel. gull; Swed. and Dan. guld; G. gold; Goth. gulth; 1 Tim. ii. 9. Teut. type **gul-thom*, neuter; Idg. type **ghal-tom*; cf. Russ. zoloto, Skt. hātaka, gold. Allied to Pers. zar, gold, Zend zaranya, Skt. hiranya, gold. Named from its yellow colour; and allied to Yellow. (✓GHEL.) Brugmann, i. § 506; ii. § 79. Der. gold-en (AS. gyld-en, by the usual letter change, but altered in ME. to gold-en); gold-beater, gold-dust, gold-finch (Chaucer, C. T. 4365), gold-fish, gold-leaf, gold-smith (Prompt. Parv. p. 202); mary-gold or mari-gold. Also gild.

GOLF, the name of a game. (Du.) Mentioned in Acts of James II., of Scotland; 1457, c. 71, ed. 1566: 'the futball and the golf.' The name is usually supposed to have been taken from that of a Du. game played with a mallet and ball. — Du. kolf, 'a club to strike little boulds or balls with, a mallet-stick;' Sewel's Du. Dict. + Icel. kölfr, the (rounded) clapper of a bell, a bulb, a bolt for a crossbow; kylfa, a club; Dan. kolbe, the butt-end of a weapon; kolv, a bolt, shaft, arrow; Swed. kolf, a butt-end, bolt; Low G. kulf, a club with which boys play a kind of hockey (Brem. Wört.); G. kolbe, a club, mace, knob, butt-end of a gun. ¶ Or it may be allied to prov. E. gouff, to strike, to hit (E. D. D.); which is possibly of imitative origin. Cf. cuff.

GOLOSH. The same as Galoche, q. v.

GONDOLA, a Venetian pleasure-boat. (Ital.—Gk.?) Shak. has gondola, Merch. of Ven. ii. 8. 8; and gondolier, Oth. i. 1. 126. — Ital. gondola, a boat used (says Florio) only at Venice; a dimin. of gonda (Torriano), with the same meaning. — Gk. κόνδυ, a drinking-vessel (which the gondola was supposed to resemble (Diez). But this is doubtful. Or from L. cūnula, a little cradle; see Körting, § 2402.

GONFANON, GONFALON, a kind of standard or banner. (F.—MHG.) ME. gonfanon, Rom. of the Rose, 1201, 2018. [The form gonfalon is from Ital. gonfalone.] The sb. gunfaneur = banner-bearer, occurs in the Ancren Riwele, p. 300. — OF. gonfanon, gunfanon. — MHG. gundfano, a banner, lit. battle-standard. — MHG. gunt, gund, battle (chiefly preserved in female names, as Rhadegund); and fano, vano (mod. G. fahne), a standard, banner. *β. The MHG. gund is cognate with AS. gūð (for **gunð*), war, battle; Icel. gunnr, guðr, battle; from ✓GHWEN, to strike; cf. Skt. han, to strike, kill. Brugmann, i. § 678. γ. G. fahne is cognate with E. vane; see Vane.

GONG, a metallic disc, used as a bell. (Malay.) Spelt gongo in 1590; gong in 1686; see Yule. — Malay agōng or gōng, 'the gong, a sonorous instrument'; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 12, col. 1.

GOOD, virtuous, excellent, kind. (E.) ME. good, gode, Chaucer, C. T. 479 (A 477). AS. gōd; Grein, i. 520. + Du. goed; Icel. gōðr; Dan. and Swed. god; Goth. gōds; G. gut. Teut. type **gōdoz*; from **gōd-*, strong grade of **gad-*, to suit, fit; for which see Gather. Cf. Russ. godno, suitably; godnuii, suitable. Der. good, sb., pl. goods (ME. goodes, P. Plowman, C. ix. 251); good-day; good-Friday (ME. gode fridaye, P. Plowman, B. x. 414); good-ly = AS. gōdlic, Grein, i. 523; good-li-ness (ME. goodlines, also in A. V. of Bible, Isaiah, xl. 6, and Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xx. st. 107); good-natured; good-ness = AS. gōdnes, Grein, i. 523; good-will. Also good-man, q. v.

GOOD-BYE, farewell. (E.) A familiar (but meaningless) contraction of God be with you, the old form of farewell. Very common in Shak., where old edd. often have God buy you. 'God buy you, good Sir Topas;' Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 108 (first folio). 'God be with you; I haue done;' Oth. i. 3. 189 (first folio). Strictly, God buy (also God b'w'y) = God be with you; and the added you was needless, and is not preserved.

GOODMAN, the master of the house. (E.) In the Bible, A. V. Luke, xii. 39, &c. See Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook. ME. godeman, in the Seven Sages, Thornton Romances, Intro. xlv. 1. 5. Observe especially the occurrence of godeman, as a tr. of L. paterfamilias, in An O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 33. 'Two bondmen, whyche be all vnder the rule and order of the good man and the good wyse of the house;' Sir T. More's Utopia (E. version), ed. Arber, p. 75. Compounded of good and man. Cf. Lowland Scotch gude man, the master of a family; Jamieson.

GOOSANDER, the largest species of Mergus. (Scand.?) The Mergus merganser; formerly gossander, as in Drayton, Polyolb. song xxv. 65. Of obscure formation; apparently 'goose-duck;' from Norw. gaas, Icel. gās, goose (modified by E. goose), and Norw. and, a duck, Icel. and (pl. andir), a duck, cognate with AS. ened. See Newton, Dict. of Birds.

GOOSE, the name of a bird. (E.) ME. gos, goos, pl. gees; Chaucer, C. T. 4135 (A 4137). AS. gōs, pl. gēs; Grein, i. 523 (where gōs stands for an older **gons* < **gans*, the lengthening of o causing loss of n). + Du. gans; Dan. gaas (for **gans*), pl. gæs; Swed. gås (for **gans*); Icel. gās (for **gans*); G. gans. + L. anser; Gk. χην; Skt. hamsas, a swan; OIrish geis, a swan; Lithuan. žūsis. Teut. type **gans*, Idg. base **ghans*. ¶ From the Idg. base **ghan-* we have also gann-et and gan-d-er. See Gannet, Gander. The occurrence of these words favours the theory that Gk. χην is allied to χαίρειν (for **χάιν-yeu*), to gape. Der. goose-grass (so called because geese are fond of it), goose-quill, gos-hawk, q. v., gos-ling, q. v. And see below.

GOOSEBERRY, the berry of a well-known shrub. (E.) 'Not worth a gooseberry;' 2 Hen. IV. i. 2. 196. 'A gooseberrie, vua [vua] crispa;' Levins, 104. 28. 'Gose berrys, groiselles;' Du Wes (in Palsgrave), p. 912. From goose and berry; cf. goose-grass, &c. ¶ Plant-names are often whimsical and inappropriate; it is possible that the name was suggested by North E. grozers, gooseberries (Halliwell, Bockett). Burns has grozet, a gooseberry; To a Louse, st. 5. These forms are, apparently, from an OF. **grose*, which occurs not only in OF. grosele, groisele, a gooseberry, but also in Irish grois-aid, Gael. grois-aid, W. gruys-en, a gooseberry, all borrowed from E. (Turner has groser-bushe in 1548.) The OF. groisele is of Teutonic origin; viz. from MHG. krūs, curling, crisped; whence mod. G. krausbeere, a cranberry, rough gooseberry. Cf. Swed. krusbar, a gooseberry. [Du. kruisbezie (lit. a cross-berry), is a singular corruption of kroesbezie, by confusion between kruis, a cross, and kroes, crisp, frizzled.] The G. kraus, Swed. krus, Du. kroes, crisp, frizzled, refer to the short crisp curling hairs upon the rougher kinds of the fruit; cf. the L. name vua crispa in Levins, given above.

GOPHER, a kind of wood. (Heb.) In A. V. Gen. vi. 14. — Heb. gōpher, a kind of wood; supposed to be pine or fir.

GORBELLIED, having a fat belly. (E.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV. ii. 2. 93. Compounded of E. gore, lit. filth, dirt (here used of the contents of the stomach and intestines); and belly. β. All doubt as to the origin is removed by comparing Swed. dial. gār-bälg, a fat paunch, compounded of Swed. dial. gār (Swed. gorr), dirt, the contents of the intestines, and bälg, the belly. See Rietz, p. 225. See Gore (1). And see below.

GORCROW, the carrion-crow. (E.) 'Raven and gorcrow, all my birds of prey;' Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act i. Compounded of

E. gore, filth, dirt, carrion (a former sense of the word); and crow. See Gore (1). And see above.

GORDIAN, intricate. (Gk.) Chiefly in the phr. 'Gordian knot;' Cymb. ii. 2. 34. Named from the Phrygian king Gordius (Gk. Γόρδιος), father of Midas, who, on being declared king, 'dedicated his chariot to Zeus, in the Acropolis of Gordium. The pole was fastened to the yoke by a knot of bark; and an oracle declared that whosoever should untie the knot should reign over all Asia. Alexander, on his arrival at Gordium, cut the knot with his sword, and applied the oracle to himself;' Smith's Classical Dict.

GORE (1), clotted blood, blood. (E.) It formerly meant also dirt or filth. It occurs in the sense of 'filthiness' in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 306. AS. gor, dirt, filth; Grein, i. 520. + Icel. gor, gore, the cud in animals, the chyme in men; Swed. gorr, dirt, matter; MDu. goor, OHG. gor. Origin uncertain. Der. gor-belly, q. v., gor-crow, q. v. Also gor-y, Macbeth, iii. 4. 51.

GORE (2), to pierce, bore through. (E.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 25. Formed, as a verb, from ME. gare, gore, gar, a spear. 'Brennes . . . lette glide his gar' = Brennus let fall his spear; Layamon, 5079. AS. gār, a spear; Grein, i. 370. (The vowel-change is perfectly regular; cf. bone, stone, loaf, from AS. bān, stān, hlāf.) + Icel. geirr, a spear; OHG. gēr, a spear. Teut. type **gaizoz*, m.; allied to Gaulish L. gaesum, a javelin; OIrish gai, a spear. Brugmann, i. § 210 (3). Perhaps allied to goad. Allied to gore (3); see below.

GORE (3), a triangular piece let into a garment; a triangular slip of land. (E.) ME. gore, Chaucer, C. T. 3237. AS. gāra, a projecting point of land; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, i. 1, ed. Sweet, p. 24. 1. 3. From AS. gār, a spear; see Gore (2). β. Similarly we have Icel. geiri, a triangular piece of land; from geirr, a spear. Also G. gehre, a wedge, gusset; Du. geer, a gusset, gore. Der. giron, q. v.

GORGE, the throat; a narrow pass. (F.—L.) ME. gorge, the throat; Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3760. — OF. gorge, the throat, gullet. [Ital. gorga.] — Folk-L. **gorga*, gullet (Hatzfeld); prob. a popular form of L. gurgulio, the gullet. Perhaps allied to L. gurgēs, a whirlpool; with which cf. Skt. gargara, whirlpool. Der. gorge, verb, Romeo, v. 3. 46; gorg-et, a piece of armour to protect the throat, Troilus, i. 3. 174; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 3. 12. And see gorgeous.

GORGEOUS, showy, splendid. (F.—L.) 'Of gorgeous array;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 808 c; 'they go gorgeously arrayed;' id. 808 a. A corruption of gorgias; 'That were ioly and gorgyas in theyr gere;' Justes of May and June, in Hazlitt's Early Pop. Poet. ii. 117. — OF. gorgias, 'gorgeous, gaudy, flaunting, brave, gallant, gay, fine, trimme, quaintly clothed;' Cot. Cf. se gorgiaser, 'to flaunt, brave, or gallantise it;' id. β. Perhaps formed from OF. gorgias, 'a gorget;' id.; as though to wear a gorget were a fine thing; or from the swelling of the throat considered as a symbol of pride. γ. Either way, the word depends upon F. gorge, the throat; and much light is thrown upon the word by another entry in Cotgrave, viz. 'se rengorger, to hold down [let sink down] the head, or thrust the chin into the neck, as some do in pride, or to make their faces look the fuller; we say, to bridle it.' δ. Note also Span. gorja, the throat; gorjal, a gorget, the collar of a doublet; gorguera, a gorget; gorguero, a kind of neckcloth, of ladies of fashion; gorguerin, a ruff round the neck. See Gorge. The editor of the F. poems of G. Coquillart has: 'Gorgias, élégant qui se rengorge, fat qui se pavane, dont la poitrine est couverte d'étoffes précieuses et de riches bijoux.' Der. gorgeous-ly, gorgeous-ness.

GORGON, a terrible monster. (L.—Gk.) In Shak. Macb. ii. 3. 77. — L. Gorgon, Gorgō. — Gk. Γοργώ, the Gorgon, a monster of fearful aspect. — Gk. γοργός, fearful, terrible. Cf. OIrish garg, fierce; perhaps Skt. garj, to roar. Der. Gorgon-ian, Milton, P. L. ii. 611.

GORILLA, a kind of large ape. (Ofrican.) The word is an old one, lately revived. It occurs just at the end of a treatise called the Periplūs (περίπλους), i. e. 'circumnavigation,' written by a Carthaginian navigator named Hanno. This was originally written in the Punic language, and afterwards translated into Greek. He there describes some creatures 'which the interpreters called γορίλλας.'

GORMANDIZE, to eat like a glutton. (F.—Scand.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 5. 3. Cotgrave has: 'Gourmander, to ravine, devour, glut, gormandize or gluttonize it.' The E. form was suggested by the previous existence in E. of the sb. gourmandyse, as in 'they eat withoute gourmandyse;' Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 1. This is from OF. gourmandise, gluttony; Cot. Both the sb. gourmandise and the vb. gourmander are from the OF. gourmand, 'a glutton, gormand, belly-god;' Cot. See Gourmand. Der. gormandiz-er, gormandiz-ing.

GORSE, a prickly shrub, furze. (E.) For gorst. ME. gorst, furze; Wyclif, Isaiah, lv. 13. AS. gorst. 'On gorste;' Luke, vi. 44; A. V. 'of a bramble-bush;' Vulgate, 'de rubo.' β. So named from its prickles. Cf. Skt. hṛsh, to bristle; L. hirsūtus, horridus, bristly; L. hordeum, Du. gerst, barley. Brugmann, i. § 882. See Hirsute.

GOSHAWK, a kind of hawk. (E.) Lit. a 'goose-hawk.' ME. goshawk, Wyclif, Job, xxxix. 13. The connexion with goose is proved by two successive entries in Voc. 131. 21, 22; viz. 'Auca, gos;' and 'Aucarius, gos-hafuc.' Here gos=AS. gōs, a goose; and hafuc=a hawk. The Vocabulary is ascribed to the tenth century. + Icel. gās-haukr, similarly formed. And see below.

GOSLING, a young goose. (E.) In Shak. Cor. v. 3. 35. ME. goselynge; Prompt. Parv. Here gose=ME. gos=AS. gōs, a goose. The suffix -ling is a double diminutive, =-ling. Cf. duckling, from duck. See GOOSE.

GOSPEL, the life of Christ. (E.) ME. gospel, Chaucer, C. T. 483 (A 481). Also godspel, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 100. AS. godspell, Grein, i. 519. The orig. sense was 'good story,' to translate L. euangelium. We find: 'Euangelium (sic), id est, bonum nuntium, godspel;' Voc. 314. 8. But the o (of AS. gōd, good) was soon shortened before dsp, and a more obvious popular etymology arose, as if god-spell meant 'story of God,' i.e. Christ. Hence, when the AS. word was introduced into Iceland, it took the form gudspjall=God-story, and not gōd-spjall=good story. And the OHG. word was likewise gotspel (=God-story), and not guot spel. ¶ It is interesting to find the orig. interpretation in the Ormulum, l. 157 of the Introduction.

GOSSAMER, fine spider-threads seen in fine weather. (E.) ME. gossomer, Chaucer, C. T. 10573 (F 259). Spelt gosesomer by W. de Bibbesworth (13th cent.); Wright's Vocab. i. 147, last line; and in Nominale, ed. Skeat, l. 625, we have 'a web of gossomer.' ME. gossomer is lit. goose-summer, and the prov. E. (Craven) name for gossamer is summer-goose; see Craven Gloss. It is named from the time of year when it is most seen, viz. during St. Martin's summer (early November); geese were eaten on Nov. 11 formerly. Cf. Lowl. Sc. (popular variant) go-summer, Martinmas. β. We may note, further, that Jamieson's Scottish Dict. gives summer-colt, i.e. summer-colt, as the name of exhalations seen rising from the ground in hot weather; and the Yorkshire expression for the same is very similar. 'When the air is seen on a warm day to undulate, and seems to rise as from hot embers, it is said, "see how the summer-colt rides!"' Whitby Glossary, by F. K. Robinson; quoted from Marshall. γ. In the same Whitby Glossary, the word for 'gossamer' is entered as summer-gauze. This may be confidently pronounced to be an ingenious corruption, as the word gauze is quite unknown to Middle-English and to the peasants of Craven, who say summer-goose; see Carr's Craven Glossary, where the summer-colt and summer-goose are synonymous. δ. The G. sommer means not only 'summer,' but also 'gossamer,' in certain compounds. The G. name for 'gossamer' is not only sommerfäden (summerthreads), but also mädchen-sommer (Maiden-summer), der-alte-Weiber-sommer (the old women's summer), or Mechtildesommer; see E. Müller. It was also simply known as der fliegende sommer, the flying summer (Weigand). This makes G. sommer=summer-film; and gives to gossamer the probable sense of 'goose-summer-film.' The connexion of the word with summer is further illustrated by the Du. zomerdraden, gossamer, lit. 'summer-threads,' and the Swed. sommertråd, gossamer, lit. 'summer-thread.' It may be observed that the spelling gossamer (with a) is certainly corrupt. It should rather be gossomer or gossummer.

GOSSIP, a sponsor in baptism, a crony. (E.) The old sense was 'sponsor in baptism,' lit. 'god-relative.' The final p stands for b, and ss for ds. ME. gossib, Chaucer, C. T. 5825 (D 243); earlier spelt godsib. See Poems of Will. of Shoreham, ed. Wright, pp. 68-70, where occur the words gossibbe, sibbe, and gossibrede (also spelt godsibrede), a derivative from godsib by suffixing ME. -rede (=AS. ræden, E. -red in kind-red). β. Thus gossip stands for god-sib, i.e. related in God; AS. godsibb, Wulfstan, ed. Napier, p. 160; m. pl. godsibbas. The f. sb. sib in AS. means 'peace,' but there was a derived word meaning 'relative.' Thus, in Luke, xiv. 12, the Northumb. glosses to Latin cognatos are (in one MS.) sibbo and (in the other) gisibbe; and again, in the Ormulum, l. 307, it is said of Elizabeth that she was 'Sante Marje sibb,' i.e. Saint Mary's relative. Cf. Icel. sif, affinity; sifi, a relative; G. sippe, affinity; pl. sippen, kinsmen; Goth. sibja, relationship, adoption as sons, Gal. iv. 5; unsibis, lit. unpeaceful, hence, lawless, wicked, Mark, xv. 28; unsibja, iniquity, Matt. vii. 23. These are further related to Skt. sabhya-, relating to an assembly, fit for an assembly, trusty, faithful; from sabhā, an assembly. Brugmann, i. §§ 124 (4), 567.

GOTH, one of a certain early Germanic tribe. (Late L.—Gothic.) 'Theodoric, the king of Goths;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. i. pr. 4. 53.—Late L. Gōthi, pl. Goths.—Goth. **Gutōs*, or **Gutans*, pl.; cf. Goth. Gut-þiuda, the Gothic people, where þiuda (AS. þeod) means 'people.' Der. Goth-ic.

GOUGE, a chisel with a hollowed blade. (F.—Late L.—C.?)

Formerly googe. 'By googing of them out;' Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, A. ii. sc. 1 (Meercraft). 'An yron goodg;' Naval Accounts, p. 240 (1497).—F. gouge, 'a joiners googe;' Cot. Cf. Span. gubia, a gouge; Ital. sgubia, sgubbia (Torriano); Port. goiva.—Late L. guvia, a kind of chisel, in Isidore of Seville, lib. xix. De Instrumentis Lignariis (Brachet); also gulbium (Ducange). β. Of obscure origin; but perhaps Celtic.—OIrish gulban, a beak; W. gylf (N. E. D.).

GOURD, a large fleshy fruit. (F.—L.) ME. gourd, Chaucer, C. T. 17031 (H82).—F. gourde, formerly spelt gouhourde or cougourde, both of which spellings are in Cotgrave. Gourde is short for gou-hourde, which is a corruption of cougourde.—L. cucurbita, a gourd; evidently a reduplicated form.

GOURMAND, a glutton. (F.—Scand.) Also gormand, gormond. 'To that great gormond, fat Apicius;' Ben Jonson, Sejanus, A. i. sc. 1. 'To gurmander, abligurire;' Levins, 83. 22.—F. gourmand, 'a glutton, gormand, belly-god;' Cot. β. Of Scand. origin.—Norw. gurmen, inclined to gorge oneself (Ross); from gurma, (1) to stir up mud; (2) to eat steadily and continually; (3) to gorge oneself (Aasen, Ross). Cf. Icel. gormr; Norw. gurm, ooze, mud, grounds of coffee, &c., allied to gor, gore; see GORE (1). The Span. gormar means 'to vomit.' Der. gormand-ize or gormand-ise, q. v.

GOUT (1), a drop, a disease. (F.—L.) 'Gouts of blood;' Mach. ii. 1. 46. 'And he was al-so sik mid goute,' i.e. with the disease; Rob. of Glouc. p. 564; l. 11865. The disease was supposed to be caused by a defluxion of humours; so that it is the same word as gout, a drop.—OF. goute, goutte, a drop; also, 'the gowt;' Cot.—L. gutta, a drop. Der. gout-y, gout-i-ness.

GOUT (2), taste. (F.—L.) Merely borrowed from F. gout, taste.—L. gustus, taste; cf. gustāre, to taste; from the same root as E. choose. See CHOOSE.

GOVERN, to steer, direct, rule. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. gouernen, (with u for v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 44; l. 1036.—OF. gouverner, later gouverner.—L. gubernāre, to steer a ship, guide, direct. (Borrowed from Gk.)—Gk. κυβερνᾶν, to steer. Cf. Lithuan. kumbriti, to steer. Der. govern-able; govern-ess, Mids. Nt. Dream, ii. 1. 103; govern-ment, Tempest, i. 2. 75 (the older term being govern-ance, as in Chaucer, C. T. 12007, C 73); govern-ment-al; govern-or, ME. gouernour (u for v), Wyclif, James, iii. 4, from OF. gouverneur < L. acc. gubernātōrem, a steersman; governor-ship.

GOWAN, a daisy. (Scand.) 'And pu'd the gowans fine;' Burns, Auld Lang Syne, st. 2. Also formerly, a buttercup; North E. gowlan, Sc. yellow gowan, corn marigold. Named from the colour.—Icel. gulr, Swed. gul, Dan. gul, yellow. See YELLOW.

GOWK, a cuckoo; a foolish person. (Scand.) 'Thare galede the gowke,' there sang the cuckoo; Allit. Morte Arthure, l. 927. And see E. D. D.—Icel. gaukr, a cuckoo; Swed. gök. + AS. gēac (prov. E. yeke), a cuckoo; G. gauch. Teut. type **gaukoz*, m.

GOWN, a loose robe. (F.—Late L.) ME. goune, Chaucer, C. T. 393; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 227.—OF. gone, gonne, goune, a long coat (Godefroy).—Late L. gunna, a skin, fur (scholiast on Geo. iii. 383); also a garment of fur (8th cent.) Ducange. Hence also Ital. gonna, OSpan. and Prov. gona, a woman's gown. Cf. also Byzantine Gk. γούνα, a coarse garment. ¶ Sometimes said to be Celtic, which is doubtful; see Stokes-Fick, p. 281. Cf. W. gwn, a gown, loose robe; Irish gunn, Gael. and Corn. gun, a gown; Manx goon; but these may be borrowed from E. Der. gown-s-man.

GRAB, to seize, clutch. (E.) A somewhat vulgar word, but given in Rider, Eng.-Lat. Dict. (1589). Prob. of native origin; cf. EFries. grabbig, greedy, grabbelen, to grab at. + Du. grabbel, a scramble, grabbelen, to scramble for; Low G. grabbeln, to grab at; Swed. grabba, to grasp. Very near to OSkt. grabh, to seize, a Vedic form, of which the later form is grah; cf. OSlav. grabiti, to plunder. The standard E. word is gripe. See GRAPPLE, GRIPE, GRASP.

GRACE, favour, mercy, pardon. (F.—L.) ME. grace, in early use; Layamon, 6616 (later text).—OF. grace, L. grātia, favour.—L. grātus, dear, pleasing. Brugmann, i. §§ 524, 632. Der. grace-ful, grace-ful-ly, grace-ful-ness; grac-i-ous, Chaucer, C. T. 8489 (E 613); grac-i-ous-ly, grac-i-ous-ness; grace-less, grace-less-ly, grace-less-ness. And see grateful.

GRADATION, an advance by short steps, a blending of tints. (F.—L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 37.—OF. gradation, 'a gradation, step, degree;' Cot.—L. gradātiōnem, acc. of gradatio, an ascent by steps. Cf. L. gradātīm, step by step.—L. gradus, a step. See GRADE. Der. gradation-al, gradation-ed.

GRADE, a degree, step in rank. (F.—L.) Of late introduction into E.; see Todd's Johnson; though used as a mathem. term (=degree) as early as 1511. [But the derived words graduate, &c., have been long in use; see below.]—F. grade, 'a degree;' Cot.—L. gradum, acc., a step, degree.—L. gradi (pp. gressus), to step, go. Brugmann, i. § 635; ii. § 707; Stokes-Fick, p. 118. Der. grad-at-ion, q. v., grad-i-ent, q. v., grad-u-al, q. v., grad-u-ate, q. v. Doublet, gradus. From the same source are de-gree, de-grade, retro-grade; in-gred-i-ent; also ag-gress-ion, con-gress, di-gress, e-gress, in-gress, pro-gress, trans-gress.

GRADIENT, gradually rising; a slope. (L.) A coined word, used in modern mechanics. — L. gradient-, stem of gradiens, pres. part. of gradi, to walk; advance. See Grade.

GRADUAL, advancing by steps. (L.) 'By gradual scale'; Milton, P. L. v. 483. [Also as sb., a gradual (see Blount), a service-book called in Latin graduāle, and more commonly known in ME. by the F. form grayl.] — Late L. **graduālis*, but only used in the neut. graduāle (often gradūle), to signify a service-book 'containing the portions to be sung by the choir, so called from certain short phrases after the Epistle sung in gradibus' [upon the steps]; Proctor, On the Common Prayer, p. 8. Formed, with suffix -ālis, from gradu-, decl. stem of gradus, a step. See Grade. Der. gradual-ly. And see grail (1).

GRADUATE, one who has received a university degree; as verb, to take a degree, to mark off degrees. (L.) Cotgrave has: 'Gradué, graduated, having taken a degree;' and also: 'Gradé, graduate, or having taken a degree.' 'I would be a graduate, sir, no freshman;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Fair Maid, A. iv. sc. 2 (Dancer). And as sb., in Barclay, Ship of Fools, i. 2. — Late L. graduātus, one who has taken a degree; still in use at the universities. — L. gradu-, decl. stem of gradus, a degree; with pp. suffix -ātus. Der. graduation, graduat-or.

GRAFT, GRAFF, to insert buds on a stem. (F.—L.—Gk.) The form graft is due to a confusion with graffed, which was orig. the pp. of graff. Shak. has graffed, Macb. iv. 3. 51; but he also rightly has graft as a pp. 'Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants;' Rich. III. iii. 7. 127. Also the verb to graff, As You Like It, iii. 2. 124. Cf. Rom. xi. 17. ME. graffen, to graft; P. Plowman, B. v. 137. β. The verb is formed from the sb. graff, a scion; found in 1398 (N. E. D.). 'This bastard graff shall never come to growth;' Shak. Lucr. 1062. — OF. graffe, grafe, a style for writing with, a sort of pencil; also graffe, 'a graft, a slip or young shoot;' Cot. [So named from the resemblance of the cut slip to the shape of a pointed pencil. Similarly we have L. graphiolum, (1) a small style, (2) a small shoot, scion, graff.] — L. graphium, a style for writing with. — Gk. γραφίον, another form of γραφειον, a style, pencil. — Gk. γράφειν, to write, grave. See Graphic. Der. graft-er.

GRAIL (1), a gradual, or service-book. (F.—L.) ME. graile, grayle. 'Grayle, boke, gradale, vel gradalis;' Prompt. Parv. p. 207; and see Way's note. — OF. grael; Godefroy. — Late L. gradāle; see explanation s.v. Gradual.

GRAIL (2), the Holy Dish at the Last Supper. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 53. 'Fulfil the meruails of the greal;' Arthur and Merlin, ed. Kölbing, 2222. See my Pref. to Joseph of Arimathea, published for the Early Eng. Text Society. It is there shown that the true etymology was, at an early period, deliberately falsified by a change of San Greal (Holy Dish) into Sang Real (Royal Blood, but perversely made to mean Real Blood). — OF. graal, greal, grasal, a flat dish, Prov. grasal, Late L. gradāle, grasāle, a flat dish, a shallow vessel. [The various forms in OF. and Low L. are very numerous; see the articles in Godefroy, Ducange, and Charpentier's Supplement to Ducange.] β. The word would appear to represent a Fölk-L. type **crātālis*, formed from Late L. crātus, a cup, substituted for crāter, a bowl. See Crater. It was, fabulously, the dish in which Joseph of Arimathea is said to have collected our Lord's blood.

GRAIL (3), fine sand. (F.) Spenser uses the word in a way peculiarly his own; he seems to have meant 'fine particles;' he speaks of 'sandie graile,' and of 'golden grayle;' F. Q. i. 7. 6; Visions of Bellay, st. 12. Perhaps suggested by MF. graisle, 'thinne, small, little;' Cot. (mod. F. grêle). — L. gracilis, slender. ¶ It is, of course, possible that Spenser was merely coining a new form of gravel.

GRAIN, a single small hard seed. (F.—L.) ME. grein, greyn, grain; Chaucer, C. T. 598 (A 596); P. Plowman, B. x. 139. — OF. grain. — L. grānum, a grain, corn. + Irish grān, W. gronyn. Cognate with E. corn. See Corn. Der. grain-ed; also granule, q.v., grange, q.v., granary, q.v., granite, q.v. ¶ Grain in the sense of fibre of wood is the same word; cf. F. grain des pierres, the grain of stones (Hamilton). The phrase 'to dye in grain' meant to dye of a fast colour, by means of kermes, &c.; whence grained, deeply dyed, Hamlet, iii. 4. 90. The phrase is an old one; see P. Plowman, B. ii. 15, and the note.

GRALLATORY, long-legged, said of birds. (L.) A term applied to wading birds. Coined from L. grallātor, a walker on stilts. — L. grallæ, stilts, contracted from **gradlæ*, formed from the base grad- in L. gradi, to walk. See Grade. Brugmann, i. § 587 (4). Der. grallatori-al.

GRAMARYE, magic. (F.—L.—Gk.) Used by Scott, Lay of the Last Minstrel, iii. 11, vi. 17; who took it from 'King Estmere' in Percy's Reliques, where it occurs in a passage the genuineness of which is doubtful; see Percy Folio MS., ii. 604, l. 144, ii. 607, l. 274. The same word as ME. gramery, gramory, skill in grammar, or (jestingly) skill in magic. 'Cowthe ye by youre gramery reche us a drynk, I shuld be more mery;' Towneley Myst. p. 90. 'I se thou can of gramory and som what of arte;' id. p. 311. — OF. gramaire, grammar; see Grammar. ¶ I desire here to record my opinion, that the word glamour, magic, also used by Scott in the same poem (iii. 9), and taken by him from the expression 'They coost the glamer o'er her' in Johnny Faa (printed in Ritson's Sc. Poems, ii. 176), is nothing but another form of gramere, i.e. grammar. The note in Vigfusson's Dict. asserting the identity of glamour with Icel. glāmr, the moon, cannot be seriously entertained. I see that Littré (s.v. grimoire) agrees with me as to glamour; cf. grimoire in Hatzfeld. [This note, now confirmed (see N. E. D.), first appeared in 1884.]

GRAMERCY, thanks! (F.—L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 128. Formerly grand mercy, Chaucer, C. T. 8964 (E 1088). — F. grand merci, great thanks. See Grand and Mercy.

GRAMMAR, the science of the use of language. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. grammere, Chaucer, C. T. 13466 (B 1726). — OF. gramaire (12th cent.; see Hatzfeld). — Late L. grammatica, grammar (Hatzfeld). — Gk. γραμματική, grammar. — Gk. γραμματικός, knowing one's letters (see below). Der. grammar-i-an, grammar-school; from the same source, grammatical; see below.

GRAMMATICAL, belonging to grammar. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Those grammatic flats and shallows;' Milton, Of Education (R.). Grammaticall is in Palsgrave, page v. — F. grammatical, 'grammaticall'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -al, from L. grammaticus, grammatical. — Gk. γραμματικός, versed in one's letters, knowing the rudiments. — Gk. γραμματ-, stem of γράμμα, a letter. — Gk. γράφειν, to write. Der. grammatical-ly.

GRAMPUS, a kind of fish. (F.—L.) 'Grampus, a fish somewhat like a whale, but less;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Sir T. Herbert mentions 'porpice, grampasse (the sus marinus), mullet,' &c.; Travels, p. 404, ed. 1655 (or p. 384, Todd's Johnson). Spelt graundepose in Skelton, Speke Parrot, l. 309. — AF. grampais, Black Book of Admiralty, i. 152; a changed form of OF. craspois, crapois, graspois, grapois (Godefroy); by substituting OF. grand, great, for OF. cras, gras, fat. Cf. Late L. craspiscis in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 300. — L. crassum piscem, acc., fat fish. See Grease and Fish. ¶ The word porpoise is similarly formed. See Porpoise.

GRAND, great, large. (F.—L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 274. ME. grant, graunt; not much used formerly, except in compounds. The comp. grandame occurs in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 22, l. 32. Grand-father is in Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 3. Fabyan has graund-mother, vol. i. c. 124; ed. Ellis, p. 102. — OF. grand, great. — L. grandem, acc. of grandis, great. Der. grand-child, grandame, grand-sire, grand-father, grand-son, grand-mother, grand-daughter; grand-ly, grand-ness. And see below.

GRANDEE, a Spanish nobleman. (Span.—L.) Spelt grandy; 'in a great person, right worshipful sir, a right honourable grandy;' Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, To the Reader, ed. 1651, p. 35. Spelt grande, B. Jonson, Alchemist, A. iii. — Span. grande, great; also, a nobleman. — L. grandem, acc. of grandis, great. See Grand.

GRANDEUR, greatness. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. R. iv. 110. — F. grandeur, 'greatnesse;' Cot. Formed, with suffix -eur, from F. grand, great. See Grand.

GRANDILOQUENT, pompous in speech. (L.) Not in early use. The adj. and the sb. grandiloquence are in Blount's Glossary (1681). Formed (in rivalry of L. grandiloquus, grandiloquent), from grandi-, decl. stem of grandis, great, and loquent-, stem of pres. part. of loqui, to speak. See Grand and Loquacious. Der. grandiloquence.

GRANGE, a farmhouse. (F.—L.) ME. grange, graunge; Chaucer, C. T. 12996 (B 1256); P. Plowman, B. xvii. 71. — OF. grange, 'a barn for corn; also, a grange;' Cot. [Cf. Span. granja, a farmhouse, villa, grange.] — Late L. grānica, grānea, a barn, grange. — L. grānum, corn. See Grain.

Cf. Late L. crēantāre (for **crēdentāre*), to assure, guarantee; creantium, a caution, guarantee; Ducange. — Late L. **crēdentāre*, to guarantee, not found; closely related to Late L. crēdentia, a promise, whence F. créance. — L. crēdent-, stem of pres. part. of crēdere, to trust. See Creed. Der. grant, sb., grant-or, grant-ee.

GRANULE, a little grain. (L.) 'Granule, a little grain, or barley-corn;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. (Prob. directly from L.; but cf. F. granule.) — L. grānulum, a little grain; dimin. of grānum, a grain. See Grain. Der. granul-ar, granul-ate, granul-at-ion, granul-ous.

GRAPE, the fruit of the vine. (F. — O. Low G.) In Chaucer, C. T. 17032 (H 83); P. Plowman, B. xiv. 30. — OF. grape; MF. grappe, 'a bunch, or cluster of grapes;' Cot. [The orig. sense was 'a hook,' whence OF. graper, to gather clusters with a hook. The Rouchi dial. has crape, a bunch (Hécart). In E., the sense has altered from 'cluster' to 'single berry.' But cf. Norman dial. grape, a grape (Moisy; ed. 1895). Cf. Span. grapa, a hold-fast, cramp-iron; Ital. grappare, to seize; grappo, a clutching; grappolo, a cluster of grapes.] — Teut. type **krappō-*, whence O. Low G. crappo, a hook (Gallée), Low G. krappe, a hook (Berghaus), OHG. chrappho, a hook. Allied to E. cramp. See Cramp. Der. grape-ry, grape-shot. The senses of 'hook' and 'cluster' or 'handful' result from that of 'clutching.' See grapnel.

GRAPHIC, pertaining to writing; descriptive. (L. — Gk.) 'The letters will grow more large and graphicall;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 503. 'Each line, as it were graphic, in the face;' Ben Jonson, An Elegy on My Muse, Underwoods, 101. ix. 154. — L. graphicus, belonging to painting or drawing. — Gk. γραφικός, the same. — Gk. γράφειν, to write. GRAPNEL, a grappling-iron. (F. — O. Low G.) ME. grapnel (trisyllabic); Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 640 (Cleopatra). — OF. grapin (Supp. to Godefroy), F. grappin, a grapnel; with dim. suffix -el, thus giving grapnel, in three syllables. Formed, with suffix -in, from OF. grape, F. grappe, a hook. See Grape, Grapple.

GRAPPLE, to lay fast hold of, clutch. (F. — O. Low G.) In Shak. L. L. L. ii. 218; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 4. 29. Properly to seize with a grapple, i. e. a grapnel (Palsgrave, p. 227), and formed from the sb. — MF. grappil, 'the grapple of a ship;' Cot. The same in sense as F. grappin. Both grapp-il and grapp-in are formed from F. grappe, formerly used in the sense of 'hook;' cf. the phrase mordre à la grappe, to bite at the hook, to swallow the bait (Hamilton). See further under Grape.

GRASP, to seize, hold fast. (E.) ME. graspen, used in the sense of 'grobe,' to feel one's way; as in 'And graspeth by the walles to and fro;' Chaucer, C. T. 4291 (A 4293); also in Wyclif, Job, v. 14. xii. 25 (earlier version), where the later version has grobe. Just as clasp was formerly claps, so grasp stands for graps. The ME. graspen stands for grap-sen, 'That grapsed here and there as doth the blynde;' Hoccleve, De Reg. Princ., ed. Wright, p. 8, st. 31 (l. 212). Prob. from AS. type **græpsan* (Teut. type **grāpisōn*), from grāpan, to grope. Cp. EFries. grapsen, to seize. See Grobe. ¶ Similar transpositions of sp are seen in the prov. E. wops for wasp, in AS. hæps, a hasp, AS. æps, an aspen-tree; &c. The extension of the stem by the addition of s occurs in AS., and remains in E. clean-se from clean.

Der. grass-plot, grass-y; grass-hopper = AS. gærshoppa, Ps. lxxvii. 51, ed. Spelman; graze < ME. gresin, Prompt. Parv. p. 210, from AS. grasian (Icel. gresja); graz-i-er = graz-er (cf. bow-yeer, law-yeer).

GRATE (1), a frame-work of iron-bars. (Late L. — L.) ME. grate. 'Grate, or trelys wyndowe, cancellus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 207. — Late L. grāta, a grating; cf. Ital. grata, a grate, gridiron. A variant of Late L. crāta, a grating, crate. — L. crātes, a hurdle. See Crate. Thus grate is a mere variant of crate, due to a weakened pronunciation. Der. grat-ing, a dimin. form; grat-ed.

GRATE (2), to rub, scrape, scratch, creak. (F. — Teut.) ME. graten. 'Grate brede [to grate bread], mico;' Prompt. Parv. p. 207. And in Cotgrave. — OF. gratuité, 'a gratuity, or free gift;' Cot. — Late L. grātuitātem, acc. of grātuitās, a free gift. Allied to grātuitus, freely given. See above.

Q. v. 7. 18. — F. grave, 'grave, stately;' Cot. — L. grauem, acc. of gravis, heavy, grave. + Goth. kaurus, heavy, burdensome, 2 Cor. x. 10; Gk. βαρύς, heavy; Skt. guru-, heavy. Brugmann, i. § 665. Der. grave-ly, grave-ness; also grav-i-ty (Shak.), from F. gravité (Cot.), from L. acc. grauitātem; gravi-t-ate, gravi-t-at-ion; gravi-d, from L. gravidus, burdened. From the same root, grief, q. v.; also ag-grav-ate, ag-grieve, baro-meter.

GRAVEL, fine small stones. (F. — C.) ME. grauel (with u for v), in early use; in King Horn, ed. Der. gravelly.

GRAVY, juice from cooked meat. (F. — L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 184. Also spelt greavy, or greauy (with u for v). 'In fat and greauy;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. xviii. 166. 'With all their fat and greauie;' id. xviii. 63. ME. grauē, greauy, the name of a dressing for meats made of broth, milk of almonds, spices, and wine or ale. 'Conyngus in grauē, rabbits in gravy;' Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, p. 8; cf. pp. 24, 25. And see greauy in Two Cookery-books, ed. Austin (glossary). — OF. grané, a similar sauce, which seems to have been misread as grauē; cf. 'conyns en grané' (misprinted grauē), Wright, Vol. of Vocab., i. 174. See Godefroy. — L. grānātus, full of grains (with apparent allusion to the thickened broth). — L. grānum, a grain; see Grain and Grenade. Thus gravy appears to be an error for grainy. Toriano explains Ital. granato, granito, as 'kernelly or corny as honey, figs, soap, or oyl, is sometimes in winter.' See N. E. D.

GRAY, ash-coloured; white mixed with black. (E.) ME. gray, grey. 'Hire eyen grey as glas;' Chaucer, C. T. 152. O Merc. grei (O. E. Texts); AS. græg; Grein, i. 525. + Du. grauw; Icel. grár; Dan. graa; Swed. grå; G. grau. Teut. type **græguoz*; whence **græg-*, **græw-*. Cf. Low G. grag, gray (Berghaus). Der. gray-ish, gray-beard; gray-ling (with double dimin. suffix). Cf. graille as a fish-name in Harrison's Descr. of England, iii. 3.

GRAZE (1), to feed cattle. (E.) Merely formed from grass. ME. grasen. 'And lich an oxe, under the fot, He graseth as he nedes mot;' said of Nebuchadnezzar; Gower, C. A. i. 142; bk. i. 2973. AS. grasian, to graze. + Icel. gresja; Dan. græsse; Du. grazen; G. grasen. See Grass. Der. graz-i-er.

GRAZE (2), to touch lightly in passing and glance off. (E.) It appears to be merely a peculiar use of graze (1); and was used of cannon-balls that rebounded from the grass. 'That being dead, like to the bullet's grazing, Break out into a second course of mischief;' Hen. V, iv. 3. 105. 'Those bullets which graze on the ground do most mischief;' Fuller, Holy and Profane State, v. 1. 2. So also G. grasen, to graze (pasture), also to roll and bound, as cannon-balls (Flügel); so also Dan. græsse (Larsen).

GREASE, animal fat, oily matter. (F.—L.) ME. grece, grese; Chaucer, C. T. 135, 6069 (A 135, D 487).—OF. graisse, gresse, earlier creisse (Supp. to Godefroy); F. graisse.—Folk-L. **crassia* (Hatzfeld).—L. crassus, thick, fat. See CRASS. Der. greas-y, greas-i-ness; also cressel, q. v.

GREAT, large, ample, big. (E.) ME. gret, grete; Chaucer, C. T. 1279. AS. grēat, Grein, i. 527. + Du. groot; G. gross. Teut. type **grautoz*. Der. great-ly, great-ness; great-coat, great-hearted; also great-grandfather, great-grandson. And see groat.

GREAVES (1), GRAVES, the sediment of melted tallow. (E.) 'Chandlers graiues [pr. graines] . . . the offall of rendred Tallow;' G. Markham, Husbandry (1614), p. 97 (N.E.D.). 'To Grave a ship, to preserve the calking, by laying over a mixture of tallow or train-oil, rosin, &c. boiled together;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. This verb merely means to smear with grave or graves, i.e. a tallowy mess. Perhaps a native word; the AS. grēofa, glossed olla (pot) may have meant 'melting-pot.' Cf. EFries. grāfen, pl., greaves. Also MSwed. grefwar, dirt, ljus-grefwar, candle-dirt, refuse of tallow (Ihre); Swed. dial. grevar, sb. pl. leavings of tallow, greaves (Rietz); Westphal. graiwe; Low G. greven, greaves; Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 541. + G. griebe, the fibrous remains of lard, after it has been fried (Flügel); OHG. griufo, griebo.

GREAVES (2), armour for the legs. (F.) In Milton, Samson, 1121. ME. greues, pl.; Gawain and Grene Knt. 575.—OF. greves, 'boots, also greaves, or armour for the legs;' Cot. Cf. Span. grebas (pl. of greba), greaves.—OF. greve, 'the shank, shin, or forepart of the leg;' Cot.; Picard greve.

GREBE, an aquatic bird. (F.) Not in Johnson. First found in Pennant (1766).—F. grèbe, a grebe (Hamilton); also grêpe, in the dial. of Lyons (Puitspelu). Of unknown origin; Cot. gives griaibe, 'a sea-mew,' as a Savoyard word.

GRECE, a flight of steps. (F.—L.) 'A grece ther was of steppis fiftene;' Cursor Mundi, l. 10584. Really a pl.; = gree-s, pl. of gree, a step.—OF. gré, a step (Roquefort).—L. gradum, acc. of gradus, a step. See GRADE and DEGREE. β. Hence grece was often improperly used to mean 'a (single) step;' Shak. spells it grise; Oth. i. 3. 200.

GREEDY, hungry, voracious. (E.) ME. gredi, gredy; Ancrén Riwle, p. 416; whence gredinesse, id. p. 416. AS. grēdig, grēdig; Grein, i. 525. + Icel. grādugr; MSwed. grädig, grädig (Ihre); Dan. graadig; Goth. grēdags. Teut. type **grēdugoz*; an adj. formed from Teut. grēduz, hunger, greed; as seen in Goth. grēdus, hunger; Icel. grādr, hunger, and in AS. grēd-um, greedily, a dat. pl. form. Further allied to Skt. grāhra-, greedy, grdh, to be greedy; gardha-s, greed; Macdonell. (✓GERDH.) Der. greed-i-ly, greed-i-ness. The sb. greed, though not found before 1609, is a perfectly correct form.

GREEN, of the colour of growing plants. (E.) ME. greēn, grene, Chaucer, C. T. 6443 (D 861); used as sb., 6580 (D 998). AS. grēne, Grein, i. 526. [Here ē represents the i-mutation of ō, so that the base is grō-.] + Du. groen; Icel. grænn (for grænn); Dan. and Swed. grön; G. grün, MHG. gruene, OHG. kruoni. Teut. type **grōn-joz*, earlier type **grō-niz* (Sievers). Allied to AS. grōwan, to grow. Teut. base **gra-*, **grō-*; see GRASS. Thus green is the colour of growing herbs. Der. green-s; the phrase 'wortes of grenes' is used to translate holera herbarum in The Anglo-Saxon and Early English Psalters, ed. Stevenson (Surtees Soc.), vol. i. p. 111; Ps. xxxvi. 2. Also green-cloth, green-crop, greengage, green-grocer (see grocer), green-house, green-ish, green-ish-ness, green-room, green-sand, green-stone; also green-sward (s.v. sward).

GREENGAGE, a kind of plum. (E.) This stands for green Gage, where Gage is a personal name. It is the French plum called la grosse Reine Claude, and is written as Green Gage in P. Miller, Gardener's Dictionary, 7th ed. 1759, s.v. Prunus. There is also a blue Gage and a purple Gage. 'Plum; of the many sorts, the following are good: Green and blue gage, Fotheringham, &c.; C. Marshall, Introd. to Gardening, 1796, p. 350. In R. Hogg's Fruit Manual, 4th ed. 1875, it is said to have been introduced 'at the beginning of the last century, by Sir T. Gage, of Hengrave Hall, near Bury, who procured it from his brother, the Rev. John Gage, a Roman Catholic priest then resident in Paris.' The following account is more explicit, and gives the name as Sir William Gage. In Hortus Collinsonianus, p. 60, are some Memoranda by Mr. Collinson, written 1759–1765, where is the following entry. 'On Plums. Mem. I was on a visit to Sir William Gage, at Hengrave, near Bury: he was then near 70. He told me that he first brought over, from France, the Grosse Reine Claude, and introduced it into England; and in compliment to him the Plum was called the Green Gage; this was about the year 1725.' (J. A. H. Murray.) β. It must be added, that Mr. Hogg shows that there is reason for supposing that this plum was known in England at least a century earlier than the above date, but was then called the Verdoch, from the Ital. verdochia, obviously derived from verde (L. uiridis), green. But this does not affect the etymology of the present name. 'The green gages' occurs, with reference to plums, in Foote's Lame Lover, A. iii. (1770).

GREET (1), to salute. (E.) ME. greten, Chaucer, C. T. 8890 (E 1014); Ancrén Riwle, p. 430. AS. grētan, to approach, visit, address; Grein, i. 526. + Du. groeten, to greet, salute; OSax. grōtlan; MHG. gruezen, G. grüssen, to greet. Teut. type **grōtjan-*; from the sb. **grōt-oz*, m., seen in Du. groet, G. gruss, a greeting. Der. greet-ing.

GREET (2), to weep, cry, lament. (E.) In Northern E. only. ME. greten, Havelok, 164, 241, 285. AS. grētan, grētan, to weep; Grein, i. 525. + Icel. grāta; Dan. græde; Swed. grāta; Goth. grētan, to weep, pt. t. gai-grōt. Teut. type **grētan-*, with reduplic. pt. t. Perhaps allied to Skt. hrad, to resound, roar, hrād-as, noise.

GREGARIOUS, associating in flocks. (L.) 'No birds of prey are gregarious;' Ray, On the Creation, pt. i. (R.).—L. gregārius, belonging to a flock (with suffix -ous).—L. greg-, base of grex, a flock; with suffix -ārius. Cf. OIrish graig, a herd of horses; W. gre, a flock; Stokes-Fick, p. 117. Also Gk. ἀγείρειν, to assemble (Prellwitz). Der. gregarious-ly, gregarious-ness; from the same source, ag-greg-ate, con-greg-ate, se-greg-ate, e-greg-ious.

GRENADE, a kind of war-missile. (F.—Span.—L.) Formerly also granado, which is the Span. form. 'Granado, an apple filled with delicious grains; there is also a warlike engine, that being filled with gunpowder and other materials, is wont to be shot out of a wide-mouthed piece of ordnance, and is called a granado for the likeness it hath with the other granado in fashion, and being fully stuffed as the other granado is, though the materials are very different;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. Spelt granados, Evelyn, Diary, June 1, 1667.—OF. grenade, 'a pomegranet; also a ball of wildfire, made like a pomegranet;' Cot.—Span. granada, a pomegranate, a hand-grenade.—Span. granado, full of seeds.—L. grānātus, full of seeds.—L. grānum, a grain. See GRAIN, GARNET. Der. grenad-ier (spelt granadier, Evelyn, Diary, June 29, 1678).

GREY, the same as GRAY, q. v.

GREYHOUND, a swift slender hound. (E.) 'Grehoundes he hadde as swift as fowel in flight;' Chaucer, C. T. 190. Also spelt greahund, Ancrén Riwle, p. 332, last line. AS. grighund, Voc. 276. 3; where grig- = grieg- (Icel. grey-), for Teut. **graujo-*. Cf. Icel. greyhundr, a greyhound; composed of grey, a dog, and hundr, a hound. The Icel. grey is also used alone in the sense of greyhound or dog; and the Icel. greybaka means a bitch. ¶ Whatever be the source of Icel. grey, there is no pretence for connecting it with E. gray, adj., for which the Icel. word is grār.

GRIDDLE, a pan for baking cakes. (F.—L.) ME. gredil, a gridiron (in the story of St. Lawrence), Ancrén Riwle, p. 122. Called a girdle (= gridle) in North. E.—AF. gridil (OF. greil), used to gloss L. craticulam in Neckam; see Wright, Vol. Vocab. i. 102, l. 9. So also AF. gridile, glossed by 'roasting-hiron;' Nominale, ed. Skeat, l. 488. [Cf. Norm. dial. grēdil, Moisy].—Late L. **craticulum*, for L. craticula, a griddle, dimin. of crātis, a hurdle. [W. greidyll is from E.] See CRATE, and see GRILL. Der. From the same ME. gredil, by a slight change, was made the ME. gredire, a griddle, P. Plowman, C. iii. 130. Very likely, this was at first a mere change of l to r, but the latter part of the word thus became significant, the ME. ire meaning 'iron;' hence our grid-iron, spelt gyrdiron in Levins, 163. 39.

GRIDE, to pierce, cut through. (E.) A favourite word with Spenser; see F. Q. ii. 8. 36; Sheph. Kal. February, l. 4; Virgil's Gnat, 254. And cf. 'griding sword;' Milton, P. L. vi. 329. A mere metathesis of gird, ME. girden, to strike, pierce, cut through, used by Chaucer, and borrowed from him by later poets. 'Thurgh girt [pierced through] with many a grevous bloody wound;' Chaucer, C. T. 1012. See GIRD (2). ¶ The same word is used metaphorically in the phrase 'to gird at,' i.e. to strike at, try to injure; see Shak. 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 7; so also a gird is a cut, a sarcasm, Tam. Shrew, v. 2. 58.

GRIDIRON; see under GRIDDLE.

GRIEF, great sorrow. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. grief, gref; spelt gref, Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, 187.—OF. grief, gref, adj. burdensome, heavy, sad; as sb., grief (Godefroy).—L. grauem, acc. of gravis, heavy, sad, grave. See GRAVE (2). Der. grieve, &c. See below.

GRIEVE, to afflict; to mourn. (F.—L.) ME. greuen (with u=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 41, l. 969; P. Plowman, C. v. 95.—OF.

grever, to grieve, burden, afflict. — L. grauāre, to burden. — L. grauis, heavy (above). Der. griev-ous (ME. greuous, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 77); griev-ous-ly, griev-ous-ness; griev-ance, ME. greuance, Gower, C. A. i. 289, bk. iii. l. 296; and see above.

GRIFFIN, GRIFFON, an imaginary animal. (F.—L.—Gk.) Griffin is a weakened spelling; a better spelling is griffon. ME. griffon, Chaucer, C. T. 2135 (A 2133); King Alisaunder, 496. — F. griffon, 'a gripe, or griffon'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -on, from Late L. griffus, a griffin. — L. grýphus, an extended form of gryps, a griffin. — Gk. γρύψ (stem γρύψ-), a griffin, a fabulous creature named from its hooked beak. — Gk. γρυπός, curved; also, hook-nosed, hook-beaked. Allied to G. krauen, to claw (Prellwitz).

GRIG (1), a small lively eel. (Scand.) 'A grigge, a young eele. A merie grigge;' Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Anguilette, a grig, or little eele;' Cot. Cf. Lowland Sc. crick, crick, a tick, a louse (Jamieson). Probably Scandinavian. — Scand. dial. kräk, also krik, a little creature, esp. a crawling creature; allied to kräka, to creep (Rietz); Norw. kek, a creeping thing; kreka (pt. t. krak), to creep. [Distinct from G. kriechen.] The phrase as merry as a grig is probably due to this word, though it was early changed to (or confused with) the equivalent phrase as merry as a Greek; see quotations in Nares, amongst which we may note 'she's a merry Greek indeed'; Troilus, i. 2. 118; 'the merry Greeks'; id. iv. 4. 58. Merygreek is a character in Udall's Roister Doister; A.D. 1553. Cf. L. græcārī, to live like Greeks, i.e. effeminately, luxuriously; Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 11.

GRIG (2), a cricket. (E.) Prov. E. grig; see E. D. D. Prob. due to prov. E. crick, to make a sharp noise; and to E. cricket, q. v. Cf. Du. kriek, a cricket. Apparently of imitative origin; and distinct from Grig (1).

GRILL, to broil on a gridiron. (F.—L.) Extended to grilly by Butler. 'Than have them grilled on the embers;' Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 15 from end. — F. griller, 'to broile on a gridiron, to scorch'; Cot. — F. gril, 'a gridiron'; id. Formerly spelt greil, Godefroy. — Late L. acc. **crāticulum*, a masc. form of crāticula, a small gridiron, Martial, xiv. 221 (whence F. grille, a grating). These are dimin. forms from L. crātis, a hurdle. See Grate (1), Crate, Griddle.

GRILSE, the young salmon on its first return to the river from the sea. (F.—OHG.?) The forms in the N. E. D. suggest that the older form grilles was a plural, so that grilse = grills. An Act of 22 Edw. IV, c. 2, mentions 'grillez ou salmons' (N. E. D.). And perhaps grill represents OF. grisle, grille, grayish, applied (like the variant OF. grisel) to a horse. If so, it is from OF. gris, gray. — OHG. gris, gray. ¶ Some refer grilse to Irish grealsach, 'a kind of fish'; but (if connected) the derivation may run the other way.

GRIM, fierce, angry-looking. (E.) ME. grim, Chaucer, C. T. 11458 (F 1146). AS. grim, fierce, cruel, severe, dire, Grein, i. 527; for **grem-*, and allied to AS. gram, angry, furious, hostile; id. i. 523. Cf. also AS. grimetan, to rage, roar, grunt. + Du. grimmig, angry; cf. grimmen, to foam with rage; Icel. grinnr, grim, stern; gramr, wrathful; Dan. grim, ugly, grim; gram, wrathful; + G. grimmig, furious; grimmen, to rage; grimm, fury; gram, hostile. From Teut. root **grem-* (2nd grade, **gram-*). β. Further allied to Gk. χρόμη, χρόμος, noise; χρεμίζειν, χρεμερίζειν, to neigh; see Brugmann, i. § 572.

GRIMACE, an ugly look, smirk. (F.—Teut.?) 'Annotations of grimaces;' Butler, Hudib. iii. 2. 1004. 'Grimace and affectation;' Dryden, Poet. Epist. to H. Higden, l. 10. — F. grimace, 'a crabd looke;' Cot. Of uncertain origin; but probably from G. grimm, fury, or from Icel. grinnr, Norw. grinn, angry, furious; cf. EFries. and Low G. grimlachen, to laugh maliciously. (Körting, § 4355.) Der. grimace, verb.

GRIMALKIN, a cat. (E.; partly OHG.) See Nares, who suggests that it stands for gray malkin, 'a name for a fiend, supposed to resemble a grey cat.' He is probably right. See Macb. i. i. 8. [Cf. the proverb 'All cats are grey in the dark.'] In this view, Malkin is for Mald-kin, dimin. of Maud (Matilda), with suffix -kin. The name Maud, AF. Mald, is from OHG. Maht-hilt; from maht, might, and hilt, battle. The ME. Malkin, as a dimin. of Maud, was in very common use; see Chaucer, C. T. 4450 (B 30). It was a name for a slut or loose woman. The Prompt. Parv. (1440) has: 'Malkyne, or Mawt, propyr name, Molt, Mawde, Matildis, Matilda.'

GRIME, dirt that soils deeply, smut. (Low G.) In Shak. Com. of Errors, iii. 2. 106. As a verb, K. Lear, ii. 3. 9. — WFlem. grijm, grime (De Bo); cf. MDu. grijmsel, grimsel, soot, smut (Kilian); grimmelen, to soil, begrime (Oudemans). Also Dan. grim, gruim, lampblack, soot, grime; whence grimet, streaked, begrimed (Ferrall); MDan. grim, soot on a kettle (Kalkar); Swed. dial. grima, a spot or smut on the face; Rietz. Probably allied further to AS. begriwan, to smear (?), Ælf. Hom. i. 384, ii. 368; and to Gk. χρίειν, to anoint, to smear. See Chrism. Der. grim-y.

GRIN, to snarl, grimace. (E.) ME. grennen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 212; Layamon, 29550. AS. grennian, to grin; Grein, i. 525. + OHG.

grennan, to mutter, MHG. grennen, to grin. From a Teut. base **gran-*; whence also Icel. grenja, to howl. β. Perhaps influenced by derivatives from a Teut. base **grein-*; whence Du. grijnen, to weep, cry, fret, grumble; grijnsen, to grumble, to grin; Dan. grine, to grin, simper; Swed. grina, to distort the face, grimace, grin; G. greinen, to grin, grimace, weep, cry, growl; all of the latter set being related to E. groan; see Groan. Der. grin, sb.

GRIND, to reduce to powder by rubbing. (E.) ME. grinden, Chaucer, C. T. 14080 (B 3264); Ancrén Riwe, p. 70. AS. grindan, Grein, i. 528. Teut. type **grendan-*, pt. t. **grand*, pp. **grundanoz*; whence also Du. grint, gravel, grit. Der. grind-er, grind-stone; also grist, q. v.

GRIP, sb., a firm grasp; vb., to grasp firmly. (E.) 1. ME. gripe; pl. gripen, Layamon, l. 15273; vol. ii. p. 215. The pl. grippis is in the Kingis Quair, st. 171. AS. gripe, a grip (Bosworth). 2. ME. grippen; 'he gript his mantel'; Will. of Palerne, 744. ONorthumb. grippa; whence gegrippde, pt. t., Luke, ix. 39. β. Both from grip-, weak grade of Teut. **greipan-*, to gripe (below).

GRIFE, to grasp, hold fast, seize forcibly. (E.) In Shak. Macb. iii. 1. 62; K. John, iv. 2. 190. ME. gripen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 248. AS. gripan, to seize; Grein, i. 529. + Du. grijpen; Icel. grípa; Dan. gríbe; Swed. grípa; Goth. greipan; G. greifen. Teut. type **greipan-*, pt. t. **graip*, pp. **gripanoz*. Cf. See Grizzly. ¶ Hence also F. gris, the fur of the gray squirrel; Chaucer, C. T. 194.

GRISKIN, the loin of a pig; prov. E. (Scand.) The lit. sense is 'a little pig' (still found in Angus); it is formed by the dimin. suffix -kin from the once common word gris or grice, a pig. 'Bothe my gees and my grys' = both my geese and pigs; P. Plowman, B. iv. 51. 'Gryce, swyne, or pygge, porcellus,' Prompt. Parv. p. 211; and see Way's note. — Icel. griss, a young pig; Dan. gríis, a pig; Swed. gris, a pig. Cf. OSax. gris, gray.

GRISLED, the same as Grizzled, q. v.

GRISLY, hideous, horrible. (E.) ME. grisly, Chaucer, C. T. 1973 (A 1971). AS. grislíc, horrible (see Clark Hall); perhaps shortened from angrislíc, terrible, Ps. lxxxviii. 8 (ed. Spelman). Formed with suffix -lic (like) from gris-an, ā-gris-an (pt. t. ā-grās), to shudder. 'And for helle āgrise' = and shudder at the thought of hell; Laws of Cnut, i. 25; see Ancient Laws, ed. Toulmin Smith, pp. 335, 336. AS. grist, as a gloss to L. molitura; Wright's Vocab. i. 34, col. 2. It represents a type **grin(d)-st-*, from the verb grindan, to grind. See Grind. ¶ Cf. bla-st from blow (as wind), blossom (= blō-st-ma) from blow (to flourish). The i was shortened before st; cf. fist. Der. grist-le.

GRISTLE, cartilage. (E.) 'Seales have gristle, and no bone;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 37; vol. i. p. 345 a. The word gristly occurs in the preceding clause. It was especially used with reference to the nose. 'Grystyle of the nose, cartilago;' Prompt. Parv. 'Nease-gristles', i.e. gristles of the nose (speaking of many people together); O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 251. AS. gristle, as a gloss to cartilago; Ælfric's Gloss. in Voc. 158. 22. OMerc. naes-gristle, gloss to cartilago; Voc. 10. 20. Cf. OFries. gristel, gristl, grestel, gerstel; Richtofen. β. The word may be the dimin. of grist, and derivable from grind; with reference to the necessity of crunching it if eaten. So also Du. knarsbeen, gristle, from knarsen, to crunch (Wedgwood). See Grist. ¶ The AS. grost (O. E. Texts, p. 112, l. 56) also means 'gristle,' but has a different vowel; cf. NFries. grössel, grüssel (Outzen), OHG. crustula, gristle (Schade). These may be connected with Du. gruizen, to crush, EFries. grüsen, to crunch; from a Teut. root **greus-*, noted by Franck, s. v. griesmeel. Cf. Grit (2). Der. gristl-y.

GRIT (1), gravel, coarse sand. (E.) Formerly greet. 'Greete, sabulum;' Levins, 89, 11. 'Sablonniere, a sand-bed, . . . a place full of sand, greet, or small gravel;' Cotgrave. ME. greet, Ancrén Riwe, p. 70. AS. grēot, grit, dust; Grein, i. 527. OFries. grēt. + Icel. grjöt; G. gries; Swed. dial. grut, gravel. Closely allied to Grout, q. v. See Grit (2). ¶ The short vowel is due to confusion with grit (2). Der. gritt-y, gritt-i-ness; see also groats, grout.

GRIT (2), coarse oat-meal. (E.) Usually in pl. grits. The oldest sense is bran or chaff. From AS. gryttan, pl.; as in hwæte gryttan, wheat-grits, Voc. 141. 20. Cf. MDu. grutte, 'barlie,' Hexham; G. grüuze, f., grit, groats. Teut. type **grut-jōn-*, fem.; from **grut-*, weak grade of **greut-* (2nd grade **graut-*), Idg. root **ghreud*, to crush, pound (whence Lith. gruzti, to crush, pound, O. Church Slav. grud-a, a clod). ¶ Grit (1), AS. grēot, is from the prime grade **greut-*.

GRIZZLY, GRIZZLED, of a grey colour. (F.—MHG.; with E. suffix.) Shak. has grizzled, Hamlet, i. 2. 240 (in some copies grisly); also grizzle as sb., a tinge of gray, Tw. Nt. v. 168. Formed with suffix -y (or -ed) from ME. grisel, a gray-haired man. 'That olde grisel is no fole' [fool]; Gower, C. A. iii. 356; bk. viii. 2407. Grisel is formed, with suffix -el, from F. gris, gray. —MHG. gris, gray; cf. G. greis, a gray-haired man. Der. From the same source, gris-ette, q. v.

GROAN, to moan. (E.) ME. gronen, Chaucer, C. T. 14892 (B 4076); Ancren Riwe, p. 326. AS. grānian, to groan, lament; Grein, i. 524. Teut. type **grain-ōjan*; from a root **grei-*, as in OHG. grinan, G. greinen, to grin, weep, growl. Der. groan-ing.

GROAT, a coin worth 4d. (O. Low G.) ME. grote, Chaucer, C. T. 7546 (D 1964); P. Plowman, B. iii. 137 (and see the note). —O. Low G. grote, a coin of Bremen, described in the Bremen Wörterb. ii. 550. The word (like Du. groot) means 'great'; the coins being greater than the small copper coins (Schwaren) formerly in use in Bremen. Cognate with E. great. See Great.

GROATS, the grain of oats without the husks. (E.) ME. grotes, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, p. 47. In the A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 292, appears the weak pl. grotan [miswritten gratan in the late MS.]. This represents a weak sb. closely allied to AS. grot, an atom, particle, whence ME. grotes, bits, in Havelok, 472. The AS. grot is from **grut-*, weak grade of **greut-*; see Grit (2). Cf. AS. grūt, coarse meal, whence E. grout, coarse meal, grouts, dregs. See Grout.

GROCER, a dealer in tea and sugar. (F.—L.) Formerly also spelt grossier, as in Holinshed's Chron. Rich. II, an. 1382 (R.); Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 193. Spelt grocer, Libell of Eng. Policye, l. 346; AF. grossour, Liber Custumarum, i. 304. A. In old times, those whom we now call grocers were called spicers. Dealers were of two kinds, as now; there were wholesale dealers, called grossers or engrossers, and retail dealers, called regrators; see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 547, note 1. Thus the word grossier, properly 'a whole-sale dealer,' is now spelt grocer, and means 'a spicer.' B. Borrowed from OF. grossier, 'a grocer; marchand grossier,' that sells only by great, or utters his commodities by wholesale; Cot. —OF. gros, fem. grosse, great. See Gross. Cf. Norm. dial. grossier, a spicer, a grocer (Moisy). Der. grocer-y, formerly grossery, from OF. grosserie, 'great worke; also grossery, wares uttered, or the uttering of wares, by whole-sale; Cot.

GROG, spirits and water, not sweetened. (F.—L.) 'O'er grog or ale;' Byron, The Island, ii. 19. 4. An abbreviation of grogam. 'It derived its name from Admiral Edward Vernon, who wore grogam breeches, and was hence called "Old Grog." About 1745 [rightly, Aug. 1740], he ordered his sailors to dilute their rum with water. . . He died 30 Oct., 1757;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. See Grogam.

GROGRAM, a stuff made of silk and mohair. (F.—L.) Formerly grogran, a more correct form (Skinner). 'He shall have the grograns at the rate I told him;' Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 1. 9. Spelt grograyn in Cavendish, Life of Wolsey (ab. 1557), ed. 1893, p. 147. So called because of a coarse grain or texture. —OF. grosgrain, 'the stuffe grogeran;' Cot. —F. gros, gross, great, coarse; and grain, grain. See Gross and Grain. Der. grog, q. v.

GROIN, the fold or depression between the abdomen and each of the upper thighs. (E.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 227. But groin is an incorrect variant of grine or gryne, a common form in the 16th century, from the still older form grind or grynd. Thus Cotgrave has: 'Aines, f., the grine or groyne of man or woman.' Palsgrave has: 'Grynde bytwene the thyghe and the belly, ayne.' Spelt grynde in Lanfranc's Chirurgie, p. 41 (ab. 1400). Prob. from AS. grynde, an abyss; the lit. sense being 'depression.' Teut. type **grundjom*, from **grunduz*, ground; see Ground. Cf. prov. E. grindle, a small gutter (E. D. D.); Bavar. grund, a valley. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 124. Der. groin-ed, i. e. having angular curves which intersect or fork off.

GROMWELL, a plant. (F.—L.?) The letter w is a modern insertion; Cotgrave, s. v. gremil, gives gromill, grummell; Palsgrave has gromell; the Prompt. Parv. has gromaly or gromely sede; grummel occurs in the 14th century, in Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 52, l. 1; and the Cath. Angl. has both grumelle and gromelle. [The gromwell or Lithospermum is remarkable for its hard, stony seeds; whence Lithospermum (stony seed) as the name of the genus.] —OF. gromil, 13th cent.; Hatzfeld (s. v. gremil). Also found as OF. gremil, grenil, grinnil (Godefroy). Origin uncertain. 1. The form grenil seems to rest upon L. grānum, a grain; cf. 'granum solis, gromylle;' Voc. 587. 9. 2. Gromil perhaps is from OF. grume, stone of a grape (Godefroy). Prov. grum, the same (Mistral). —L. grūmus, a little heap. (Körting, § 4372.) ¶ Roquefort gives OF. grumel, 'pelote, peloton;' dimin. of grume, used to mean all kinds of grain. Cotgrave also gives grum as a Languedoc word synonymous with F. grain, grain. It would seem that the L. grūmus came to mean a mere clot of earth. Cf. Span. grumillo, a small clot, a curd; from grumo, a clot. We may note that gromwell is also called in E. gray millet or (in Cotgrave) graymill, which is merely the F. grémil ingeniously made partly significant, and was clearly suggested by the fact that gromwell was sometimes called miliū solis as well as granum solis; see Cath. Anglicum.

GROOM, a servant, lad. (F.) Now esp. used of men employed about horses; but orig. of wider use. It meant a lad, servant in waiting, or sometimes, a labourer, shepherd. ME. grom, grome; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 135; P. Plowman, C. ix. 227; Havelok, 790; Ancren Riwe, p. 422; Polit. Songs (C. S.), p. 237, l. 3. β. Of uncertain origin; Stratmann cites the MDu. grom and Olcel. gromr, a boy, as parallel forms; but neither of these forms are authorised or have any obvious etymology, and may be borrowed from ME. grome, which occurs in the Ancren Riwe (ab. 1225). γ. It seems to be from an OF. **grome*, only found in the dimin. form gromet; or else it was shortened from the form gromet itself. Godefroy has OF. gromet, grummet, groumet, gourmet (F. gourmet), a servant, valet, groom. Cf. Span. grumete, a ship-boy. Referred by Diez to L. grūmus, a small heap, a clot. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 125. See Grume, Grummet.

GROOVE, a trench, furrow, channel. (Du.) In Skinner; rare in early books. 'Groove, a channel cut out in wood, iron, or stone;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Also: 'Groove or Grove, a deep hole or pit sunk in the ground, to search for minerals;' id.; see Manlove's poem on Leadmines (E. D. S. Glos. B. 8, ll. 18, 22, and the Glossary), printed A. D. 1653. Cf. ME. grofe, a mine; Wars of Alex., 5394. —Du. groef (Du. oe = E. oo) or groeve, a trench, channel, groove; also, a mine, quarry. —Du. graven (pt. t. groef), to dig; cognate with AS. grafan. See Grave (1). ¶ The ME. grofe may be from Icel. gröf, a pit (cognate with Du. groef); but mod. E. groove, a channel, first found in 1659, is borrowed from the 2nd grade of the Dutch verb.

GROPE, to feel one's way. (E.) ME. gropen, C. T. 646 (A 644); used in the sense of 'grasp,' King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1957. AS. grāpian, to seize, handle, Grein, i. 524; a weak verb, and unoriginal. Teut. type **graiþōjan*, from **graiþā*, f. sb., as seen in AS. grāþ, the grip of the fingers, grasp of the hand; id. From **graiþ*, 2nd grade of Teut. **greiþan*-, AS. griþan, to gripe. See Gripe. β. Similarly the Icel. greiþ, grip, grasp, is allied to griþa, to gripe; and the OHG. greifa, a two-pronged fork (cited by Fick, iii. 111) to OHG. grifan, to gripe. And see Grasp. Der. grop-ing-ly.

GROSS, fat, large. (F.—L.) Very common in Shak.; Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43, &c. 'This grosse imagination;' Frith's Works, p. 140, col. 2. Spelt grosse in Palsgrave. —OF. gros (fem. grosse), 'grosse, great, big, thick;' Cot. —L. grossus, thick (a late form). Der. gross-ly, gross-ness, gros-beak or gross-beak (F. gros bec, great beak, the name of a bird), grocer, q. v., grocer-y; also gross, sb., engross, in-gross, gro-gram, grog.

GROT, a cavern. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) 'Umbrageous grots and caves;' Milton, P. L. iv. 257. —F. grotte, 'a grot, cave;' Cot. —Ital. grotta, 'a caue, a grot;' Florio. (Cf. Prov. croto (Mistral), formerly cropta, cited by Littré). —Late L. crypta, L. crypta, a crypt, cave, grotto. From Greek; see Crypt. And see Grotto. Doublet, crypt; also grotto. Der. grot-esque, q. v.

GROTTO, a cavern. (Ital.—L.—Gk.) A corruption of the older form grotta. 'And in our grottoes;' Pope, tr. of Homer's Odys. b. x. 480. (Pope had his own grotto at Twickenham.) 'A grotta, or place of shade;' Bacon, Essay 45 (Of Building). —Ital. grotta, a grotto, whence F. grotte. See Grot.

GROTESQUE, ludicrous, strange. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) 'Grotesque and wild;' Milton, P. L. iv. 136. 'And this grotesque design;' Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 1044. —OF. grotesque; pl. grotesques, 'pictures wherein all kinds of odde things are represented;' Cot. —Ital. grottesca, 'antick worke;' Florio. [So called because such paintings were found in old crypts and grottoes.] —Ital. grotta, a grotto. See Grot, Grotto. ¶ Sir T. Herbert uses the Ital. form. 'The walls and pavements, . . . by rare artificers carved into story and grotesco work;' Travels, ed. 1665, p. 147.

GROUND, the surface of the earth. (E.) ME. grund, ground, Chaucer, C. T. 455; Havelok, 1979; Layamon, 2296. AS. grund; Grein, i. 530. + Du. grond; Goth. **grunduz*, only in the comp. grundu-wadduz, a ground-wall, foundation; Luke, vi. 48, 49; OHG. grunt, G. grund. Teut. type **grunduz*; also **grunthoz*, as in Icel. grunnr, bottom (Dan. Swed. grund). We also find Gael. grunnd, Irish grunni, ground, bottom (from Norse or E.). Der. ground, verb (Chaucer, C. T. 416, A 414); ground-less, ground-less-ly, ground-less-ness, ground-ling, q. v., ground-sill, q. v.; also ground-floor, -ivy, -plan, -rent, -swell, -work. Also grounds, q. v.

GROUNDLING, a spectator in the pit of a theatre. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 2. 12; Beaum. and Fletcher, Prophetess, i. 3. 32. A term of contempt; made by suffixing -ling, a double dimin. ending (-ling), to the sb. ground. 2. There is also a fish called the groundling, so called because it keeps near the bottom of the water; the Low G. name is gründlink (Berghaus).

GROUNDS, dregs. (E.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'Grounds, the settling or dregs of drink;' Kersey, ed. 1715. This peculiar use of the word occurs also in Gael. grunnas, lees, dregs; Irish gruntas, dregs, grunnas, lees, dross; both borrowed from E. See Ground.

GROUNDSEL, a small plant. (E.) Corruptly written greneswel in Levins. Better groundswell, as in Holland's Pliny, b. xxv. c. 13. AS. grundeswylige, grundeswelge, grundeswilie, with numerous references; Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 329. 'Senecio, grundswylige;' Wright's Vocab. i. 68, col. 2, l. 1. β. The lit. sense would thus seem to be 'ground-swallower,' i.e. occupier of the ground, abundant weed; as if from AS. grund, ground, and swelgan, to swallow; but this seems to be, after all, only a popular etymology, as a much older form appears in gundae-suelgiae, Epinal gloss. 976 (also spelt gundae-suelgae, gundesuilge, O.E. Texts, pp. 97, 98). Thus the orig. sense was 'swallower or absorber of pus;' from AS. gund, pus; and in fact the leaves are still used for reducing abscesses.

GROUNDSILL, the timber of a building next the ground; 'a threshold. (E.) Spelt grunsell, Milton, P. L. i. 460. 'And so fyll downe deed on the groundsyll;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 176 (R.). Compounded of ground and sill; see Sill.

GROUP, a cluster, assemblage. (F.—Ital.—G.) 'Group, in painting, a piece that consists of several figures;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'The figures of the groups;' Dryden, Parallel of Painting and Poetry, ed. Yonge, 1882, p. 164. —F. groupe, a group; not in Cot. —Ital. gruppo, a knot, heap, group, bag of money. —Teut. type **kroppoz*, as seen in G. kropf, a crop, craw, maw, wen on the throat; orig. a bunch. Cf. Icel. kroppr, a hunch or bunch on any part of the body. See Crop, of which group is a doublet. Der. group-ing, group, verb.

GROUSE, the name of a bird. (F.?) 'Grouse, a fowl, common in the North of England;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Prof. Newton has kindly sent me an earlier instance of the word. 'Attagen, perdis Asclepica, the Heath-cock or Grouss. . . Hujus in Anglia duas habemus species, quarum major vulgo dicitur, the black game, . . minor vero, the grey game;' Charleton, Onomasticon Zoicon, London, 1668, p. 73. Earlier examples are given in N.E.D. In Household Ordinances (1531), as given in Archæologia, iii. 157, we have the pl. forms 'grows and peions' [pigeons]. In Household Ordinances (1547), ed. 1790, p. 220, the pl. is grewes. In 1674, the pl. is grooses. It is possible that grows was at first a plural form, from a sing. grow or grou. Of unknown origin; though the form seems to be French. Giraldus Cambrensis, Topog. Hib. (Opera, Rolls Series, v. 47), has: 'gallinæ campestris, quas vulgariter grutas vocant.' ¶ Cotgrave, s.v. griesche, has 'the hen of the grice or moorgame.' This seems to be a mistake, as the form grice is otherwise unknown.

GROUT, coarse meal; in pl. grounds, dregs. (E.) Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xx. c. 7 (v. ii. p. 46) has: 'drie grout, or barley meale.' AS. grūt, groats, coarse meal; Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, Charter 235 (vol. i. p. 311). + Du. gruit, dregs. Cf. Icel. grautr, porridge; Dan. grød, boiled groats; Swed. gröt, thick pap; G. grütze, groats. Allied to Lithuan. grudas, corn. Also to groats, q.v.; grit, q.v. Der. gru-el, q.v.

GROVE, a collection of trees. (E.) In Shak. M. N. Dr. iii. 1. 390. ME. groue (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1480 (A 1478); Layamon, 469. AS. gräf, a grove (Lye); but the word is very scarce. Leo refers to Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, Charter 305 (vol. ii. p. 100; see also vol. iii. p. 436). It is both masc. and neut. Teut. types **graiβos*, **graiβom*; from a root **greib*, which is wholly unknown. No cognate forms appear; unless we may compare Norw. greiv-la, a tree whose branches spread out wide like horns, greiv-la, v., to branch out, &c. (Röss).

GROVEL, to fall flat on the ground. (Scand.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 305. (Not found earlier.) The formation of the verb to grovel was due to a singular grammatical mistake. Groveling was in use as an adverb with the suffix -ling, but this was readily mistaken for the pres. part. of a verb, and, the -ing being dropped, the new verb to grovel emerged. β. Spenser uses the form groveling only. 'Streight downe againe herselfe, in great despight She groveling threw to ground;' F. Q. ii. 1. 45. 'And by his side the Goddess groveling Makes for him endlesse mone;' F. Q. iii. 1. 38. 'Downe on the ground his carkas groveling fell;' F. Q. iii. 5. 23. In the last instance, the sense is 'flatly' or 'flat.' γ. The ME. groveling or grovelings is a mere adverb. 'Grouelyng to his fete thay felle;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1120. 'Grouelynge, or grovelingys, adv. Suppine, resupine;' Prompt. Parv. p. 215. After which is added: 'Grouelynge, nom. Suppinus, resupinus;' showing that, in A.D. 1440, the word was beginning to be considered as being sometimes a nom. pres. part. Note also: 'Therfor groflynges thou shall be layde;' Towneley Myst. p. 40. Way notes that in Norf. and Suff. the phrase 'to lie grubblins,' or with the face downwards, is still in use. δ. The correct ME. form is grofling or groflinges, where the -ling or -lings is the adv. suffix that appears in other words, such as dark-ling, flat-ling; see Darkling, Headlong. The former part of the word could be used alone, with exactly the same adverbial sense; as 'they fillen gruf;' Chaucer, C. T. 951 (A 949). The phrase is of Scand. origin. —Icel. grüfa, in the phr. liggja á grüfu, to lie grovelling, to lie on one's face, symja á grüfu, to swim on one's belly. Cf. also grüfa, verb, to grovel, couch, or cower down. Also grufla, to grovel, which justifies the E. verb, though proof of direct connexion between the words is wanting; Swed. dial. gruva, flat on one's face; ligga á gruve, to lie on one's face; Rietz. Root uncertain; perhaps related to Grub. Der. grovell-er.

GROW, to increase, become enlarged by degrees. (E.) ME. growen, P. Plowman, B. xx. 56; C. xiii. 177. AS. grōwan, pt. t. grēow, pp. grōwen; Grein, i. 529. + Du. groeien (weak); Icel. grōa; Dan. groee; Swed. gro. β. Esp. used of the growth of vegetables, &c., and hence closely connected with the word green, which is from the same root. Teut. root **grō-*, **gra-*. See Green and Grass. ¶ The AS. word for the growth of animals is properly weaxan, mod. E. wax, q.v. Der. grow-er; growth, Othello, v. 2. 14, not an AS. word, but of Scand. origin, from Icel. gröðr, gröð, growth.

GROWL, to grumble. (F.—Teut.) In Skinner, ed. 1671; and in Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 195. Lowl. Sc. has the form gurle. Wyclif, Select Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 249, has: 'A mete, not defied [digested] makith mannis bodi to groule' [rumble]. —AF. grouler, to make a noise like a crane; Nominal, ed. Skeat, l. 837; Picard grouler, to murmur, grumble (Corblet). —EFries. grullen; WFlem. grollen, to rumble (De Bo); Du. grollen, to grumble. + G. grollen, to bear ill-will against, to be angry; also, to rumble (as thunder). β. Of imitative origin; see Grumble. And see grol in Franck. Der. growl, sb., growl-er.

GROWTH, sb.; see under Grow.

GRUB, to grope in the dirt. (E.) ME. grubben, grobben. 'To grobbe vp metal;' Chaucer, Ætas Prima, l. 29. 'So depe thei grubbed and so fast;' Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 94, l. 268. Cf. EFries. grubbeln, to grope about. From Teut. type **grubjan-*; from **grub*, weak grade of **graban-*, to dig; see Grave (1). From the same grade are Low G. grubbeln, to grope about; G. grübeln, OHG. grubilōn, to rake, dig, grub up; and ON. gryffa, a pit. Cf. Grovel. Der. grub, sb., an insect; grubb-er, grubb-y.

GRUDGE, to grumble, murmur. (F.) ME. gruchen, gruchen, grucchen, to murmur. 'Why grucchen we?' Chaucer, C. T. 3060 (A 3058). The weakened form grugge occurs in The Dictes and Sayings by Lord Rivers, pr. by Caxton, 1477, fol. 17, back, l. 8. 'zif þe gomes grucche' = if the men murmur, P. Plowman, B. vi. 219. Spelt grochi, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 67; grucchen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 186. The earliest spelling was grucchen, then gruggen, and finally grudge, Tempest, i. 2. 249. —OF. groucier, groussier, groucher, to murmur, Godefroy; later gruger, 'to grudge, repine;' Cot. Cf. Low L. groussäre, to murmur, found in a passage written A.D. 1358 (Ducange). Godefroy also gives the spelling croucier, evidently an older form. β. Of uncertain origin, but prob. Scandinavian; cf. Icel. krytja (pt. t. krutti), to murmur, krutr, a murmur; Swed. dial. kruttla, to murmur (Rietz); Norw. grutta, to grunt, to growl (Ross); MDan. krutte, to grumble (Kalkar). ¶ Different from mod. F. gruger, to crunch. Der. grudge, sb., grudg-ing-ly.

GRUEL, liquid food, made from meal. (F.—O. Low G.) 'Or casten al the gruvel in the fyr;' Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 711. —OF. gruel (Burguy) > mod. F. gruau. —Late L. grütellum, a dimin. of grütum, meal, in a Carolingian text (Brachet). —O. Low G. grūt, cognate with AS. grūt, groats, grout, coarse meal. See Grout.

GRUESOME, horrible, fearful. (Scand.) Also grewsome, grusome, grousum. 'Death, that grusome carl;' Burns, Verses to J. Rankine. And see Jamieson's Sc. Dict., s.v. grousum. 'Grousome, horridus;' Levins, 162. 10. —Dan. grusom, cruel; (Kalkar has MDan. grusommelig, cruel, violent); Norw. gruvsam, frightful, also timid (Aasen). —Dan. gru, horror, terror; with Dan. suffix -som, as in virksom, active. Cf. Dan. grue, to dread, gruelig, horrid; Norw. gruva, to dread; Swed. gruflig, dreadful, dismal, horrid, dire. + Du. gruwzaam, terrible, hideous; MHG. grüwesam, grüsam, G. grausam, cruel, horrible. Further allied to E. dial. growze, EFries. grüsen, G. grausen, to shiver, shudder.

GRUFF, rough, surly. (Dutch.) A late word. 'Such an one the tall, . . . such an one the gruff;' Spectator, no. 433. First in Lowl. Sc., in 1533; and in 1563 we find 'grof stanis,' coarse, rough stones, in Winyet's Works, i. 114 (S. T. S.). —Du. grof, coarse, plump, loud, blunt, great, heavy. + EFries. and Westphal. grof; EFries.

gruffig, coarse; Swed. grof, coarse, big, rude, gross; Dan. grov, the same; G. grob, coarse; OHG. gerob, grop. β. The OHG. form shows that the initial g stands for ge (= AS. ge = Goth. ga-), a mere prefix. The syllable -rob may perhaps be allied to the weak grade corresponding to AS. hræof, rough. Der. gruff-ly, gruff-ness.

GRUMBLE, to growl, murmur. (F.—G.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 249; &c. — Picard grumeler, groumeler (Corblet); F. grommeler, 'to grumble, repine'; Cot. — Low and prov. G. grummelen, to grumble; frequentative of the verb grummen, grumen, or grommen; cf. Bavarian sich grumen, to be vexed, fret oneself, Schmeller, 997; MDu. grommelen, frequent. of Du. grommen, to grumble, growl. From **grumm-*, weak grade of Teut. **gremman-*, to rage, as in MHG. and AS. grimman, to rage, str. vb. β. The orig. sense is 'to be angry,' and the word is closely connected with G. gram, vexation; see further under Grim. Der. grumbl-er, grumbl-ing-ly.

GRUME, a clot, as of blood. (F.—L.) Very rare; first used in 1619 (N. E. D.). Eden has groume, a lump; Decades, p. 145 (1555); ed. Arber, p. 182. Commoner in the adj. grum-ous. 'Grumous, full of clots or lumps'; Kersey, ed. 1715. — OF. grume, 'a knot, bunch, cluster'; Cot. Cf. F. grumeau, a clot of blood; id. — L. grūmus, a little heap or hillock of earth. Der. grum-ous.

GRUMMET (1), GROMET, a ship's boy, cabin-boy. (F.) Rare in books. 'In everie ship . . a boye, which is called a gromet'; Lambarde, Peramb. of Kent, ed. 1826, p. 110. — OF. gromet, a servant, groom; see further under Groom.

GRUMMET (2), GROMMET, a ring of rope. (F.—C.) 'Grommets, little rings on the upper side of the yard, to which the caskets are fastned'; Coles (1684). Spelt grummets; Capt. J. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 793 (1626). — OF. gromette (Hatzfeld), s. v. F. gourmette, the curb of a bridle (affected by F. gourmer, to curb). According to Thurneysen, p. 102, the OF. gromette is from Bret. chadenn gromm, lit. 'bent chain,' the chain of a curb; where gromm is the fem. of Bret. kroumm, bent, W. crum. Celt. type **krumbos*, bent; Stokes-Fick, p. 100.

GRUNSEL, used for Groundsill, q. v.

GRUNT, to make a sound like a pig. (E.) ME. grunten, Ancren Riwle, p. 326. AS. grunnetan (O. E. Texts, p. 559), an extension of grunian, to grunt, found in Ælfric's Grammar (Bosworth). + Dan. grynte, to grunt; Swed. grymta, to grunt; G. grunzen. + L. grunnire, OL. grundire; Gk. γρῦν. β. All of imitative origin; cf. Gk. γρῦ, the noise made by a pig. Der. grunt-er.

GUAIACUM, a genus of trees in the W. Indies; also, the resin of the lignum vitæ. (Span.—Hayti.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Kersey, ed. 1715. Latinised from Span. guayaco or guayacan, lignum vitæ. From the language of Hayti; see Frampton, tr. of Monardes, Joyfull Newes, p. 10, back. Gua-, in Haytian, is a prefix or article (R. Eden, p. 168). See Notes on E. Etym., p. 347.

GUANACO, a kind of Peruvian sheep. (Span.—Peruv.) Spelt guancos, pl., in E. G., tr. of Acosta (1604); bk. i. c. 21, p. 70. — Span. guanaco, 'a beast in the West Indies, like a great sheep'; Pineda. — Peruv. huanacu, a wild sheep; see Skeat, Notes on E. Etym., p. 343.

GUANO, the dung of a certain sea-fowl of S. America, used for manure. (Span.—Peruvian.) See E. G., tr. of Acosta, 1604, p. 311 (bk. iv. c. 37); Prescott, Conq. of Peru, c. 5. — Span. guano or huano (Pineda). — Peruvian huanu, dung; see Skeat, Notes on E. Etym., p. 343.

GUARANTEE, GUARANTY, a warrant, surety. (F.—OHG.) Guarantee appears to have been misused in place of guaranty, garanty, or garranti, probably owing to the use of words such as lessee, feoffee, and the like; but the final -ee is (in the present case) incorrect. Blount's Nomo-lexicon gives the spellings garanty and warranty. Cotgrave has garrantie and warrantie. — AF. garantie; OF. garrantie (better garantie), 'garrantie, warrantie, or warrantise', Cot.; fem. form of garanti, warranted, pp. of garantir, to warrant. — OF. garant, also spelt guarant, warant (Burguy), and explained by Cotgrave as 'a vouchee, warrant, warranter, supporter, maintainer.' See further under Warrant. ¶ The OHG. w became in OF. first w, then gu, and finally g. Thus OF. garant and E. warrant are the same word. Der. guarantee, vb.

GUARD, to ward, watch, keep, protect. (F.—Teut.) Common in Shak. both as verb and sb. [He also has guardage, Oth. i. 2. 70; guardant, Cor. v. 2. 67; guardian, Macb. ii. 4. 35. But the verb does not seem to be much older, though the sb. is in Lydgate, De Deguil. Pilgrimage, 8793. Rich. cites guardens (=guardians) from Surrey, tr. of Virgil's Æn. b. ii. l. 1013 (E. version).] — OF. garder, 'to keep, ward, guard,' Cot.; also spelt guarder, as in the Chanson de Roland, l. 9; and, in the 11th century, warder. — OSax. wardōn, to watch; l. 9; and, in the 11th century, warder. See further under Ward. ¶ The sb. cognate with E. ward, vb. See further under Ward. ¶ The sb. guard is older than the verb; from OF. garde, garde; from OTeut. **wardā*, a guard. Der. guard-age, guard-ant, guard-ian (=OF. garden, which Cot. explains by 'a warden, keeper, garden'); guard-ed, guard-ed-ly, guard-ed-ness; guard-room, guard-ship.

guard-ed, guard-ed-ly, guard-ed-ness; guard-room, guard-ship. Doublet, ward; the doublet of guardian is warden, q. v.

GUAVA, a genus of trees and shrubs of tropical America. (Span.—W. Indian.) The Span. name guayaba is no doubt borrowed from the W. Indian name; see Skeat, Notes on E. Etym., p. 347. Spelt guayva in 1593; Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, v. 532; in an account of Drake's expedition to Panama, &c. The pl. is spelt guayavos in E. G., tr. of Acosta, bk. iv. c. 24 (1604). The guava is found within the tropics in Mexico, the W. Indies, and S. America.

GUDGEON, a small fresh-water fish. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. i. 1. 102. ME. gojone. 'Goione, fische; gobius, gobio,' Prompt. Parv. — F. goujon, 'a gudgeon-fish, also the pin which the truckle of a pully runneth on; also, the gudgeon of the spindle of a wheele; any gudgeon'; Cot. — L. gōbionem, acc. of gōbio, a by-form of gōbius, a gudgeon. — Gk. καβίος, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench. The Sicilian name was κῶθος (Liddell and Scott).

GUELDER-ROSE, a species of Viburnum, bearing large white ball-shaped flowers. (Du. and F.) So named from some resemblance of the flower to a white rose. See Rose. The word guelder stands for Geldre, the F. spelling of the province of Gelderland in Holland.

GUERDON, a reward, recompence. (F.—OHG.) In Chaucer, C. T. 7460 (D 1878). He also has the verb guerdonen = to reward; Pers. Tale, Group I, l. 283, Six-text ed.; but this is derived from the sb. Guerdonles occurs in Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, l. 399. — OF. guerdon, 'guerdon, recompence, meed'; Cot. Equivalent to Ital. guiderdone, a guerdon. — Low L. widerdōnum, which, according to Littré, is found in the time of Charles the Bald. β. This is a singular hybrid compound from OHG. wider (G. wieder), against, back again, and the L. dōnum, a gift; but the whole word is a mere adaptation of OHG. widarlōn, a recompence. γ. The OHG. word has its exact cognate in the AS. wīðer-lēan, a recompence, Grein, ii. 697; which is compounded of the prefix wīðer, against, back again (connected with E. with- in the word with-stand) and the sb. lēan, payment, which is from AS. lēon, to lend; and lēon is also allied to E. loan. See With, Donation, and Loan. ¶ The same notion of 'back' occurs in the synonymous words re-ward, re-compence, re-muneration.

GUERRILLA, GUERRILLA, an irregular warfare carried on by small bands of men. (Span.—OHG.) We speak of 'guerrilla warfare,' making the word an adj., but it is properly a sb. — Span. guerrilla, a skirmish, lit. a petty war; dimin. of guerra, war (=F. guerre). — OHG. werra, discord, the same word as E. war. See War.

GUESS, to form an opinion at hazard, to conjecture. (Scand.) The insertion of u was merely for the purpose of preserving the g as hard. ME. gessen; Chaucer, C. T. 82. — Dan. gisse; Swed. gissa, to guess; MDan. gidze, gitse, getse (Kalkar); NFriesic gezze, gedse (Outzen); the oldest form being getze = **getsa*, from the base **get-*. β. Closely related to Dan. gjette, to guess; the mod. Icel. gizka = **gil-ska*, a denominative vb. from a base **git-isko-*, for **get-isko-*, i.e. acquisitive, is from Icel. geta (1), to get, (2) to guess. The latter word is cognate with AS. gitan, and mod. E. get; and it is highly probable that guess meant originally 'to be ready to get,' being a secondary (desiderative) verb formed from get. See Get. Der. guess, sb.; guess-work.

GUEST, a stranger who is entertained. (E.) The u is inserted to preserve the g as hard. The word is prob. Anglian or Scand., as the AS. gi > y. ME. gest, Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 1374; also gist, Ancren Riwle, p. 68. AS. gæst; also gist, giest; Grein, i. 373. Cf. Icel. gestr; Dan. gæst; Swed. gäst. + Du. gast; Goth. gasts; G. gast. Teut. type **gastiz*; Idg. type **ghostis*, whence L. hostis, a stranger, guest, enemy; Russ. gost(e), a guest, alien. β. The orig. sense appears to be that of 'alien,' whence the senses of 'enemy' and 'guest' arose. See Hostile. Der. guest-chamber, Mark, xiv. 14. From the same root, host (2), hostile.

GUIACUM, a genus of trees. See Guaiacum.

GUIDE, to lead, direct, regulate. (F.—Teut.) ME. gyden, Chaucer, C. T. 13410 (B 1670). [The ME. form gyen is also common (C. T. 1952); see Guy.] The sb. is gyde, C. T. 806 (A 804). — OF. guider (14th cent.), from older guier, to guide; the d being inserted by the influence of OProv. guidar (Bartsch). Cf. also Ital. guidare; and Span. guiar. Romanic type **guidäre*. — OSax. wītan (AS. wītan), to pay heed to; OHG. wīzan. — Teut. root **weit-*, **wit-*; Idg. root WEID, to know; whence also AS. wis, wise, knowing, wisa, a leader, director, wisian, to guide, lead, show the way. See Wit, Wise. Der. guide, sb., guide-post, guid-on, guise, guy-rope.

GUIDON, a pennon; or a bearer of a pennon. (F.—Teut.) 'With guidons trail'd on earth'; Sandys, Travels (1632), p. 84. — F. guidon, 'a standard, or banner, under which a troop of men of arms do serve; also, he that bears it'; Cot. — F. guid-er, to guide; as pointing the way. See above.

GUILD, GILD, an association of men of one class for mutual aid. (E.) The insertion of u, though common, is quite unnecessary, and is unoriginal. See English Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, Early Eng. Text Soc., 1870. ME. gilde, gilde; the pl. gilden=gilds, occurs in Layamon, 32001. Cf. AS. gegyldscipe, a guild, gegilda, a member of a guild, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, Æthelst. v. 8. 6; vol. i. p. 236. These words are formed from AS. gild, a payment, a guild (from the fee paid); also spelt gield, gyld, geld; from the AS. gildan, to pay, whence also mod. E. yield; see Yield; cf. also Icel. gildi, a payment, a guild, from gjalda (pres. t. geld), to pay; Dan. gilde, a feast, a guild. + Du. gild, a guild, company, society; Goth. gild, tribute-money, Lu. xx. 22. ¶ The hard g is remarkable, as the AS. form would rather have given yild. It is usually referred to the influence of Icel. gildi, but we must not forget the possible influence of Latin and AF., which adopted the word very early. The N. E. D. cites L. gildis ab. 1009, L. gildam ab. 1189; and AF. forms with gui appear early likewise. It is unlikely that L. g was sounded as y, and it is certain that AF. gu was hard. Der. guild-hall, ME. gild-halle, yeldhalle, Chaucer, C. T. 372 (A 370).

GUILDER, a Dutch coin. (Du.) In Shak. Com. Errors, i. 1. 8; iv. 1. 4. A corrupt form of Du. gulden, a guilder, 'a piece of 20 stivers' (Sewel). Hexham has Carolus gulden, 'a Charles gilder'; Philippus gulden, 'a Philip's gilder'; the former evidently refers to Charles V. Cf. G. gulden, gulden, a florin; as the name implies, the coin was at first of gold, though afterwards made of silver. The MHG. name was guldin, or guldin pfenninc, the golden penny (L. aureus denarius). + Goth. gultheins, golden. From Teut. adj. type **gulthīnoz*, golden; formed (with suffix -inoz=L. -inus), from Teut. **gulth-om*, gold. See Gold.

GUILE, a wile, cunning, deceit. (F.—Teut.) In early use. ME. gile, gyle; Layamon, 3198, 16382 (later text); and common later.—OF. guile, guille (Godefroy). From a Teut. source; see Wile. Der. guile-ful (ME. gileful, Wyclif, Job, xiii. 7, Ps. v. 7), guile-ful-ly, guile-ful-ness (ME. gilefulness, Wyclif, Eccus. xxxvii. 3); guile-less, guile-less-ness. Doublet, wile.

GUILLEMOT, a sea-bird. (F.—Teut.) 'A guillemot or sea-hen'; Ray, Willughby's Ornithol., p. 324 (1678); N. E. D. 'Wil-mots, Nodies, Gules'; Hakluyt's Voy. iii. 76.—F. guillemot (1555, Hatzfeld). Dimin. of F. Guillaume, as wilmot and prov. E. willock (guillemot) are of William.—OHG. Wilhelm. In the Norm. dialect roi Guillemot means our William I. (Robin).

GUILLOTINE, an instrument for beheading men. (F. personal name.) 'Named after the supposed inventor, a physician named Joseph Ignatius Guillotin, who died in 1814. The first person executed by it was a highway robber named Pelletier, April 25, 1792'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Der. guillotine, verb.

GUILT, crime, punishable offence. (E.) The u is inserted to preserve the g as hard. ME. gilt, Gower, C. A. ii. 122 (bk. iv. 3610); Chaucer, C. T. 5057 (B 637); commonly also gult, as in Ancren Riwle, p. 258. AS. gylt, a crime; Grein, i. 536. Teut. type **gultiz*, m. Some have connected it with AS. geldan, to pay; but this seems to be inadmissible. No cognate word is known. Der. guilt-less=ME. giltless, Chaucer, C. T. 5063 (B 643); guilt-less-ly, guilt-less-ness; also guilt-y=AS. gyltig, Matt. xxiii. 18; guilt-i-ly, guilt-i-ness.

GUINEA, the name of a (former) gold coin. (African.) 'So named from having been first coined of gold brought by the African company from the coast of Guinea in 1663, valued then at 20s.; but worth 30s. in 1695. Not coined since 1813. Reduced at various times; in 1717 to 21s.'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Der. guinea-fowl, guinea-hen, named from the same country. ¶ The guinea-pig is from S. America, chiefly Brazil; so that the name is an erroneous one, as in the case of turkey.

GUIPURE, a kind of lace; a kind of gimp. (F.—Teut.) First in 1843; see N. E. D.—F. guipure, which Cotgrave defines as 'a grosse black thread, covered or whipt about with silk.'—F. guiper, to cover (thus) with silk; Godefroy gives the pp. guipé.—Teut. **wipan*, to wind; as in Goth. weipan, to crown (whence waips, a wreath); G. weifen, to reel, to wind. Cf. MDan. gimpe, fringe; mod. Dan. gimpe, to whip about with silk (Larsen).

GUISE, way, manner, wise. (F.—OHG.) ME. gise, gyse, Chaucer, C. T. 995 (A 993). Also guise, guyse; first used in Layamon, 19641, later text, where the earlier text has wise.—OF. guise, way, wise; cf. Prov., Port., Span., and Ital. guisa. [The gu stands for an older w.]—OHG. wisa, MHG. wise (G. weise), a way, wise, guise; cognate with AS. wise, whence E. wise, sb. See Wise (2). Doublet, wise (2).

GUITAR, a musical stringed instrument. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. ['Give me my guittara']; Ben Jonson, Gipsies Metam. § 1 (end); from Span. guitarra.—F. guitare (Littre).—L. cithára (accented as in Gk.).—Gk. κιθάρα, a kind of lyre. ¶ The ME. form of the word is giterne, Chaucer, C. T. 3333. This also is of F. origin; Cotgrave gives 'Giterne, or Gitterre, a gitterne.'

GULES, the heraldic name for red. (F.—L.) ME. goules; Gawain and Grene Knt., 619. Richardson cites: 'And to bere armes than are ye able Of gold and goules sete with sable'; Squier of Low Degre, l. 203, in Ritson's Metrical Romances, vol. iii. At p. 484 of Rob. of Glouc., ed. Hearne, is a footnote in which we find: 'that bere the armes of goules with a white croys.'—F. gueules, 'gules, red, or sanguine, in blazon,' Cot.; OF. goles, goules, geules; AF. goules, gules, P. Langtoft, ii. 430, answering to Late L. gulæ, gules. ¶ Ducange shows that L. gulæ also meant 'skins of ermine dyed red.' Cf. also OF. goler, to border with fur; engoulé, engolé, angolé, trimmed with fur. Cf. 'murium rubricatas pelliculas, quas gulas vocant'; S. Bernard, Epist. 42. c. 2. The origin of Late L. gulæ (in this sense) is doubtful.

GULE, a hollow in the sea-coast, a bay, a deep place, whirlpool. (F.—Ital.—Gk.) Formerly spelt goulfe, gulph. 'Hast thou not read in bookes Of fell Charybdis goulfe?' Turberville, Pyndara's Answer to Tymetes. ME. goulf; 'the goulf of Venyse'; Mandeville, Trav. ch. v. p. 54. Milton has the adj. gulphie, Vacation Exercise, l. 92; Spenser has gulphing, Virgil's Gnat, 542.—F. golfe (formerly also goulfe), 'a gulph, whirlpool'; Cot.—Ital. golfo, a gulf, bay.—Late Gk. κόλφος, variant of Gk. κόλπος, the bosom, lap, a deep hollow, bay, creek. [Cf. the various senses of L. sinus.] Der. gulf-y, en-gulph.

GULL (1), a web-footed sea-bird. (C.) 'Timon will be left a naked gull, Which flashes now a Phoenix'; Timon, ii. 1. 31.—Com. gull, gwilan, a gull (Williams); W. gwylan; Bret. gwelan; Gael. and Irish faoileann, Gael. faoileag, Irish faoileog, OIrish foilenn. Celtic type **woilennō*. The prob. sense was 'wailer,' from its cry; cf. Bret. gwel-a, to weep. Stokes-Fick, p. 285.

GULL (2), a dupe. (Low G.) 'Yond gull Malvolio'; Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 73. There seems to have been a false notion that the gull was a stupid bird. Thus a person who entraps dupes is called a gull-catcher, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 204; and it is possible that popular etymology wrongly associated this word with GULL (1); cf. owl, goose, dotterel. But it is probably quite a distinct word, and borrowed from Du. or Low G.—Low G. gull, adj., soft, mild, good-natured, open-hearted (Berghaus); MDu. gulle, 'a great wench without wit,' Hexham; EFries. gul, soft, mild, liberal (Koolman). Der. gull, verb, Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 145; gull-ible.

GULLET, the throat. (F.—L.) ME. golet, gullet; Chaucer, C. T. 12477 (C 543). 'Golet, or throte, guttur, gluma, gula'; Prompt. Parv.—F. goulet, 'the gullet'; Cot. Dimin. of OF. gole, goule (mod. F. gueule), the throat.—L. gula, the throat. Brugm. i. § 499. From the same source we have gules, q. v. Doublet, gully, q. v.

GULLY, a channel worn by water. (F.—L.) In Capt. Cook's Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 4 (R.). Formerly written gullet. 'It meeteth afterward with another gullet, i. e. small stream; Holinshed, Desc. of Britain, c. 11 (R.).—F. goulet, 'a gullet, . . . a narrow brook or deep gutter of water'; Cot. Thus the word is the same as Gullet, q. v.

GULP, to swallow greedily and quickly. (E.) 'He has gulped me down, Lance'; Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit without Money, A. i. sc. 2. ME. gulpen, gloppen, glubben; 'Til Gloton hedde i-gloupet (v. r. ygloppid, ygulpid) a galoun'; P. Plowman, A. v. 191. Of imitative origin. Cf. EFries. and Du. gulpen, to swallow eagerly; MDu. golpen, gulpen, to quaff (Hexham); Du. gulp, a great billow, wave, draught, gulp. β. Further allied to Swed. glupande, Dan. glubende, voracious; Swed. glup-sk, Dan. glub-sk, ravenous. From Teut. root **gleup-*; as in Swed. dial. gliopa (pt. t. glop, pl. glupum), to swallow, Norw. glupa (pt. t. glaup), to swallow. Der. gulp, sb.

GUM (1), the flesh of the jaws. (E.) ME. gome. In Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 218, l. 250, where it means 'palate.' 'Gome in manys mowthe, pl. goomys, Gingiva, vel gingive, plur.'; Prompt. Parv. AS. gōma, the palate, jaws; Grein, i. 523. + Icel. gōmr, the palate; Swed. gom, the palate; OHG. guomo, G. gaumen, the palate. β. Allied to Gk. χαῖνος, gaping; Lith. gomurys, the palate. See Brugm. i. § 196; where the AS. ō is explained as from ōu. Der. gum-boil.

GUM (2), the hardened adhesive juice of certain trees. (F.—L.—Gk.—Egypt.) ME. gomme, Chaucer, Good Women, 121; P. Plowman, B. ii. 226.—F. gomme, gum.—L. gummi.—Gk. κόμμι, gum; but not orig. a Gk. word. Prob. of Egyptian origin; cf. Coptic komē, gum; Peyron, Dict., p. 67. Der. gum, verb; gummi-ferous, from L. suffix -fer, bearing, which from ferre, to bear; gumm-y, gumm-i-ness.

GUN, an engine for throwing projectiles. (Scand.) ME. gonne, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 1643; P. Plowman, C. xxi. 293; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 3268. See note by Way in Prompt. Parv. p. 218. [W. gun, Irish gunna, gun, are from E.] Shortened from Icel. Gunnhildr, a fem. proper name (whence Gunnild in Havelok), a name once given to war-engines, and appropriately enough, because the element gunn- (Icel. gunnr) signifies 'war,' and hildr signifies 'battle.' This is confirmed by an account of munitions at Windsor Castle in 1330-1 (Exchequer Accts. Q. R. Bundle 18, no. 34), which mentions 'una magna balista de cornu quæ vocatur Domina Gunilda.' In ME. Gunne would be the regular pet-name for Gunnhildr. A Gunnild is mentioned in the A. S. Chron. an. 1045 (MS. D); and Gunn is now a surname. Cf. also gonnylde gnoste, a spark of a gun; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 237. ¶ In Icel. poetry, gunn-eldr (war-fire) meant 'a sword,' and gunn-máni (war-moon) meant 'a shield.' Der. gunn-er, gunn-er-y, gun-barrel, -boat, -carriage, -cotton, -powder, -shot, -smith, -stock; also gun-wale, q. v.

GUNNY, a coarse kind of sacking for bags. (Hind.—Skt.) See Yule.—Hind. and Mahratti gōn, gōni, a sack, sacking.—Skt. gōni, a sack. Perhaps orig. made of hide; cf. Skt. gāus (stem gō-), an ox (Uhlenbeck).

GUNWALE, the upper edge of a ship's side. (Scand. and E.) Corruptly pronounced gunnel [gun'l]. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Gunwale, or Gunnel of a Ship, a piece of timber that reaches from the halfdeck to the forecastle on either side;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Wales or Wails, those timbers on the ship's sides, which lie outmost, and are usually trod upon, when people climb up the sides to get into the ship;' id. β. Compounded of gun and wale; see Wale. So called because the guns used once to rest upon it; cf. 'some guns, that went with a swivel upon their gunnal;' Dampier, Voy., ed. 1729, i. 400. The sense of wale is 'stick' or 'beam,' and secondly, 'the mark of a blow with a stick.'

GURGLE, to flow irregularly, with a slight noise. (Ital.—L.) 'To gurgling sound Of Liffy's tumbling streams;' Spenser, Mourning Muse of Thestylis, l. 3. Imitated from Ital. gorgolare, 'to gurgle as water doth running;' Florio; also gorgogliare, to gargle, purl, bubble, boil; cf. gorgoglio, a warbling, the gurgling of a stream. The latter answers to a L. type **gurguliare*, formed as if from L. gurgulio, the gullet. See Gorge. Brugmann, i. § 499. ¶ To be distinguished from gargle, though they were confused.

GURNARD, GURNET, a kind of fish. (F.—Prov.—L.; with Teut. suffix.) 'Gurnard, fische;' Prompt. Parv. 'Gurnarde, a fysshe, gournault;' Palsgrave. See Levins. Shak. has gurnet, 1 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 13. Cotgrave has: 'Gournault, a gurnard fish;' but the E. word answers rather to OF. gornard (Godefroy), F. **gournard* (the suffixes -ard, -ald, -auld being convertible); and this again stands, by the not uncommon shifting of r, for **grounard*. The latter form is represented in Cotgrave by 'Grougnaut, a gurnard,' marked as being a Languedoc word; cf. Prov. gournau, grougnau, a gurnard (Mistral), from Prov. gourgnau, grougna, to grunt (which shows that the word is really of Prov. origin). β. Again, we find another form of the word in MF. grongnard (mod. F. grogard), explained by Cotgrave as 'grunting;' and, in fact, the word gurnard means 'grunter.' Godefroy has OF. groignart, gruinard, 'grondant.' 'The gurnards... derive their popular appellation from a grunting noise which they make when taken out of the water;' Eng. Cyclop. s. v. Trigla. γ. The F. grogard is formed by the suffix -ard (=OHG. hard, hart) from F. grogner, for OF. grogner, gronir, to grunt.—L. grunnire, to grunt. See Grunt. The Prov. word is similar.

GUSH, to flow out swiftly. (E.) ME. guschen, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1130. Cf. EFries. gūsen, to gush out; Low G. gusen (Berghaus). Allied to MDu. guysen, to gush out (Kilian); Icel. gusa, to gush, spirt out, a derivative of the strong verb gjōsa (pt. t. gauss, pp. gosinn), to gush, break out as a volcano. Also Du. gudsen, to gush; 'het bloed gudsde uyt zyne wonde, the blood did gush out of his wound;' Sewel. From Idg. ✓GHEU, to pour (Gk. χέειν); whence ✓GHEUD, to pour (L. fundere (E. fuse), Goth. giutan, G. giessen, Icel. gjōta, Swed. gjuta, Dan. gyde, AS. gēotan, to pour). See Gut, Gaysir, and Fuse. ¶ The final sh suggests a Teut. base **gut-sk*, extended from **gut-*, weak grade of Teut. **geut-*, Idg. **gheud-*. Der. gush-ing, gush-ing-ly; cf. gust (1), q. v.

GUSSET, a small insertion of cloth in a garment, for the purpose of enlarging it. (F.) Particularly used of a piece of chain-mail protecting a joint in armour (see gloss. to Fairholt's Costume), or an insertion in the armhole of a shirt. ME. guschet, Wallace, bk. ii. 63. The word occurs in Du Wes; see Palsgrave's Dict., p. 906, col. 3. —F. gousset, 'a gusset; the piece of armour, or of a shirt, whereby the arme-hoole is covered;' Cot. β. Named from some fancied resemblance to the husk of a bean or pea; the word being a dimin. of F. gousse, 'the huske, swad, cod, hull of beanes, pease, &c.;' Cot. + Ital. guscio, a shell, husk; a word of unknown origin.

GUST (1), a sudden blast or gush of wind. (Scand.) In Shak. Mer. of Ven. iv. 1. 77.—Icel. gustr, a gust, bläst; cf. also gjōsta, a gust. Cf. Swed. dial. gust, a stream of air from an oven (Rietz); Norw. gust, a gust.—Icel. gus-, weak grade of gjōsa, to gush. See Gush. Der. gust-y, gust-i-ness.

GUST (2), relish, taste. (L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 33; and in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 39.—L. gustus, a tasting, taste (whence F. goût); cf. gustāre, to taste.—✓GEUS, to choose; whence also Skt. jush, to enjoy, like, Gk. γεύειν, to taste, and E. choose. See Choose. Doublet, gusto, the Ital. form of the word. Der. dis-gust, q. v.

GUT, the intestinal canal. (E.) [The same word as prov. E. gut, a water-course, wide ditch; ME. gote, Prompt. Parv. p. 205; see Way's note.] ME. gutte, gotte; P. Plowman, B. i. 36; Rob. of Glouc. p. 289, l. 5865. AS. gūt; pl. guttas, 'receptacula viscerum;' A. S. Gloss. in Mone's Quellen und Forschungen, i. 1830, p. 333, l. 198. β. The orig. sense is 'channel;' cf. Swed. gjuta, a mill-leaf (Rietz); Dan. gyde, a lane; MDu. gote, a channel (Hexham); G. go-sa, a drain; ME. gote, prov. E. gut, a drain, water-course. γ. All from the Idg. weak grade **ghud-* (Teut. **gut-*) of ✓GHEUD, to pour; see Gush, Fuse. ¶ Not connected with gutter, which is of Latin origin. Der. gut, verb.

GUTTA-PERCHA, a solidified juice of certain trees. (Malay.) 'Made known in England in 1843;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The trees yielding it abound in the Malayan peninsula and in Borneo.—Malay gatah, guttah, gum, balsam (Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 283); and percha, the name of the tree producing it (though now obtained from other trees). Hence the sense is 'gum of the Percha-tree.' β. The spelling gutta is obviously due to confusion with the L. gutta, a drop, with which it has nothing whatever to do. 'Gutta in Malay means gum, percha is the name of the tree (Isonandra gutta), or of an island from which the tree was first imported (Pulo-percha);' Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th ed., i. 231. The former seems to be right; see C. P. G. Scott, Malayan Words in E.

GUTTER, a channel for water. (F.—L.) ME. gotere; Prompt. Parv. The pl. goteres is in Trevisa, i. 181.—OF. gutièrre, goutièrre; see quotations in Littré, s. v. gouttière, a gutter; cf. Span. goutiera, a gutter. β. Esp. used of the duct for catching the drippings of the eaves of a roof; from OF. gote, goute (mod. F. goutte), a drop.—L. gutta, a drop. See Gout (1). Der. gutter, verb.

GUTTURAL, pertaining to the throat. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. gutturall, 'gutturall, belonging to the throat;' Cot.—L. gutturālīs; formed with suffix -ālīs from guttur, the throat. Der. gutturall-ly (2).

GUY (1), a hideous creature, a fright. (F.—Ital.—Teut.) Orig. an effigy of Guy Fawkes; carried about and burnt on Nov. 5; see Hone, Every-day Book, i. 1430.—F. Guy.—Ital. Guido; a name of Teut. origin.

GUY (2), GUY-ROPE, a rope used to steady a weight. (F.—Teut.) A nautical term. Spelt guie in Capt. J. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 795. Dunbar has guye = a guide; p. 278, l. 1 (S. T. S.). In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Guy, a rope made use of to keep anything from falling or bearing against a ship's side, when it is to be hoisted in;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—OF. guie, guye, a guide; cf. Span. guia, a guide, leader, guy.—F. guier, to guide; earlier form of F. guider, to guide. See Guide.

GUZZLE, to swallow greedily. (F.) 'Guzzle, to drink greedily, to tipple;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Cotgrave explains OF. martiner by 'to quaffe, swill, guzzle.' Prob. suggested by OF. goziller, gosillier, to vomit, also to prattle, talk (Godefroy); whence (in Cotgrave) the comp. desgoziller, 'to gulp, to swallow down.' But OF. desgosiller had both senses. Cf. also F. s'égosiller, to make one's throat sore with shouting; clearly connected with OF. gosillier, the throat (Godefroy), and F. gosier, the throat. β. Littré connects gosier with Lorraine gosse, the throat, the stomach of fatted animals. Remoter source unknown; see Körting, § 4237. Der. guzzl-er.

GYMNASIUM, a place for athletic exercises. (L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. gymnasium.—Gk. γυμνάσιον, an athletic school; so called because the athletes were naked when practising their exercises.—Gk. γυμνάσιον, to train naked, to exercise.—Gk. γυμνός, more commonly γυμνός, naked. See Prellwitz. Der. From the same source are gymnast = Gk. γυμναστής, a trainer of athletes; gymnast-ic, gymnast-ics; also gymnick, from L. gymnicus, Gk. γυμνικός, Milton, Samson Agon. 1324; also gymno-sophist, Ben Jonson, Fortunate Isles (Merefool), from L. pl. gymno-sophistæ, Gk. pl. γυμνο-σοφισταί, lit. 'naked sophists.' Also gymnotus, an electric eel; lit. 'naked back,' from the absence of dorsal fins upon it; short for gymno-nōtus, from Gk. γυμνό-ς, naked, and νῶτον, back.

GYNARCHY, government by a woman. (Gk.) Spelt gunarchy by Lord Chesterfield (Todd). Coined from Gk. γυν-ή, a woman, and -αρχία, ἀρχή, rule, from ἀρχεω, to rule; cf. olig-archy, tetr-archy, &c. See Queen.

GYPSUM, a mineral containing sulphate of lime and water. (L.—Gk.—Arab.) 'Gypsum, parget, white-lime, plaister; also, the parget-stone;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—L. gypsum, chalk.—Gk. **γύψον*, for γύψος, chalk; Herod. vii. 69. β. Prob. of Eastern origin; cf. Pers. jabsin, lime; Arab. jibs, plaster, mortar; Rich. Dict. p. 494.

GYPSEY, GIPSY, one of a certain nomad race. (F.—L.—Gk.—Egypt.) Spelt gipsen by Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 86; see Giplian in Nares. This is a mere corruption of ME. Egyptien, an Egyptian. Chaucer calls St. Mary of Egypt 'the Egipcien Marie;' C. T., B 500 (l. 4920); and Skelton, swearing by the same saint, says 'By Mary Gipcy!' Garland of Laurell, 1455.—OF. Egyptien, Egiphtien.—Late L. Ægyptiānus, formed with suffix -ānus from L. Ægyptius, an Egyptian. — Gk. Αἰγύπτιος, an Egyptian. — Gk. Αἴγυπτος, Egypt. From the name of the country. ☞ The supposition that they were Egyptians was false; their orig. home was India. Der. Hence perhaps gyp, a college scout (at Cambridge); cf. Gip (dog's name) in David Copperfield. The common fable that gyp is from Gk. γύψ, a vulture, is unsupported.

GYRE, a circle, circular course. (L. — Gk.) 'Or hurtle rownd in warlike gyre'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 5. 8; cf. iii. i. 23. — L. gýrus, a circle, circuit. — Gk. γῦρος, a ring, circle; cf. γῦρος, adj. round. GYRFALCON, GERFALCON, a bird of prey. (F. — Teut. and L.) 'Gyrfalcon, a bird of prey'; Kersey, ed. 1715; spelt gerfalcon in Cotgrave; girefaucon in Trevisa, i. 323, to translate L. gýrofalco. a. The prefix is French, the word being from OF. gerfaucon, girfaucon (Godefroy), MF. gerfault, 'a gerfalcon, the greatest of hawks, called also falcon gerfault'; Cot. Cf. Ital. gerfalco, girfalco, girifalco, a gerfalcon. — Low L. gērofalco, a gerfalcon; gīrefalco, in 55 Hen. III, Excerpta Historica, p. 20; and (corruptly) gýrofalco (as if named from his circling flight; see GYRE above). The right form is gīrefalco. — MHG. girvalke; where gir is from OHG. gīr-, for giri, greedy (whence also G. geier, a vulture); and valke represents L. falco, a falcon. See Gier-eagle.

GYRON, a term in heraldry. See Giron.

GYVES, fetters. (AF. — E.?) In early use; only in the plural. ME. giues, gyues (with u for v); Layamon, 15338; P. Plowman, C. xvi. 254. Chron. of London, p. 89. Of unknown origin; presumably Teutonic, and perhaps E.; probably from AS. widdē, a thong, cord; see Layamon, 15338, 22833 (N. E. D.).

'Haberdasher, a hatter, or seller of hats; also, a dealer in small wares'; Kersey. 'A haberdasher, mercier; a poore, petty haberdasher of small wares, merceror'; Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. a. So named from selling a stuff called hapertas in Anglo-French, of which (possibly) hats were sometimes made. In the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 225, is mentioned 'la charge de hapertas'; in the E. version by Riley, 'the load of hapertas.' And again, at p. 230, we find 'les feez de leyne d'Espagne, wadmāl, mercerie, canevās, . . . feutre, lormerie, peil, haberdassherie, esquireux, . . . et des autres choses qe l'em acustument par fee, vi. d'; thus Englished by Riley: 'the fixed charge upon wool of Spain, wadmāl, mercery, canvas, . . . felt, lymere, pile, haberdassherie, squirrel-skins, . . . and upon other articles that pay custom at a fixed rate, is six pence.' β. The word is probably of Teutonic origin; but its history is not known. Der. haberdasher-y.

HABERGEON, a piece of armour to defend the neck and breast. (F. — OHG.) ME. habergeon, Chaucer, C. T. 76; hauberion, Wyclif, 1 Kings, xvii. 5. — OF. haubergeon, hauberjon, a small hauberk (Supp. to Godefroy); dimin. of OF. hauberc; see Hauberk.

F. habituel), explained 'habitually' by Cotgrave, and from Late L. habitu-ālis, formed with suffix -ālis from habitu-, for habitus, habit; habit-u-al-ly; habitu-ate, from L. habituātus, pp. of habituāre, to bring into a certain habit or condition. Also, from the same source, habit-ude, q. v., habitable, q. v., habit-at, q. v., habit-at-ion, q. v., hab-ili-ment, q. v. From the L. habēre are also numerous derivatives, as ex-hibit, in-hibit, in-habit, pro-hibit; ab-le, ab-ili-ty, dis-hab-ille; debt; prebend; binnacl, malady.

A. iii. 104; bk. vii. 586. — F. habitable, 'inhabitable'; Cot. — L. habitābilis, habitable; formed with suffix -bilis from habitā-re, to dwell, frequentative form of L. habēre, to have (supine habit-um). HACKNEY, HACK, a horse let out for hire. (E.) ME. hakeney, Chaucer, C. T. 16027 (G 559); P. Plowman, B. v. 318. Late L. hackeneius, as early as 1292; 'pro hackeneio ferente tunicam nocturnam et res alias'; Expenses of John of Brabant; in The Camden Miscellany, vol. ii. p. 2. Cf. AF. un hakenay, Stat. Realm, i. 288 (1340); sur hakenai, P. Langtoft's Chron. ii. 250 (1307). Hackeneius means 'belonging to Hackney,' spelt Hakeneia in 1199, Rotuli Curiae Regis, ed. Palgrave, i. 216; ME. Hakeney (Middlesex); Inquis. p. Mortem (1285). See Supplement. Der. hackney-ed.

HADDOCK, a sea-fish. (E.) ME. haddocke. 'Hic morus, a haddocke'; Wright's Vocab. i. 222, col. 2. Spelt haddock, Prompt. Parv.; and in Liber Albus, p. 376. Of unknown origin; the Gael. adag, a haddock, is a borrowed word from English; similarly, the OF. hadot, 'a salt haddock' (Cotgrave), is plainly a less original form. The suffix -ock is perhaps diminutive, as in hill-ock. The Irish name is codog.

HADES, the abode of the dead. (Gk.) Spelt Ades, Milton, P. L. ii. 964. — Gk. ᾠδης, ᾠδης (Attic), αἰδης (Homeric), the nether world. 'Usually derived from a, privative, and ιδᾶν, to see [as though it meant 'the unseen']; but the aspirate in Attic makes this very doubtful; Liddell and Scott. See Homer, II. i. 3. And see the account in Prellwitz.

HADJI, HAJJI, one who has performed the pilgrimage to Mecca. (Arab.) First in 1612. — Arab. hājī, 'a Christian who has performed the pilgrimage to Jerusalem, or a Muhammedan [who has performed] that to Mecca; Rich. Dict., p. 549. Orig. the latter.

HÆMATITE, HÆMORRHAGE; see Hematite, Hemorrhage.

HAFT, a handle. (E.) ME. haft, heft. 'Los in the haft' = loose in the handle; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 339. Spelt haft, Wyclif, Deut. xix. 5; heft, Prompt. Parv. AS. hæft, a handle; Grein, ii. 20. + Du. heft, hecht; Icel. hefti (pron. hefti); G. heft, a handle, hilt, portion of a book. β. The orig. sense is 'that which is seized, or caught up'; cf. the pp. seen in Icel. hoftir, one who is taken, a prisoner, and Goth. hafis, joined together; with which compare L. captus, taken. γ. All from the verb seen in AS. hebban, L. capere. See Heave.

HAG, an ugly old woman. (E.) ME. hagge; P. Plowman, B. v. 191. The pl. heggen is in the Ancræn Riwe, p. 216. The AS. form is fuller, viz. hægtis, hægtesse, used to translate L. pythonissa, a prophetess or witch; Wright's Vocab. i. 60, col. 1. In the same column, we also find: 'Tisiphona, wælcyrre; Parcæ, hægtesse; on which Mr. Wright remarks: 'The Anglo-Saxon of these words would appear to be transposed. Hægtesse means properly a fury, or in its modern representative, a hag, and would apply singly to Tysiphone, while wælcyrrian was the name of the three fates of the A. S. mythology.' + G. hexe, a witch; OHG. hāzissa, apparently short for hagazissa, also hagazussa. β. The suffix -esse, OHG. -zissa, contains a feminine ending; the base is possibly (as has been suggested) the AS. haga (G. hag), a hedge, bush; it being supposed that witches were seen in bushes by night. See Hedge, and Haggard. Schade refers the AS. -esse to teswian, to harm, from tesu, harm; thus -esse = 'harmer.' Der. hag-gard (2), q. v.; and even haggard (1) is from the same base.

HAGGARD (1), wild, said of a hawk. (F.—G.) Orig. the name of a wild, untrained hawk. 'As hagard hauke;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 19. 'For haggard hawkes mislike an emptie hand;' Gascoigne's Flowers, Memories, John Vaughan's Theme, l. 26. — OF. hagard, 'hagard, wild, strange, froward . . . Faulcon hagard, a hagard, a falcon that preyed for herself long before she was taken;' Cot. β. The orig. sense is 'living in a hedge,' hence, wild. Formed with suffix -ard (of G. origin, G. -hart), from MHG. hag (OHG. hac), a hedge; see Hedge, Haw. See Hatzfeld.

HAGGARD (2), lean, hollow-eyed, meagre. (F.—G.) 'With haggard eyes they stare;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georg. iv. 370. Altered sometimes to haggad, as if 'hag-like.' 'The ghostly prudes with haggad face;' Gray, A Long Story, 4th stanza from end. Wedgwood cites from Lestranger's Fables: 'A haggad carrion of a wolf and a jolly sort of dog with good flesh upon's back fell into company.' A peculiar use of the word above; 'wild,' hence 'gaunt.' See Hatzfeld.

HAGGIS, a dish commonly made in a sheep's maw, of the minced lungs, heart, and liver of the same animal. (Scand.; with AF. suffix.) ME. hagas, hageys, hakkys, Prompt. Parv. Also spelt haggas, haggas, hakeys; see notes to Prompt. Parv., and to the Catholicism Anglicum, p. 169; also the account in Jamieson. The AF. form is hagiz; see Wright's Vocab. i. 172, l. 6: 'Estrere le hagiz du pocenet,' to take the haggis out of the pot. Formed, with AF. suffix -iz, -eis, from the verb hag, to cut, found also in the E. frequentative haggle; see Haggle (1); cf. Norm. dial. haguer, to cut up (Moisy). Cf. also Du. haksel, minced meat, and Low G. haks un plüks, a kind of hash or mince. ¶ The Gael. taigeis, a haggis, is merely borrowed from English.

HAGGLE (1), to cut awkwardly, mangle. (Scand.) 'York, all haggled over;' Hen. V, iv. 6. 11. A frequentative of Lowland Sc. hag, to cut, to hew. — Icel. höggva, to hew, from a base **haggu-* (Noreen, § 72, note 8); Swed. dial. hagga, to hew (Rietz); allied to E. hew; see Hew.

HAGGLE (2), to be slow in making a bargain. (Scand.) Cotgrave explains OF. harceler by 'to vex, harry, . . . also, to haggle, hucke, hedge, or pautler long in the buying of a commodity.' He similarly explains barguigner by 'to chaffer, . . . dodge, haggle, brabble, in the making of a bargain.' It is plain that higgle is a weakened form of the same word. β. It seems probable that haggle is ultimately the same as the word above. Similarly we have Du. hakkelen, to mangle, to stammer; explained by Sewel as 'to hackle, mangle, fault'; also Du. hakketeren, to wrangle, cavil; both derivatives of Du. hakken, to hack. Der. haggl-er; and see higgle.

HAGIOGRAPHIA, holy writings. (Gk.) A name given to the last of the three Jewish divisions of the Old Testament, containing Ps., Prov., Job, Dan., Ez., Nehem., Ruth, Esther, Chron., Cant., Lam., and Eccles. — Gk. ἁγιογραφία (βιβλία), books written by inspiration. — Gk. ἅγιος, for ἅγιος, devoted to the gods, sacred, holy; and γράφειν, to write. β. ἅγιος is allied to Skt. yaj, to worship. For γράφειν, see Graphic. Der. hagiograph-y (in Minshew), hagiographer; cf. hagio-logy, sacred literature.

HA-HA, HAW-HAW, a sunk fence. (F.) 'Leap each ha-ha of truth and common sense;' Mason, Ep. to Sir W. Chambers, l. 14. — F. haha, an obstacle that interrupts one suddenly; called ha! ha! because it laughs at the man's surprise who meets it. — F. ha! intersection of laughter. ¶ With the pron. haw-haw compare E. spaw for spa. 'Just by the haw-haw;' Murphy, Three Weeks after Marriage, A. i. sc. 1 (1776).

HAIL (1), frozen rain. (E.) ME. hazel, Layamon, 11975; spelt havel in the later text. Later hayl (by loss of z or w), Chaucer, Good Women, Cleop. 76. AS. hagl, hagol; Grein. + Icel. hagl; Du., Dan., Swed. hagel; G. hagel. Teut. types **hag(a)loz*, m., **hag(a)lom*, n. Allied to Gk. κάχλη, a round pebble; so that hail-stone is tautological. Der. hail, verb, ME. hailen, Prompt. Parv.; also hail-stone, ME. hailstone, Wyclif, Wisdom, v. 23 (later text).

HAIL (2), to greet, call to, address. (Scand.) ME. heilen. 'Heylyn, or gretyn, saluto;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt heylenn (for hejlen), Ormulum, 2814. A verb formed from Icel. heill, sb., prosperity, good luck; a sb. formed from Icel. heill, adj., hale, sound. This sb. was particularly used in greeting, as in far heill, farewell! β. The usual Icel. verb is heilsa, to say hail to one, to greet one, whence ME. hailsen, to greet. In P. Plowman, B. v. 101, we have: 'I hailse hym hendeliche, as I his frende were' = I greet him readily, as if I were his friend; and, in this very passage, the Bodley MS. reads: 'I haile him.' Cf. Swed. hel, hale, Dan. heel, hale, whole. See Hale (1), and Whole.

HAIL! (3), an exclamation of greeting. (Scand.) 'All hail, great master! grave sir, hail, I come!' Temp. i. 2. 189. 'Hayl be þow, mary' = Lat. ave Maria; Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 422. — Icel. heill, hale, whole, adj., heill, good luck, sb. See Hail (2). ¶ Similar is the use of AS. wes hāl, lit. be whole, may you be in good health; but the AS. hāl produced the E. whole, and the Northern E. hale. See Wassail.

HAIR, a filament growing from the skin of an animal. (E.; but influenced by F.) ME. heer, her, Chaucer, C. T. 591 (A 589); Ancræn Riwe, p. 424. AS. hēr, hēr, Grein, ii. 24. + Du. haar; Icel. hār; Dan. haar; Swed. hår; G. haar, OHG. hār. Teut. type **hērom*, n. β. But this would have given a mod. E. form hear or here; cf. heares in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 4. The form now in use is due to the influence of ME. heire, heyre, a hair shirt; P. Plowman, B. v. 66; from OF. haire, a hair shirt; and this OF. form is from OHG. hār (< **hār-jā*), hair-cloth, a fem. derivative from OHG. hār, hair. γ. The AS. hēr is further related to Icel. haddr, hair (Teut. type **hazdoz*); and to Lith. kassa, plaited hair; L. cārere, to card wool. Der. hair-y, ME. heeri, Wyclif, Gen. xxvii. 11; hair-i-ness; hair-less; also hair-breadth, -cloth, -powder, -splitting, -spring, -stroke, -trigger, -worm.

HAIRIF, HAYRIF, goose-grass; Galium Aparine. (E.) AS. hege-rife, goose-grass. — AS. hege, a hedge (see Hay (2)); and -rife, prob. allied to Rife, and meaning 'abundant.'

HAKE, a sea-fish of the cod family. (Scand.) 'Hake, fysche, squilla;' Prompt. Parv. — Norw. hakefisk (lit. hook-fish), a fish with hooked under-jaw, esp. of salmon and trout (Aasen); from Norw. hake, a hook; see Hook. β. Compare AS. hacod, glossed by L. lucius; Wright's Vocab. i. 55, col. 2; whence Prov. E. haked, a large pike (Cambridgeshire); Blount's Gloss.; allied to G. hecht MHG. hechet, OHG. hachit, a pike. We may explain AS. hac-od as furnished with sharp teeth; from Teut. **hak-*, to pierce, as in OHG. hecchen, MHG. hecken (from **hak-jan-*), to pierce, sting; see Hack.

HAKIM, a physician, doctor. (Arab.) 'The Doctors are named hakeems;' Sir T. Herbert, Trav. (ed. 1638), p. 234. — Arab. hakim, wise; also a doctor, physician. — Arab. root hakama, he exercised authority; Rich. Dict., p. 577.

HALBERD, HALBERT, a kind of pole-axe; a combination of spear and battle-axe, with a long handle. (F.—MHG.) In Shak. Com. Errors, v. 185; and in Naval Accounts (1497); ed. 1896, p. 99. An AF. halebarde occurs in 1372; Antiq. Repertory, ii. 27, col. 2. Ben Jonson has halberdiers, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, iii. 5. 14. — OF. halebarde, 'an halberd'; Cot. — MHG. helmbarte, later halenbarte, mod. G. hellebarte, an axe with which to split a helmet, furnished with a conveniently long handle, derived from MHG. (and G.) helm, a helmet; and MHG. (and G.) barte, OHG. barta, a broad axe. The latter element is derived from G. bart, a beard; just as Icel. skeggja, an axe, is from skegg, a beard; and see Barb (1). Cf. Icel. barða, a halberd. β. The former element has also been explained as 'long handle;' from MHG. halm, a helve, handle; see Helm (1); but this explanation is no longer favoured; see Kluge and Darmesteter. The halberd may have been named from the jagged and irregular shape of the iron head. Der. halberd-ier, OF. halebardier, 'an halberdier,' Cot.

HALCYON, a king-fisher; as adj., serene. (L.—Gk.) 'Halcyon days' = calm days, 1 Hen. VI, i. 2. 131. It was supposed that the weather was always calm when the kingfishers were breeding. 'They lay and sit about midwinter, when daies be shortest; and the time whiles they are broody, is called the halcyon daies; for during that season, the sea is calme and nauigable, especially in the coast of Sicilie,' Holland's Pliny, b. x. c. 32. — L. halcyon, commonly alcyon, a kingfisher. — Gk. ἀλκυών, ἀλκυών, a kingfisher. β. The aspirate seems to be wrong, and due to association with Gk. ἄλς, sea, combined with κύων, 'conceiving,' by popular etymology; but the Gk. name is clearly cognate with L. alcedo, the true L. name for the bird.

HALE (1), whole, healthy, sound. (E.) 'For they bene hale enough, I trowe,' Spenser, Sheph. Kal., July, 107. A Northern E. form; spelt hale in Cursor Mundi, 24888. It is the Northern form corresponding to AS. hāl, whence ME. hool, E. whole. See Whole.

HALE (2), HAUL, to drag, draw violently. (F.—OHG.) ME. halen, halen; whence mod. E. hale and a later form haul; it appears as hall in 1581. Spelt halie, P. Plowman, B. viii. 95; hale, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 151. — F. haler, to pull; which first appears in the 12th cent. (Hatzfeld). — OHG. halōn, holōn (G. holen), to summon, to fetch. + OFries. halia, to fetch; OSax. halōn, to bring, fetch; Du. halen, to fetch, draw, pull; Low G. halen (whence Dan. hale, Swed. hala), to pull, haul. Allied to AS. ge-holian, to acquire, get; L. calāre, to summon; Gk. καλεῖν, to summon. See Calends. Der. haul, sb., haul-er, haul-age; also halyard, q. v. Hale is the older form; we find 'halede hine to grunde' = haled him to the ground, Layamon, 25888 (later text); haul first occurs in the pp. ihauled, Life of Beket, ed. W. H. Black, l. 1497.

HALF, one of two equal parts of a thing. (E.) ME. half; 'half a bushel,' Chaucer, C. T. 4242 (A 4244). OMerc. half; AS. healf, Northumb. half, Luke, xix. 8; where the later AS. text has half. + Du. half; Icel. hálfr; Swed. half; Dan. halv; Goth. halbs; G. halb, OHG. halp. β. In close connexion with this adj. we find ME. half, AS. healf (Gen. xiii. 9), Icel. hálfa, Goth. halba, OHG. halpa, used with the sense of 'side,' or 'part;' and this may have been the orig. sense. It occurs, e.g. in the Goth. version of 2 Cor. iii. 10, where the Gk. ἐν τούτῳ τῷ μέρῳ is translated by in thizai halbai. γ. A late example of the sb. is in the phrase 'left half' = left side, or left hand; P. Plowman, B. ii. 5. It survives in mod. E. behalf; see Behalf. Cf. Skt. kalp-aya (causal of kāp), to arrange, to distribute (Uhlenbeck). Der. halve, verb, ME. halven (= halven), Wyclif, Ps. liv. 24; halv-ed; half-blood, half-breed, half-bred, half-brother, half-sister, half-moon, half-pay, half-way, half-witted, half-yearly. Also half-penny, in which the f (as well as the l) has long been lost in pronunciation; spelt halpeny, P. Plowman, B. vi. 307. Also be-half.

HALIBUT, a large flat-fish. (E.) 'Hallibut, a fish like a plaice,' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Cotgrave translates OF. flatelet by 'a hallibut (fish).' Spelt halybut in Fabyan's Chron., ed. Ellis, p. 587. Compounded of ME. hali, holy (see Holy), and butte, a flounder, plaice, which occurs in Havelok, 759. See Butt (4). So called because excellent eating for holidays; the sense being 'holy (i.e. holiday) plaice.' The fish often attains to a large size, and weighs as much as 400 lbs. The cognate languages have similar names for it. + Du. heilbot; from heilig, holy, and bot, a plaice. Cf. Swed. helgflundra, from helg, holidays, and flundra, a flounder; Dan. helle-flynder, from hellig, holy, and flynder, a flounder.

HALIDOM, a holy relic. (E.) ME. halidom, halidam. 'That dar y swere on the halydom,' Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, l. 5629. AS. hāligdōm; 'on þām hāligdōme swerian,' swear on the halidom, Laws of Ethelred, sect. 3, c. 2; in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 293. — AS. hālig, holy; and -dōm, suffix, orig. the same as dōm, doom. See Holy and Doom. + Du. heiligdom; Icel. helgidōmr, Dan. heiligdom; G. heiligthum. ¶ By my halidam (with -dam for -dom) was imagined to refer to our Lady (Dame).

HALIMOTE, a court of a lord of a manor, held in a hall. (E.) ME. halimote, halimot. 'Vel halimoto,' Laws of Hen. I., in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 517. Lit. 'hall-moot;' from ME. hal, hall; and AS. gemōt, ME. imot, a moot, a meeting. See Hall and Moot. For the form of the word, cf. Handiwork.

HALL, a large room. (E.) ME. halle, Chaucer, C. T. 2523 (A 2521). OMerc. hall; AS. heall, heal, Grein, ii. 50; the acc. healle occurs in Mark, xiv. 15, where the latest text has halle. + Du. hal; Icel. hall, höll; OSwed. hall. (The G. halle is a borrowed word.) Teut. type **hallā*, f., for **hálnā*; from **hal*, 2nd grade of **helan*-, to cover, shelter; cf. AS. helan, to hide, conceal, cover; just as the L. cella is allied to L. cēlāre, to conceal, cover; the orig. sense being 'cover,' or place of shelter. See Cell. Der. hall-mark, guild-hall, halimote. ¶ Quite unconnected with L. aula.

HALLELUJAH, the same as Alleluiah, q. v.

HALLIARD, the same as Halyard, q. v.

HALLOO, HALLOW, to shout. (F.) ME. halowen, to chase with shouts; Chaucer, Book Duch. 379; Rich. Redeles, iii. 228; cf. 'Halow, schypmannys crye, Celeuma;' Prompt. Parv. — OF. halloer, to pursue with shouts (Godefroy). Of imitative origin. Cotgrave has F. halle, 'an interj. of cheering or setting on a dog,' whence haller, 'to hallow, or encourage dogs with hallowing.'

HALLOW, to sanctify, make holy. (E.) ME. halȝien, Layamon, 17496; later halwe, P. Plowman, B. xv. 557; halewe, halowe, Wyclif, John, xi. 55. AS. hālgian, to make holy; from hālig, holy. See Holy. And see below.

HALLOWMASS, the feast of All Hallows or All Saints. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Shak. Rich. II, v. i. 80. A familiar abbreviation for All Hallows' Mass = the mass (or feast) of All Saints. In Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 351, we have the expression alle halowene tyd = all hallows' tide; and again, the tyme of al halowene = the time of all hallows. β. Here hallows is the gen. pl. of hallow, ME. halwe, a saint; just as halowene is the ME. gen. pl. of the same word. The pl. halwes (= saints) occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14. γ. The ME. halwe = AS. hālgā, definite form of the adj. hālig, holy; so also the ME. halowene = AS. hālgēnā, definite form of the gen. pl. of the same adj. See Holy, and see Mass (2). 2. Similarly, hallowe'en = all hallows' even.

HALLUCINATION, wandering of mind. (L.) 'For if vision be abolished, it is called cæcitas, or blindness; if depraved, and receive its objects erroneously, hallucination;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 18. § 4. Also in Minshew, ed. 1627. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -tion, from L. hallūcinātio, allūcinātio, or ālūcinātio, a wandering of the mind. — L. hallūcinārī, allūcinārī, or ālūcinārī, to wander in mind, dream, rave. Cf. Gk. ἀλύειν, ἀλύειν, to wander in mind; ἡλεός, distraught. Der. hallucinate, verb, hallucinat-or-y.

HALM, the same as Haulm, q. v.

HALO, a luminous ring round the sun or moon. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'This halo is made after this manner;' Holland's Plutarch, p. 681 (R.). — F. halo (16th c.); Hatzfeld. — L. acc. halō, from nom. halōs, a halo. — Gk. ἅλως, a round threshing-floor, in which the oxen trod out a circular path; a halo.

HALSER (in Minshew), the same as Hawser, q. v.

HALT (1), lame. (E.) ME. halt, Havelok, 543. OMerc. halt, AS. healt; Northumb. halt, Luke, xiv. 21. + Icel. haltr; Dan. halt; Swed. halt; Goth. halts; OHG. halz. Teut. type **haltōz*. Cf. L. claudus, lame. Der. halt, verb = ME. halten, AS. healtian (Ps. xvii. 47); halt-ing, halt-ing-ly.

HALT (2), as sb., a sudden stop; as a verb, to stop quickly at the word of command. (F.—G.) 'And in their march soon made a halt;' Sir W. Davenant, The Dream, st. 19. A military term. Dr. Murray says it first came in as an Ital. term, without initial h; and Richardson quotes the form alt from Milton, P. L. vi. 532, where mod. editions have halt. The h is due to F. — F. halte (Hatzfeld); cf. Ital. alto; as in fare alto, to make a halt, to stop. — G. halt, halt! lit. hold! from halten, to hold, check, cognate with E. Hold (1), q. v. The word has passed, from G., into several languages.

HALTER, a rope for leading a horse, a noose. (E.) ME. halter, Gower, C. A. ii. 47; bk. iv. 1357. Also helfter = halter, in O. Eng. Hom., ed. Morris, i. 53, l. 18. AS. healfier (rare); the dat. on healfire = with a halter, occurs as a translation of L. in camo in Ps. xxxi. 12 (Camb. MS.), ed. Spelman; also spelt hælfre; we find 'capistrum, hælfre,' Wright's Vocab. i. 84, col. 1; cf. Thorpe's Analecta, p. 28, l. 1. + MDu. halfter (Hexham); G. halfter, a halter; OHG. halftira; O. Low G. haliftra (Schade). Teut. types **halftir-*, **haliftr-* (Franck). From the base **halb-*, apparently signifying 'to hold;' see Helve. Lit. 'something to hold by;' cf. L. cap-istrum, a halter, from L. capere, to take hold. Der. halter, verb.

HALVE, to divide in half. (E.) See Half.

HALYARD, HALLIARD, a rope for hoisting or lowering sails. (E.) Both spellings are in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. A form due to popular etymology, as if the ropes were so called because fastened to the yards of the ship from which the sails are suspended, and so hale or draw the yards into their places. But the d is excrement; from ME. halier, lit. 'a haler,' or 'hauler.' 'Oon uptye with 2 haliers;' Riley, Mem. of London, p. 370 (A.D. 1373); halliers, Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 847. See Hale (2).

HAM, the inner or hind part of the knee; the thigh of an animal. (E.) ME. hamme, homme; the pl. is spelt both hommen and hammes, Ancren Riwle, p. 122. AS. hamm; 'pöples, hamm;' Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 2; 'suffragines, hamma' (pl.); id. + Du. ham; Icel. höm (gen. hamar); OHG. hamma, prov. G. hamme. β. Connected by Brugmann (i. § 421) with Gk. κνήμη, the lower part of the leg. (But see Gambol.) Der. ham-string, sb., Shak. Troil. i. 3. 154; ham-string, verb.

HAMADRYAD, a dryad or wood-nymph. (L.—Gk.) Properly used rather in the pl. Hamadryades, whence the sing. hamadryad was (incorrectly) formed, by cutting off the suffix -es. Chaucer, C. T. 2930 (A 2938), has the corrupt form Amadrydes.—L. pl. hamadryades (sing. hamadryas), wood-nymphs.—Gk. pl. Ἀμαδρυάδες, wood-nymphs; the life of each nymph depended on that of the tree to which she was attached.—Gk. ἄμα, together with (i.e. coexistent with); and δρῦς, a tree. ἄμα is co-radicate with same; and δρῦς with tree. See Same and Tree.

HAME, one of the two bent sticks round a horse collar. (E.) Usually in the pl. hames. ME. hame; Catholicon Anglic. (1483). In Wright's Vocab. i. 168, the AF. esteles is glossed by hames; and bocelles by beru-hames; cf. prov. E. bargham (E. D. D.).+Du. haam. Cf. MDu. hamme, 'a cratch of wood to tie beasts to, or a yoke'; Hexham. Further allied to Skt. ṣamyā, the pin of a yoke; Pers. sim, saym, 'the neck-yoke of oxen,' Rich. Dict., p. 866. (Horn, § 764; Uhlenbeck.) Cf. Hem (1).

HAMLET, a small village. (F.—O. Low G.) ME. hamelet, of three syllables; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 269; spelt hamelat, Barbour, Bruce, iv. 195; hamillet, id. ix. 403 (Edinb. MS.); hamlet, id. ix. 403 (Camb. MS.).—AF. hamelet, Year-books of Edw. I, 1292–3, p. 25; dimin. of OF. hamel (whence mod. F. hameau). Hamel is used by Froissart, ii. 2. 232 (Littré). The suffix -el is also dimin.; the base being ham.—OFriesic hām, a home, dwelling; cognate with AS. hām, whence E. home. See Home. ¶ The fact that the word is French explains the difference of vowel.

HAMMER, a tool for driving nails. (E.) ME. hamer, hammer; Chaucer, C. T. 2510 (A 2508); Havelok, 1877. AS. hamor, Grein, ii. 11.+Du. hamer; Icel. hamarr; Dan. hammer; Swed. hammare; G. hammer; OHG. hamar. β. Of doubtful origin; Curtius (i. 161) connects it with Church Slavonic kamēni (Russ. kamēne), a stone. Perhaps orig. 'a stone implement'; Icel. hamarr also means 'a rock.' Der. hammer, verb, K. John, iv. 1. 67; hammer-head (a kind of shark).

HAMMERCLOTH, the cloth which covers a coach-box. (Hybrid; Du. and E.?) The N. E. D. quotes, from Mann. and Househ. Exp. (1465), p. 315, 'My mastyr bout [bought] . . . xlj elles of hamer-clothe.' Also, from Archæol. xvi. 91 (Document of the time of Queen Mary), 'Hamer-clothes, with our arms and badges of our colours . . . appertaininge unto the same wagon.' Of unknown origin. β. But perhaps the form hammer is an E. adaptation of the Du. word hemel (which was not understood); with the addition of E. cloth. Du. hemel (1) heaven, (2) a tester of a bed, roof of a coach, canopy, dais, baldachin (Calisch). 'Den hemel van een koetse, the seeling of a coach,' Hexham; explained by Sewel as 'the testern of a coach.' Cf. also MDu. hemelen, 'to hide, cover, adorn'; Hexham. Also WFlem. hemelwagen, a triumphal car (De Bo). γ. Cognate with Swed., Dan., and G. himmel, heaven, a canopy, tester. See hemel in Franck.

'Cotton for the making of hamaccas, which are Indian beds,' Raleigh, Discovery of Guiana, ed. 1596, p. 32 (Todd). 'Beds or hamacks,' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 6 (id.). Columbus, in the Narrative of his First Voyage, says: 'a great many Indians came to-day for the purpose of bartering their cotton, and hamacas, or nets, in which they sleep' (Webster). Cf. Span. hamaca, a hammock. Of West Indian origin; prob. Caribbean. Eden has amacca, ed. Arber, p. 192; hamaca, p. 230. ¶ Ingeniously corrupted in Dutch to hangmat, i.e. a hanging mat; but the older Du. form was hammak (Sewel).

HAMPER (1), to impede, hinder, harass. (E.) ME. hamperen, hampren; the pp. is hampred and hampred, Will. of Palerne, 441, 4694. 'For, I trow, he can hampre thee,' Rom. of the Rose, 6426. A difficult word; but it seems to be a nasalised form allied to Low G. hapern, EFries. haperen, to stop short. Cf. Alsace haperen, hamperen, to hesitate, proceed with difficulty; 's hampert, it goes hard (E. Martin); Low G. hampern, occasional form of happern, happeln, to be stuck fast (Berghaus); Du. haperen, to stop, stagnate, flag, fail; de machine hapert, the machine flags, is hampered; er hapert iets aan, there is a hitch; Pomeran. happern, hapern, to meet with difficulties; Swed. dial. happla, to stammer; happe, to back a horse; Dan. happe, to stutter. 'Cophinus, hampere,' Voc. 659. 10. A shortened form of Hanaper, q.v. 'Clerk of the Hamper or hanaper (Clericus hanaperii) is an officer in Chancery (Anno 2 Edw. iv. c. 1) otherwise called Warden of the Hamper in the same statute;'

Blount's Law Lexicon:—OF. hanapier; Low L. hanapērium, a large vessel for keeping cups in.—OF. hanap (Low L. hanapus), a drinking-cup.—OFrankish **hnapp* (Du. nap); OHG. hnappf (MHG. napf), a drinking-cup.+AS. hnæp, as a gloss to L. ciatus (cyathus); Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 2. Doublet, hanaper.

HAMSTER, a species of rodent, allied to the rat. (G.) 'The skins of hamsters,' Topsell, Four-footed Beasts, ed. 1658, p. 413.—G. hamster, 'German marmot,' Flügel.

HANAPER, the old form of Hamper (2). Cf. 'hanypere, or hamper, canistrum,' Prompt. Parv., p. 226. 'The Hanaper office in the Court of Chancery derives its name from the hanaperium, a large basket in which writs were deposited,' &c.; Way's note.

HAND, the part of the body used for seizing and holding. (E.) ME. hand, hond, Chaucer, C. T. 843 (A 841). AS. hand, hond; Grein, ii. 11.+Du. hand; Icel. hönd, hand; Dan. haand; Swed. hand; Goth. handus; G. hand; OHG. hant. Teut. type **handuz*, fem. Root uncertain. Some connect it with Goth. hinhthan, to seize, a strong verb (pt. t. hanth, pp. hunthans), only found in the compounds frahinthan, to take captive, ushinthan, to take captive. Der. hand, verb, Temp. i. 1. 25; hand-er; hand-barrow, hand-bill, hand-book (imitated from G. handbuch, see Trench, Eng. Past and Present); hand-breadth, Exod. xxv. 25; hand-cart; hand-ful (Wyclif has hondfullis, pl., Gen. xxxvii. 7); hand-gallop; hand-glass, hand-grenade, hand-kerchief (see Kerchief), hand-less, hand-maid (Gen. xvi. 1), hand-maiden (Luke, i. 48), hand-spike, hand-staves (Ezek. xxxix. 9), hand-weapon (Numb. xxxv. 18), hand-writing. And see hand-cuff, hand-i-cap, hand-i-craft, hand-i-work, hand-le, hand-sel, hand-some, hand-y.

HANDCUFF, a manacle, shackle for the hand. (E.) In Todd's Johnson, without a reference; rare in books. The more usual word (in former times) was hand-fetter, used by Cotgrave to translate OF. manette, manicle, and manotte. From hand and cuff. ¶ Too late to be an adaptation of ME. and AS. handcops, a handcuff. We find 'manica, hond-cops' in a vocabulary of the 12th century; Wright's Vocab. i. 95, col. 2.

HANDICAP, a race for horses of all ages. (E.) In a handicap, horses carry different weights according to their ages, &c., with a view to equalising their chances. The word was formerly the name of a game. 'To the Miter Taverne in Woodstreete . . . Here some of us fell to handycapp, a sport that I never knew before,' Pepys' Diary, Sept. 18, 1660. Orig. the same as the Neuwe Feire, described in P. Plowman, B. v. 327; which shows that it was a custom to barter articles, and to settle by arbitration which of the articles was more valuable, and how much (by way of 'amends') was to be given to the holder of the inferior one. From this settlement of 'amends' arose the system known as handicapping. The etymology is from hand i cap (=hand in cap); from the mode of drawing lots. See the N. E. D. and my Notes on P. Plowman; also N. and Q., June 23, 1855.

HANDICRAFT, manual occupation, by way of trade. (E.) Cotgrave translates OF. mestier by 'a trade, occupation, mystery, handicraft.' A corruption of handcraft; the insertion of i being due to an imitation of the form of handiwork, in which i is a real part of the word. AS. handcraft, a trade; Canons under K. Edgar, sect. xi; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 246. See Hand and Craft. Der. handicrafts-man.

HANDIWORK, HANDYWORK, work done by the hands. (E.) ME. handiwerk, hondiwer; spelt hondiwer, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 129, l. 20. AS. handgeweorc, Deut. iv. 28.—AS. hand, hand; and geweorc, a collective form of weorc, work. See Hand and Work. ¶ The prefix ge- in AS. is extremely common, and makes no appreciable difference in the sense of a word. In later E., it is constantly rendered by i- or y-, as in y-cleft, from AS. gecleoped.

HANDLE, to treat of, manage. (E.) ME. handlen, Chaucer, C. T. 8252 (E 376). AS. handlian, Gen. xxvii. 12. Formed with suffix -l and causal -ian from AS. hand, hand.+Du. handelen, to handle, trade; Icel. höndla; Dan. handle, to treat, use, trade; Swed. handla, G. handeln, to trade. All similarly formed. See Hand. Allied to handle, sb., lit. a thing by which to manage a tool; the dat. pl. hondlen occurs early, in St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne and Brock, p. 59; from AS. handle, a handle, Corpus Gloss. 1904. Cf. Dan. handel, a handle.

HANDSEL, HANSEL, a first instalment or earnest of a bargain. (Scand.) 1. In making bargains, it was formerly usual to pay a small part of the price at once, to conclude the bargain and as an earnest of the rest. The lit. sense of the word is 'delivery into the hand' or 'hand-gift.' The word often means a gift or bribe, a new-year's gift, an earnest-penny, the first money received in a morning, &c. See Hansel in Halliwell. ME. hansel, P. Plowman, C. vii. 375; B. v. 326; hansell, Rich. Redeles, iv. 91. 2. Another sense of the word was 'a giving of hands,' a shaking of hands by way of concluding a bargain; see handsal in Icel. Dict. Cf. AS. handselen, a delivery into the hand; cited by Lye from a Glossary (Cot. 136); see Voc. 449. 29. [The AS. word is rare, and the word is rather to be considered as Scand.] = Icel. handsal, a law term, the transaction of a bargain by joining hands; 'hand-shaking was with the men of old the sign of a transaction, and is still used among farmers and the like, so that to shake hands is the same as to conclude a bargain' (Vigfusson); derived from Icel. hand, hand, and sal, a sale, bargain. Cf. Dan. handsel, a handsel, earnest; Swed. handsöl. Der. handsel or hansel, verb, used in Warner's Albion's England, b. xii. c. 75, l. 7; spelt hanselle, Cath. Angl. (1483).

HANDSOME, comely, orig. dexterous. (E.) Formerly it signified able, adroit, dexterous; see Trench, Select Glossary; Shak. has it in the mod. sense. ME. handsum. 'Handsum, or esy to hond werke, esy to han hand werke, manualis;' Prompt. Parv. = AS. hand, hand; and suffix -sum, as in wyn-sum, winsome, joyous; but the whole word handsum does not appear. + Du. handzaam, tractable, serviceable. β. The suffix -sum is a weaker grade of Du. -zaam, G. -sam (in lang-sam); see -some, suffix. Der. handsome-ly; handsomeness, Troil. ii. 1. 16; spelt hansom-ness in Palsgrave.

HANDY (1), dexterous, expert. (E.) 'With handy care;' Dryden, Baucis and Philemon, l. 61. From hand and -y. ¶ Somewhat different from ME. hendi, which occurs in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1336. 'Theonne beo 3e his hendi children' = then ye are his dutiful children; Ancrén Riwe, p. 186; from AS. hendig, appearing in the comp. list-hendig, having skilful hands (Grein); which is composed of AS. list, skill, and hendig, an adj. regularly formed from the sb. hand by the addition of the suffix -ig and the consequent vowel change from a to e. See Hand. + Du. handig, handy, expert; cf. Dan. handig, usually behändig, expert, dexterous; Swed. händig, dexterous; Goth. handugs, clever, wise. Cf. G. behend, agile, dexterous; and see Handy (2).

HANDY (2), convenient, near. (E.) Also from hand and -y. 'Very handy and convenient;' T. Fuller, Pisgah Sight, i. 400 (N.E.D.). 'Ah! though he lives so handy, He never now drops in to sup;' Hood's Own, i. 44. ¶ Different in form from ME. hende. 'Nade his help hende ben' = had not help been near him; William of Palerne, 2513. AS. gehende, near; 'sumor is gehende' = summer is nigh at hand, Luke, xxi. 30; 'he wæs gehende þām scipe' = he was nigh unto the ship, John, vi. 19. [The prefix ge- could always be dropped, and is nearly lost in mod. English.] The AS. gehende is an adv. and prep., formed from hand by suffixed -e (for -jo-) and vowel-change. See Handy (1).

HANDYWORK, the same as Handiwork, q.v.

HANG, to suspend; to be suspended. (E.) Here two E. verbs and the ON. hengja have been mixed together. See the full account in the N. E. D. A. Trans. and weak verb, pt. t. and pp. hanged. 'Born to be hanged;' Temp. i. 1. 35. But the pt. t. is generally turned into hung, as in 'hung their eyelids down;' 1 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 81. ME. hangien, hongien; also hangen, hongen. 'Honged hym after' = he hanged himself afterwards; P. Plowman, B. i. 68; pp. hanged, id. B. prol. 176. AS. hangian, hongian, but with intransitive sense, Grein, ii. 14; the pt. t. hangode occurs in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 2085. Cf. Icel. hengja, to hang up (weak verb), G. hängen (weak verb). Teut. type **hangjan-*. B. ME. hangen, pt. t. heng (sometimes hing), pp. hongen. 'And theron heng a broche of gold ful schene;' Chaucer, C. T. 160. 'By ounces henge his lokkes that he hadde;' id. 679. The ME. infin. hangen is conformed to the causal and Icel. forms, the AS. infin. being always contracted. AS. hōn, to hang, but transitive in sense (contr. from hāhan or hanghan); pt. t. hēng, pp. hangen; Grein, ii. 95. Cf. Icel. hanga, to hang, intr.; pt. t. hækk, pp. hanginn; Goth. hāhan, pt. t. haihah (formed by reduplication), pp. hāhans; G. hangen, pt. t. hieng, hing, pp. gehangen. Allied to L. cunctari, to hesitate, delay, and Skt. çank-, to hesitate, be in uncertainty, doubt, fear. Brugmann, i. § 420. ¶ The Du. hangen, Dan. hange, Swed. hänga, are forms used with both trans. and intrans. senses. HANGNAIL; for angnail, a form of Agnail, q.v.

HANK, a skein or coil of thread or yarn. (Scand.) Cotgrave translates OF. bobine by 'a skane or hanke of gold or silver thread.' 'An hank;' Catholicon Angl. (1483). Cf. prov. E. hank, a skein, a loop to fasten a gate, a handle (Halliwell). The rare ME. verb hanken, to fetter, occurs in Cursor Mundi, 16044. = Icel. hanki, the hasp or clasp of a chest; hōnk, a hank, coil; Dan. hank, a handle, ear of a vessel; Swed. hank, a string, tie-band. Also Low G. hank, a handle (Lübben); G. henkel, a handle, ring, ear, hook. β. The orig. sense seems to be 'a loop,' or 'hasp,' or 'hook;' and the sb.

is a nasalised form allied to Icel. haki, a hook, G. haken, a hook; AS. haca, a fastening of a door. See Hatch (1), Hook.

HANKER, to long importunately. (E.) Not in early use. 'And felt such bowel-hankerings To see an empire, all of kings;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 239. Cf. prov. E. hank, to hanker after (North); Halliwell. This verb is a frequentative allied to prov. E. hake, to wander about, loiter, hanker after; also to tease; further allied to prov. E. hake, a hook, and to hank (above). And see hanker in the E. D. D. + MDu. anckeren (surely for hanckeren), 'to long or desire much after anything;' Hexham. Cf. WFlem. hankeren, with the same sense as mod. Du. hunkeren, to hanker after, formerly honkeren (= hankeren); see Sewel. ¶ Perhaps it has often been associated with the verb to hang.

HANSEATIC, pertaining to the Hanse Towns in Germany. (F.—OHG.) 'The chiefe cities of the Hans;' Hakluyt, Voy. i. 155. The Hanse towns were so called because associated in a league. —OF. hanse, 'the hanse; a company, society, or corporation of merchants;' Cot.—OHG. hansa, mod. G. hanse, an association, league (Flügel). + Goth. hansa, a band of men, Mk. xv. 16; Luke, vi. 17. + AS. hōs [for **hans*], a band of men; Beowulf, 924. The Finnish kansa, people, was borrowed from Teutonic. ¶ The league began about A.D. 1140 (Haydn).

HANSEL, the same as Handsel, q.v.

HANSOM, a kind of cab. (E.) Modern. An abbreviation for 'Hansom's patent safety cab.' From the name of the inventor (1834). Hansom is prob. a variant of Hanson (son of Hans); see Bardley's E. Surnames.

Der. happ-y, orig. lucky, Pricke of Conscience, 1334; happ-i-ly, happ-i-ness; hap-less, Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 108; hap-less-ly; hap-ly, Shak. The form happenen is an extension of the commoner form happen (mod. E. hap); 'In any cas that mighte falle or happe;' Chaucer, C. T. 587 (A 585). The latter verb is formed directly from the sb. hap above. ¶ With the ending -enen compare Goth. verbs in -nan.

Span. arenga, Ital. aringa, arringa, an harangue. β. The Ital. aringa signifies a speech made from an aringo, which Florio explains by 'a pulpit;' aringo also meant an arena, lists, place of declamation. The more lit. sense is a speech made in the midst of a ring of people. = OHG. hring (mod. G. ring), a ring, a ring of people, an arena, circus, lists; cognate with E. ring. See Ring. ¶ The vowel a (for i) reappears in the sb. rank; see Rank, Range. The prefix ha- in F., and a- in Span. and Ital., are due to the OHG. h-, now dropped. Der. harangue, verb, Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 438.

HARASS, to torment, vex, plague. (F.—OHG.) Also spelt harras. 'To harass and weary the English;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 61 (spelt harrasse in R.). = MF. harasser, 'to tire, or toile out, . . . vex, disquiet;' Cot. β. Der. harass, sb., Milton, Samson, 257; harass-er.

HARBINGER, a forerunner. (F.—OHG.) In Shak. Macb. i. 4. 45. See Trench, Select Glossary. The n stands for r, and the older form is ME. herbergeour, one who provided lodgings for a host or army of people. This sense is retained in Bacon, who says: 'There was a harbinger who had lodged a gentleman in a very ill room;' Apophthegms, no. 54 (or 63). 'The fame anon thurgh Rome town is born . . . By herbergeours that wenten him biforn;' Chaucer, C. T. 5417 (B 995). In the title of the legend of St. Julian, in Bodley MS. 1596, fol. 4, he is called 'St. Julian the gode herberour,' i.e. the good harbourer. Herbergeour is formed (by help of the suffix -our, L. -atōrem, denoting the agent) from the OF. herberger, 'to harbour, lodge, or dwell in a house;' Cot. (and see Godefroy). = OF. herberge, 'a house, harbour, lodging; Cot.; mod. F. auberge. — MHG. herberge, OHG. heriberga, a lodging, harbour; see further under Harbour.

HARBOUR, a lodging, shelter, place of refuge. (Scand.) ME. herberwe, Chaucer, C. T. 767 (A 765); whence mod. E. harbour by change of -erwe to -our, and the use of ar to represent the later sound of er. The w stands for an older j, and this again for g; the spelling herberwe is in Layamon, 28878. — Icel. herbergi, a harbour, inn, lodging, lit. a 'host-shelter'; derived from Icel. herr, an army, and barg, 2nd grade of bjarga, to save, help, defend. Cf. MSwed. härberge, an inn; derived from här, an army, and berga, to defend (Ihre). + OHG. heriberga, a camp, lodging; from OHG. heri (G. heer), an army, and bergan, to shelter; whence come mod. F. auberge, Ital. albergo, an inn, and mod. E. harbinger, q. v. β. For the former element, see Harry. For the latter element, cf. Goth. hairgan, AS. beorgan, to preserve; and see Bury. ¶ It is usual to cite AS. herberga as the original of harbour; but it is hardly native; though the word may have been borrowed very early. Der. harbour, verb, ME. herberwen, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 73, from Icel. herbergja, to shelter, harbour, a verb formed from the sb. herbergi; also harbour-er; harbour-age, K. John, ii. 234; harbour-less; harbour-master; also harbinger, q. v.

HARD, firm, solid, severe. (E.) ME. hard, Chaucer, C. T. 229 (and common). AS. heard, John, vi. 60; OFries. herd. + Du. hard; Dan. haard; Swed. hård; Icel. harðr; Goth. hardus; G. hart. Teut. type **harduz*; allied to Gk. κράυς, strong; cf. κράτερός, καρτερός, valiant, stout. See Brugmann, i. § 792. Der. hard-ly, hard-ness = AS. heardnes, Mark, x. 5; hard-en = ME. hardnen, Ormulum, 1574, 18219, which is an extension of the commoner ME. harden, of which the pp. yharded occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 10559 (F 245); hard-en-ed; hard-ship, ME. heardschipe, Ancrén Riwle, p. 6, l. 9; hard-ware, hard-featured, hard-fisted, hard-handed, hard-headed, hard-hearted, hard-mouthed, hard-visaged; also hard-y, q. v.

HARDOCK, HORDOCK, prob. the corn-bluebottle; Centaurea cyanus. (E.) Hardokes, pl., King Lear, iv. 4. 4 (1623); the quartos have hordocks. The same as haudods, used in Fitzherbert's Husbandry to mean the corn-bluebottle; see Glossary, and Pref. p. xxx. Mr. Wright (note to K. Lear) shows that hardhake meant the Centaurea nigra. Both plants were called, indifferently, knobweed, knotweed, and loggerhead. Named from the hardness of the head of the Centaurea nigra, also called knapweed, iron-weed, iron-head, &c. See Plant-names, ed. Britten and Holland. ¶ No kind of dock is suitable for a wreath, or grows among corn.

HARDS, fibres of flax. (E.) ME. herdes. 'Hempen herdes'; Chaucer, Rom. Rose, 1233. AS. heordan, pl. 'Stuppa, heordan'; Corp. Gloss. 1908. + MDu. heerde, herde (Kilian); later hēde (Hexham); EFries. hēde. Teut. type **hizdōn-*; cf. Meed. ¶ Not allied to hard. Der. hard-en, adj.

HARDY, stout, strong, brave. (F.—OHG.) ME. hardi, hardy, P. Plowman, B. xix. 285; the comp. hardiere is in Layamon, 4348, later text. — OF. hardi, 'hardy, daring, stout, bold'; Cot. Hardi was orig. the pp. of OF. hardir, of which the compound enhardir is explained by Cotgrave to mean 'to hearten, imbolden'. — OHG. hartjan (MHG. herten), to harden, make strong. — OHG. harti (G. hart), hard; cognate with AS. heard, hard. See Hard. Der. hardi-ly, hardi-ness, P. Plowman, B. xix. 31; hardi-head, Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 38; hardi-hood, Milton, Comus, 650. ~~Hardi-ly~~, hardi-ness, hardi-head, hardi-hood are all hybrid compounds, with E. suffixes; showing how completely the word was naturalised.

HARE, the name of an animal. (E.) ME. hare, Chaucer, C. T. 13626 (B 1886). AS. hara, as a gloss to L. lepus, Ælfric's Gloss., in Voc. 119. 11. + Du. haas; Dan. and Swed. hare; Icel. hæri (formerly here); G. hase; OHG. haso. Teut. types **hazon-*, **hason-*, m. Idg. type **kas-on-*; cf. OPruss. sasnis (for **kasnis*), W. cein-ach, f. (Rhys); and Skt. çaga, orig. çasa, a hare. See Stokes-Fick, p. 74; Brugmann, i. § 826. Uhlenbeck connects Skt. çagas with AS. hasu, gray. Der. hare-brained, 1 Hen. IV, v. 2. 19; hare-lip, K. Lear, iii. 4. 123; hare-lipped; harr-ier, q. v.; hare-bell, q. v.

HAREBELL, the name of a flower. (E.) In Cymb. iv. 2. 222. The word does not appear among AS. names of plants; but we find ME. hare-belle, Voc. 713. 9. Certainly compounded of hare and bell; but, owing to the absence of reason for the appellation, it has been supposed to be a corruption of hair-bell, with reference to the slenderness of the stalk of the true 'hair-bell,' the Campanula rotundifolia. The apparent absence of reason for the name is, however, rather in favour of the etymology from hare than otherwise, as will be seen by consulting the fanciful AS. names of plants given in Cockayne's Leechdoms, vol. iii. To name plants from animals was the old custom; hence hare's beard, hare's ear, hare's foot, hare's lettuce, hare's palace, hare's tail, hare-thistle, all given in Dr. Prior's Popular Names of British Plants; to which add AS. haran-hyge (hare's foot trefoil), haran-specel (now called viper's bugloss), haran-wyrt (hare's wort), from Cockayne's Leechdoms. The spelling hair-bell savours of modern science, but certainly not of the principles of English etymology. ¶ A similar modern error (invented in 1851, by Fox Talbot) is to derive fox-glove from folks'-glove (with the silly interpretation of folks as being 'the good folks' or fairies), in face of the evidence that the AS. name was foxes glōfa = the glove of the fox.

HAREM, the set of apartments reserved for females in large Eastern houses. (Arab.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Spelt haram in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1634, p. 62 (N.E.D.); and in Moore's Lalla Rookh; 'And the light of his haram was young Nourmahal.' Also in Byron, Bride of Abydos, c. i. st. 14. — Arab. haram, women's apartments; lit. 'sacred'; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 197. — Arab. root harama, he prohibited; the haram is the place which men are prohibited from entering; Rich. Dict., p. 563.

HARICOT, (1) a stew of mutton, (2) a kidney bean. (F.) 'Haricot, in cookery, a particular way of dressing mutton-cutlets; also, a kind of French beans'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — F. haricot, 'mutton sod with little turneps, some wine, and toasts of bread crumbled among,' &c.; Cotgrave (who gives two other methods of preparing it, showing that it was sometimes served with 'chopped herbs'). β. See Littré, who discusses it; it is found that the sense of 'bean' is later, whilst the sense of 'minced mutton with herbs' is old. Perhaps the bean was so named from its use in the dish called haricot, or from their being cut up; cf. Du. snijboon, French bean, from snijden, to cut. γ. Of unknown origin, but presumably Teutonic. Hatzfeld quotes feuves de haricot, haricot beans (1642), hericoq de mouton; haricot of mutton, 14th c. Perhaps connected with OF. haligoter, harigoter, to cut in pieces; haligote, harigote, a piece, a rag (Godefroy).

HARK! listen! (E.) ME. herke, Coventry Mysteries, 55 (Stratmann). The imp. mood of ME. herkien; 'And herke why,' Chaucer, C. T. 9187 (E 1323). Cf. herkien, inf., O. E. Hom. i. 31, l. 6. OFries. herkia, harkia. Closely allied to ME. herknen, to hearken. See Hearken.

HARLEQUIN, the leading character in a pantomime. (F.—Ital.) 'The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress'; Dryden (in Todd's Johnson; no reference). He also has: 'Those nauseous harlequins'; Epil. to Man of Mode, l. 3. — F. arlequin, a harlequin; spelt harlequin in the 16th cent. — Ital. arlecchino, a harlequin, buffoon, jester. β. It seems best to connect it with the OF. hierlekin or hellequin (13th century) for which Littré gives quotations. This word was used in the phrase la maisnie hierlekin (Low L. harlequini familias) which meant a troop of demons that haunted lonely places, called in Middle-English Hurlewaynes kynne or Hurlewaynes meyn = Hurlewain's kin or troop, mentioned in Richard the Redeles, i. 90, and in the Prologue to the Tale of Beryn, l. 8. The orig. signification of OF. hellequin (see Godefroy) seems to have been 'a troop of demons,' sometimes also a demon, a devil. Cf. also Ital. Alichino, the name of a demon in Dante, Inf. xxi. 118. The origin of the name is wholly unknown. See note to Rich. Redeles, ed. Skeat, i. 90. ¶ I shall here venture my guess. Perhaps hellekin may have been of Teut. origin; thus OHG. hella cunnt, OFriesic helle kin (AS. helle cyn, Icel. heljar kyn) would mean 'the kindred of hell' or 'the host of hell,' hence a troop of demons. The sense being lost, the OF. maisnie would be added to keep up the idea of 'host,' turning hierlekin into (apparently) a personal name of a single demon. The change from hellekin to harlequin, &c., arose from a popular etymology which connected the word with Charles Quint (Charles V.); see the story in Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 581. It may also have been confused with OF. herle, hierle, tumult.

HARLOT, a wanton woman. (F.—Teut.) Orig. used of either sex indifferently; in fact, more commonly of men in Mid. Eng. It has no very bad sense, and means little more than 'fellow.' 'He was a gentil harlot and a kind'; Chaucer, C. T. 649 (A 647). 'A sturdy harlot [a stout fellow] wente ay hem behinde'; id. 7336 (D 1753). 'Danwe the dykere with a dosen harlotes of portours and pykeporses and pylede toth-drawers' = Davy the ditcher with a dozen fellows who were porters and pick-purses and hairless (?) tooth-drawers; P. Plowman, C. vii. 369. 'Beggen ase on harlot' = beg like a vagabond, Ancrén Riwle, p. 356. Undoubtedly of Romance origin. — OF. herlot, arlot, explained by Godefroy as 'fripon, coquin, ribaud,' a vagabond; for which Diez gives a reference to the Romance of Tristan, i. 173 (where it is misprinted berlot by Michel). β. The Prov. arlot, a vagabond, occurs in a poem of the 13th century; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale, 207. 20; and Mistral explains Prov. arlot by 'pillard, ribaud, goujat qui suivait les armées.' Florio explains Ital. arlotto by 'a lack-Latin, a hedge-priest,' and arlotta as a harlot in the modern E. sense. Ducange explains Late L. arlotus, erlotus, to mean a glutton. γ. Of disputed origin, but presumably Teutonic, viz. from OHG. heri, hari (G. heer), an army, and a suffix -lot. This suffix occurs in Du. labber-lot, a blackguard, which Franck mentions in connexion with Du. leuteren, to loiter, linger, the sense of lot being 'loiterer.' The fem. of lot occurs in WFlem. lutte; De Bo explains dronke-lutte as a drunken woman, a slut; and jenever-lutte as a gin-drinking woman. Allied to OHG. lotar, MHG. lotar, lotter, useless, vagabond-like, OHG. lotar, a frivolous fellow; cf. prov. G. lotter-bube, a vagabond (Flügel); Bavar. lotter (Schmeller). Thus her-lot meant 'army-loafer,' a camp-follower. ¶ We find also W. herlod, a stripling, lad; but this is merely the E. word borrowed; the Cornish not only borrowed the E. harlot unchanged (with the sense of 'rogue'), but also the word harlutry, corruption, which is plainly the ME. harlotrie, with a suffix (-rie) which is extremely common in French. See Williams, Cornish Lexicon, p. 211. Der. harlot-ry = ME. harlotrie, of which one meaning was 'ribald talk'; see Chaucer, C. T. 563, 3147 (A 561, 3145). The suffix -ry is of F. origin; as in caval-ry, bribe-ry, &c.

HARM, injury, wrong. (E.) ME. harm, P. Plowman, C. xvi. 113; spelt herm, Ancrén Riwe, p. 116. AS. hearm, herm, grief of mind, also harm, injury; Grein, ii. 60. + Icel. harmr, grief; Dan. harme, wrath; Swed. harm, anger, grief, pity; G. harm, grief. Teut. type **harmoz*, m. Cf. Russ. srame, shame. Brugmann, ii. § 72. Der. harm, verb, ME. harman, spelt hearmin in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 263, l. 7; harm-ful, Wyclif, Prov. i. 22; harm-ful-ly, harm-ful-ness; harm-less = ME. harmles, Will. of Palerne, 1671; harm-less-ly, harm-less-ness.

HARMONY, concord, esp. of sounds. (F.-L.-Gk.) ME. armonie, Gower, C. A. iii. 90; bk. vii. 165. 'There is a melodye in heven, whiche clerkes clepen armony;' Testament of Love, ii. 9. 9. = F. harmonie, = L. harmonia. = Gk. ἀρμονία, a joint, joining, proportion, harmony. = Gk. ἀρμός, a fitting, joining. = Gk. **ἀρμειν*, ἀρμίσκειν (fut. ἀρμῶ), to fit, join together. = ✓AR, to fit; whence also E. arm, article, &c. Der. harmon-ic, Milton, P. L. iv. 687; harmoni-es, harmoni-c-al, harmoni-c-al-ly; harmoni-ous, Temp. iv. 119; harmoni-ous-ly, harmoni-ous-ness; harmon-ise (Cudworth), harmon-is-er, harmon-ist, harmon-um (about A. D. 1840).

HARNESS, equipment for a horse. (F.-C.) In old books, it often means body-armour for soldiers; 1 Kings, xx. 11; &c. ME. harneis, harneys, Chaucer, C. T., A 1613; spelt herneys, P. Plowman, B. xv. 215. 'He dude quyk harnesche hors' = he commanded horses to be quickly harnessed, King Alisaunder, 4708. = OF. harneis, hernois, armour. Of unknown origin. ¶ The G. harnisch, Du. harnas, &c., are borrowed from French; so also the Bret. harnes, old iron, armour (Thurneyssen). Der. harness, verb, = OF. harnaschier.

HARP, a stringed musical instrument. (E.) ME. harpe, Gower, C. A. iii. 301; bk. viii. 764; Layamon, 4898. AS. hearpe, Grein, ii. 62; and see Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 6 (b. iii. met. 12). + Du. harp; Icel. harpa; Swed. harpa; Dan. harpe; G. harfe; OHG. harpha. Teut. type **harpōn*-, f. Root unknown. Der. harp-er = AS. hearpere, in Ælfred, as above; harp, verb, AS. hearpan, id.; also harpsichord, q. v.

HARPOON, a dart for striking whales. (F.-L.-Gk.) 'Some fish with harpoons' (late edd. harpoons), Dryden, Art of Love, 875. Also spelt harpon in J. Davis, Voyages, 1599, p. 137 (Hakluyt Soc.). The dart is also called 'a harping-iron' in Kersey's Dict. = F. harpon, orig. 'a crampiron wherewith masons fasten stones together' (Cotgrave); hence, a grappling-iron (whence also Du. harpon). = OF. harpe, 'a dog's claw or paw'; Cot.; cf. 'se harper l'un à l'autre, to grapple, grasp, hasp, clasp, embrace, cope, close together, to scuffle or fall together by the ears'; id. [Cf. Span. arpon, a harpoon, arpeo, a grappling-iron, arpar, to tear to pieces, rend, claw. Also Ital. arpagone, a harpoon, arpese, a cramp-iron, clamp, arpicare, to clamber up, arpino, a hook, arpione, a hinge, pivot, hook, tenter.] β. The OF. harpe, claw, is from Late L. harpē, a sickle-shaped sword. = Gk. ἀρμή, a sickle (Körting, § 4501). Allied to OLat. sarpere, to prune; Russ. serp, 'a sickle.' Der. harpoon-er.

HARPSICORD, an old harp-shaped instrument of music. (F.-Teut. and Gk.) Also spelt harpsicon or harpsecol. 'On the harpsicon or virginals'; Parthenia Sacra, ed. 1633, p. 144 (Todd). 'Harpsechord or Harpsecol, a musical instrument'; Kersey. Spelt harpsechord in Minshew, ed. 1627. The corrupt forms of the word are not easy to explain; in particular, the letter s seems to have been intrusive. = OF. harpechorde, 'an arpsichord or harpsichord'; Cot. Compounded of OF. harpe, a harp (from a Teutonic source); and chorde, more commonly corde, a string. See Harp, Chord, and Cord. Cf. Ital. arpicordo (Florio).

HARPY, a mythological monster, half bird and half woman. (F.-L.-Gk.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 3. 83. Trevisa speaks of 'pe arpies'; tr. of Higden, ii. 363. = OF. harpie, or harpye, 'a harpy'; Cot. = L. harpia, chiefly used in pl. harpia, Verg. Æn. iii. 226. = Gk. pl. ἀρπυιαι, harpies; lit. 'the spoilers.' = Gk. ἀρπ-, the base of ἀρπάζειν, to seize; allied to L. rapere, to seize. See Rapacious.

HARQUEBUS, the same as Arquebus, q. v.

HARRIDAN, a worn-out wanton woman. (F.) In Pope,

Macer, a Character, l. 24. It seems to be a variant of MF. haridelle, which Cot. explains by 'a poor tit, or leane ill-favored jade'; i. e. a worn-out horse. Some connect this with MF. hardelle, a herd; 'also, a girl, a young maid, lasse,' Cot. Of unknown origin; cf. Körting, § 4548. ¶ It is remarkable that Godefroy has OF. harrebann, a debauched woman.

HARRIER (1), a hare-hound. (E.) Formerly harier, more correctly. So spelt in Minshew, ed. 1627. The word occurs also in Blount, Ancient Tenures, p. 39 (Todd). Formed from hare, with suffix -ier; cf. bow-yer from bow, law-yer from law.

HARRIER (2), a kind of falcon. (E.) 'A sort of puttock called a hen-harrier;' Ray, Collection of Words, pref. p. 3 (E. D. S.). Named from its harrying or destroying small birds. See Harry.

Not found in AS. + Icel. herfi, a harrow; Dan. harv, a harrow; harve, to harrow; Swed. harf, a harrow; harfva, to harrow. Apparently allied to MDan. harge, Du. hark, Swed. harka, G. harke, a rake. ¶ The F. herce, a harrow, is a different word; see Hearse. Der. harrow, verb, ME. harwen, P. Plowman, C. vi. 19.

HARRY, to ravage, plunder, lay waste. (E.) Also written harrow, but this is chiefly confined to the phrase 'the Harrowing of Hell,' i. e. the despoiling of hell by Christ. ME. herjen, later herien, herwen, harwen. 'By him that harwed helle'; Chaucer, C. T. 3512. 'He that heried helle'; Will. of Palerne, 3725. AS. hergian, to lay waste, Grein, ii. 38. Lit. to 'over-run with an army'; cognate with Icel. herja, Dan. hæрге, OHG. harjōn, to ravage. Teut. type **harjōjan*-, to harry; from **harjoz*, an army, which appears in AS. here, an army, a word particularly used in the sense of 'destroying host'; Grein, ii. 35. β. Forby explains Norfolk hassock as 'coarse grass, which grows in rank tufts on boggy ground.' AS. hassuc, a tump or clump of coarse grass or sedge; in Kemble, Cod. Dipl. iii. 223. ¶ Distinct from W. hesg, pl. sedges.

HASTATE, shaped like the head of a spear. (L.) Modern, and botanical. — L. hastatus, spear-like; formed from hasta, a spear, which is co-radicate with E. gad. See GAD (1).

HASTE, HASTEN, to go speedily; Haste, speed. (F.—Teut.) The form hasten appears to be nothing more than an extended form of the verb to haste; the pt. t. and pp. hastened (or hastned) do not occur in early authors; one of the earliest examples is that of the pp. hastened in Spenser, Shep. Kal., May, 152. Strictly speaking, the form haste (pt. t. hasted) is much to be preferred, and is commoner than hasten both in Shak. and in the A. V. of the Bible. ME. hasten (pt. t. hastede), where the n is merely the sign of the infin. mood, and was readily dropped. Thus Gower has: 'Cupide . . Syh [saw] Phebus hasten him so sore, And, for he sholde him haste more, . . A dart throughout his herte he caste;' C. A. i. 336; bk. iii. 1697. 'To hasten hem;' Chaucer, C. T. 8854; (E 978). 'But hasteth yow' = make haste, id. 17383 (I 72). 'He hasteth wel that wysly can abyde; and in wikked haste is no profit;' id., Six-text, B 2244.  $\beta$ . It is hard to say whether the vb. or sb. first came into use in English; both occur in the Cursor Mundi, 5198, 26737; where we also find the phr. in hast = in haste, 13402. Neither is found in AS. — OF. haste (F. hâte), sb. — WGerm. \**hai(f)sti-*, violence; as seen in OFries. haest (Richtofen, s. v. hast), AS. hæst, violence, fury. Cf. AS. hæste, violent, vehement, OHG. heisti, violent; also Goth. haifts, f., strife; Icel. heipt (= heift), war. ¶ Du. haast, G., Dan., Swed. hast, haste, are all borrowed from French. Der. hast-y, Will. of Palerne, 475; hast-i-ly, hast-i-ness. ¶ We also find ME. hastif, hasty, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 520; this is from OF. hastif, adj. formed from the OF. haste (mod. F. hâte), haste, which was borrowed from the Teutonic (as above).

HAT, a covering for the head. (E.) ME. hat, Chaucer, C. T. 472, 1390 (A 470, 1388). AS. hæt; 'Galerus, vel pileus, fellen hæt;' Voc. 118. 14; 'Calamanca, hæt;' id. 153. 22. + Icel. hött, a hood, later hatt; Swed. hatt; Dan. hat. Teut. type **hattuz*, m. If it is related to hood, this form stands for an earlier type **hadnuz*. Der. hatt-er, hat-band (Minshew).

HATCH (1), a half-door, wicket. (E.) A word presenting some difficulty. 'Leap the hatch;' King Lear, iii. 6. 76. It is the same as North of E. heck, an enclosure of open-work, of slender bars of wood, a hay-rack; a heck-door is a door only partly panelled, the rest being latticed (Halliwell); cf. Lowland Sc. hack or heck, a rack for cattle, a frame for cheeses (Jamieson). It seems to have been specially used of anything made with parallel bars of wood. Palsgrave has: 'Hatche of a door, hecq.' In a 15th-cent. vocabulary we find: 'Hoc osticulum, a hatche;' Voc. 778. 14. Also: 'Hoc ostiolum, hek;' id. 668. 4. AS. hæc, f. (gen. hæcce); 'tō þære ealdan wude hæcce,' to the old wood hatch; Thorpe, Diplom. Ævi Saxon. p. 395. + Du. hek, a fence, rail, gate, Swed. häck, a coop, a rack. Teut. type **hakjā*, f. Prob. named from being lightly fastened with a hook. Cf. AS. haca, a fastening of a door; Epinal Gloss. 803. All, probably, from the same source as hook; cf. prov. E. hatch, to fasten (Halliwell); and see Shak. Per. iv. 2. 37. See Hake and Hook. Der. hatch-es, q. v.; also hatch-way.

HATCH (2), to produce a brood by incubation. (E.) ME. hacchen. 'This brid [bird] . . hopith for to hacche;' Richard the Redeles, Pass. iii. l. 44. The pt. t. hæte occurs in The Owl and Nightingale, l. 105. Not found earlier; but prob. E. + Swed. håcka, to hatch, to breed; Dan. hække, to breed, whence hækkebuur, a breeding-cage (lit. a hatch-bower), and hækkefugl, a breeder (lit. a hatch-fowl). In German, we have hecken, to hatch, MHG. hecken. Origin unknown.

HATCH (3), to shade by minute lines, crossing each other, in drawing and engraving. (F.—G.) 'Hatch, to draw small strokes with a pen;' Kersey, ed. 1715. A certain kind of ornamentation on a sword-hilt was called hatching, and is spelt hachyng in 1389; see Riley, Memorials of London, p. 513; hence 'hatched in silver,' Shak. Troil. i. 3. 65; 'my sword well hatcht;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Bonduca, ii. 2.—F. hacher, 'to hack, . . also to hatch a hilt;' Cot. —F. hache, an ax.—OHG. **happja*, whence OHG. heppa, a bill, a sickle. See Hash. Der. hatch-ing (perhaps sometimes confused with etching); and see hatch-et.

HATCHES, a frame of cross-bars laid over an opening in a ship's deck. (E.) ME. haches, Chaucer, Good Women, 648; Will. of Palerne, 2770. Merely the pl. of Hatch (1), q. v. Der. hatch-way, from the sing. hatch.

HATCHET, a small axe. (F.—G.) ME. hachet. 'Axe other [or] hatchet;' P. Plowman, B. iii. 304. Spelt hachet, John de Garlande; in Wright's Vocab. i. 137.—F. hachette, 'a hatchet, or small axe;' Cot. Dimin. of F. hache, 'an axe;' id.; see Hatch (3), and Hash.

HATCHMENT, the escutcheon of a deceased person, publicly displayed. (F.—L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iv. 5. 214. Well known to be a corruption of atch'ment, the shortened form of achievement (mod. E. achievement), the heraldic name for the same thing. Dryden uses achievement in the true heraldic sense; Palamon and Arcite, l. 1620; atchement is in Ferne (1586); and hachement in Hall (1548). See N. E. D. See Achieve.

HATE, extreme dislike, detestation; to detest. (E.) A. The sb. is ME. hate, Chaucer, C. T. 14506 (B 3778). AS. hete, Grein, ii. 39; the mod. E. sb. takes its vowel from the vb. (AS. hatian). + Du. haat; Icel. hatr; Swed. hat; Dan. had; Goth. hatis; G. hass, hate. These forms suggest a Teut. type **hatoz*, neut., gen. **hatizos*; Idg. type **kodos*, gen. **kodesos*; whence a form **hatiz* in W. Germanic. Cf. Gk. κῆδον, to vex; W. cawdd, displeasure. Stokes-Fick, p. 68. B. The verb is AS. hatian, OFries. hatia, OSax. hatōn, OHG. hazzōn; allied to Goth. hatan, to hate; from the same base **hat-*. Der. hat-er; hate-ful, Chaucer, C. T. 8608 (E 732); hate-ful-ly, hate-ful-ness; also hat-red, q. v.; from the same source, heinous, q. v.

HATRED, extreme dislike. (E.) ME. hatred, P. Plowman, B. iii. 140; fuller form hatreden, Pricke of Conscience, 3363. Not found in AS.; but the suffix is the AS. suffix -ræden, signifying 'law,' 'mode,' or 'condition,' which appears in frēondræden, friendship (Gen. xxxvii. 4), &c.; see Kindred. And see Hate.

HAUBERK, a coat of ringed mail. (F.—OHG.) Orig. armour for the neck, as the name implies. ME. hauberk, Chaucer, C. T. 2433 (A 2431); hawberk, King Alisaunder, 2372.—OF. hauberc, halberc (Burguy).—OHG. halsberc, halsberge, a hauberk.—OHG. hals (G. hals), the neck, cognate with AS. heals, L. collum, the neck; and OHG. bergan, to protect, cognate with AS. beorgan, to protect, hide. See Collar and Bury. Der. haberleon, q. v.

HAUGH, a piece of alluvial land beside a river. (E.) Northern; also halgh, as in Greenhalgh. AS. healh, a nook, a corner; see N. E. D. ¶ From the dat. case heale, hale, we have ME. hale, a nook; common in place-names as a suffix, and often written -hall.

HAUGHTY, proud, arrogant. (F.—L.) a. The spelling with gh is a mistake, as the word is not E.; it is a corruption of ME. hautein, loud, arrogant. 'I peine me to have an hautein speech' = I endeavour to speak loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 12264 (C 330); cf. Rob. of Glouc., l. 1504. 'Myn hauteyn herte' = my proud heart; Will. of Palerne, 472.  $\beta$ . The corruption arose from the use of the adj. with the E. suffix -ness, producing a form hautein-ness, but generally written hautenesse, and easily misdivided into hauti-ness (like naughtiness). 'For heo [she, i. e. Cordelia] was best and fairest, and to hautenesse drow lest' [drew least]; Rob. of Glouc. p. 29 (where the best MS. has hautesse); l. 687. Later forms hautyn, Book of St. Alban's, fol. a 5, hauty in Palsgrave.—OF. hautain, also spelt hautain by Cotgrave, who explains it by 'hauty, proud, arrogant.' —OF. haut, formerly halt, high, lofty; with suffix -ain = L. -ānus. — L. altus, high; see Altitude. Der. haughti-ly; haughti-ness (for hautin-ness = hautein-ness, as explained above).

HAUL, to hale, draw; see Hale (2). This spelling occurs early. 'I-hauled hi were . . out of the lond;' Beket, l. 1497.

HAULM, HALM, HAUM, the stem or stalk of grain. (E.) Little used, but an excellent E. word. 'The hawme is the strawe of the wheat or the rie;' Tusser's Husbandry, sect. 57, st. 15 (E. D. S.). 'Halm, or stobyl [stubble], Stipula;' Prompt. Parv. OMerc. halm; Vesp. Psalter, Ps. lxxxii. 14 (lxxxiii. 13); AS. healm, in the compound healm-streaw, lit. haulm-straw, used to translate L. stipulam in Ps. lxxxii. 12, ed. Spelman. + Du. halm, stalk, straw; Icel. hálmr; Dan. and Swed. halm. + Russ. soloma, straw; L. culmus, a stalk; calamus, a reed (borrowed from Gk.); Gk. κάλamos, a reed; κάλamus, a stalk or straw of corn; W. calaf, a stalk. See Brugmann, ii. § 72; Stokes-Fick, p. 73.  $\beta$ . From the same root as Culminate, q. v.

HAUNCH, the hip, bend of the thigh. (F.—OHG.) ME. hanche, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1100; spelt haunche, Ancren Riwle, 280.—F. hanche, 'the haunch or hip;' Cot. Cf. Span. and Ital. anca, the haunch; the F. word was also sometimes spelt anche (Cotgrave). Of Teut. origin; from Frankish **hankā*, fem., represented by MDu. hancke, 'the haunch or the hip', Hexham; whence also O. North F. hanke, Norm. dial. hanque, haunch (Moisy). Körtling, §§ 663, 4479.

HAUNT, to frequent. (F.) ME. haunten, hanten, to frequent, use, employ. 'That hauntedden folie' = who were ever after folly; Chaucer, C. T. 12398 (C 464). 'We haunten none tauernes' = we frequent no taverns; Pierce Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 106. 'Haunted Mau-metrie' = practised Mohammedanism, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 320. The earliest use of the word is in Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 25, l. 15. — OF. hanter, 'to haunt, frequent, resort unto'; Cot. β. Origin unknown, and much disputed. Suggestions are: (1) Icel. heimta, lit. to fetch home, to draw, claim, recover; but neither form nor sense suit; (2) Bret. hent, a path; (3) a nasalised form of L. habitāre, to dwell (Littré); (4) a Late L. form **ambitāre* (not found), to go about, from L. ambitus, a going about (Scheler). The last seems to me the most likely; there are many such formations in F. Der. haunt, sb.

HAUTBOY, a kind of musical instrument. (F.—L.) [Also called oboe, the Ital. name.] In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 351; where the old edd. have hoeboy. Spelt hautboy (sic) in Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, where the L. has tibia; Ars Poet. 202. Spelt hobois, hoboy in Cotgrave. — MF. hautbois (or hautbois), 'a hobois, or hoboy'; Cot. — OF. haut, later haut, high, from L. altus, high; and F. bois < Late L. boscus, wood. See Altitude and Bush. Thus the lit. sense is 'high wood'; the hautboy being a wooden instrument of a high tone. Doublet, oboe.

HAUT-GOUT, a high flavour. (F.—L.) Spelt haugou in Howell's Letters, vol. i. § 5. let. 38. — F. haut, high; gout, taste. — L. altus, high; gustus, taste; see Gust (2).

HAVE, to possess, hold. (E.) ME. hauen, pt. t. hadde, pp. had (common). AS. habban, pt. t. hæfde, pp. gehæfd. + Du. hebben; Icel. hafa; Swed. hafva; Dan. have; Goth. haban; G. haben. Teut. stem **habē-*. If cognate, as some hold, with L. habere, to have, the Idg. stem is **hhabhē-*. Streitberg, § 206, p. 307.

HAVEN, an inlet of the sea, harbour, port. (E.) ME. hauen (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 409 (A 407); spelt hauene, Layamon, 8566. Late AS. hafene (acc. hæfenan), A. S. Chron. an. 1031. — Icel. höfn; Dan. havn, Swed. hamn. + Du. haven; G. hafen. β. Allied to AS. hæf (Grein, ii. 19), Icel. and Swed. haf, Dan. hav, MHG. hab, the open sea, main.

HAVERSACK, a soldier's bag for provisions. (F.—G.) Lit. 'oat-bag' or 'oat-sack.' A late importation. It occurs in Smollett's tr. of Gil Blas, b. ii. c. 8 (R.). — F. havresac, a haversack, knapsack (Hamilton). — G. habersack, hafersack, a sack for oats. — G. haber, hafer, oats (cognate with Icel. hafr, Du. haver, Swed. hafre, Dan. havre, oats), from MHG. habere, OHG. habaro, oats; and G. sack, cognate with E. sack.

HAVILDAR, a sepoy non-commissioned officer, corresponding to a sergeant. (Pers.—Arab.) So in Yule. From Pers. hawāl-dār, a military officer of inferior rank; Rich. Dict., p. 585. — Arab. hawāla(h), commission, charge; and Pers. dār, holding (as in sir-dar).

HAVOC, general waste, destruction. (F.—Teut.) 'Cry havoc,' Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 275; Jul. Cæs. iii. 1. 273; 'cries on havoc,' Hamlet v. 2. 375. 'Pell-mell, havoc, and confusion;' 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 82. 'They entrid in-to Ylion and pillyd hit, and after did do crye havok upon all the tresours;' Caxton, Troy-book, fol. 175. 'To crye havok' occurs in 1419; Excerpta Historica, p. 32. From the AF. phrase crier havok; Black Book of Admiralty, i. 455. An Eng. adaptation of OF. havot, pillage, plunder (Godefroy), used in precisely the same way; esp. in the phrase crier havot, to cry out 'plunder,' of which Godefroy gives two examples. It is clearly connected with OF. havée, a handful (Godefroy), which Cotgrave explains by 'a gripe, or handfull, also a booty, or prey;' from the OF. verb haver, 'to hooke, or to grapple with a hook,' Cot. Cf. havet, 'a little hooke,' Cot.; havecy, the same (Godefroy). W. de Bibbesworth explains havet by 'a flesh-hook;' Wright, Vocab. i. 172. Apparently from the Teut. base **haf-* seen in Goth. haffan, to heave, lift up; see Heave and Haft. 'To cry havoc' was to give the signal for seizing upon the spoil. Notes on E. Etym., p. 128. Der. havoc, verb (rare), Hen. V, i. 2. 173, where a cat is said 'to tear and havoc more than she can eat.'

HAW, a hedge; a berry of the haw-thorn. (E.) The sense of 'inclosure' or 'hedge' is the orig. one. In the sense of 'berry,' the word is really a short form for haw-berry or hawthorn-berry; still it is of early use in this transferred sense. ME. hawe. Chaucer uses hawe, lit. a haw-berry, to signify anything of no value, C. T. 6241 (D 659); but he also has it in the orig. sense. 'And eke ther was a polkat in his hawe' = there was a polecat in his yard; C. T. 12789 (C 855). AS. haga, an enclosure, yard, house, Grein, ii. 5; whence the usual change to later hage, haje, hawe, by rule. + Icel. hagi, a hedged field, a pasture; Swed. hage, an enclosed pasture-ground; Dan. have [for hage], a garden; Du. haag, a hedge; whence 's Gravenhage, i. e. the count's garden, the place called by us the Hague. Teut. type **hagon-*, m. Allied to G. hag, a fence, hedge; and further, to W. cae, an enclosure. See Quay. Stokes-Fick, p. 66. Der. haw-finch; haw-thorn = AS. hægþorn, which occurs as a gloss to alba spina, Voc. 139. 23; ONorthumb. hagaþorn, Matt. vii. 16. Also hedge, q. v.

HAWK (1), a bird of prey. (E.) ME. hawk, Chaucer, C. T. 4132, 5997 (A 4134, D 415). Earlier hauek (= havek), Layamon, 3258. AS. hafoc, more commonly heafoc, Grein, ii. 42. + Du. havie; Icel. haukr; Swed. hök; Dan. høg; G. habicht, OHG. hapuh. β. All probably from the Teut. base **hab*, to seize, hold; see Heave, and cf. L. capere. Cf. Low L. capus, a falcon, from L. cap-ere; and L. accipiter, a hawk. Der. hawk, verb, ME. hauken, Chaucer, C. T. 7957 (E 81); hawk-er.

HAWK (2), to carry about for sale. (O. Low G.) Not in early use. Rich. quotes from Swift, A Friendly Apology, the line: 'To hear his praises hawk'd about.' The verb is a mere development from the sb. hawker, which is an older word. See Hawker.

HAWK (3), to force up phlegm from the throat, to clear the throat. (E.) 'Without hawking or spitting;' As You Like It, v. 3. 12. Apparently an imitative word; cf. W. hochi, to throw up phlegm; hoch, the throwing up of phlegm; Dan. harke, Swed. harska, to hawk. And (perhaps) Norw. hauka, to shout, call out (Aasen); F. hoquet, hiccup.

HAWKER, one who carries about goods for sale, a pedlar. (O. Low G.) Minshew tells us that the word was in use in the reign of Hen. VIII; it is much older, in E., than the verb to hawk. 'Hawkers, be certain deceitfull fellows, that goe from place to place buying and selling brasse, pewter, and other merchandise, that ought to be vttered in open market. . . You finde the word An. 25 Hen. VIII, cap. 6, and An. 33 eiusdem, cap. 4;' Minshew. 'Those people which go up and down the streets crying newsbooks and selling them by retail, are also called Hawkers;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The earliest trace of a similar word is in P. Plowman, B. v. 227, where the trade of the pedlar is denoted by hokkerye, spelt also hukkerye and hukrie; where the base of the word is the same as that of the word huckster.] β. A word introduced from abroad; cf. Low G. höker, a retail-dealer, Du. heuker; MDu. heukeren, to sell by retail, to huckster; heukelaar, a huckster, retailer (Sewel). We find also Dan. höker, a Chandler, huckster, hökeri, a hawker's trade, hökre, to hawk; Swed. hökeri, higgling, hökare, a Chandler, cheesemonger. Also G. höcker, a retailer of goods. See further under Huckster.

HAWSE, HAWSE-HOLE. (Scand.) 'Hawses, two large round holes in a ship, under the head or beak, through which the cables pass, when the ship lies at anchor;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Cf. 'I was forced to cut cable in the hawse;' Eng. Garner, vii. 83 (ab. 1606). So called because made in the 'neck' or bow of the ship. — Icel. håls, hals, the neck; also (as a sea-term) part of the bow of a ship or boat. Cf. Du. hals, neck; halsblok, a hawse-block; Dan. and Swed. hals, neck, also a tack (as a sea-term). Also AS. heals, G. hals, Goth. hals, neck; cognate with L. collum, neck. ¶ Distinct from hawser; see below.

HAWSER, HALSER, a small cable. (F.—L.) 'Hawser, a three-stroud [-strand] rope, or small cable;' Kersey. In Sherwood's index to Cotgrave, halser means a tow-rope by which boats are drawn along. In Grafton's Chron., Rich. III, an. 3, we read: 'He wayed up his ancors and halsed up his sayles.' 'Two haucers pour boy-ropes;' (1373) Riley's Mem. of London, p. 369. 'With well-wreathed halsers raise Their white sails;' Chapman, tr. of Od. ii. 609. From the old verb hause, to lift, raise, as in Rom. of Partenay, 3083. — OF. halcier, F. hausser (Hatzfeld), to raise. — Late L. altiāre, to elevate. — L. altus, high. See Altitude. Similarly the MItal. alzaniera, 'a halsier [hawser] in a ship' (Florio) is from Ital. alzare, to raise. ¶ Often associated with hawse (above), though of different origin.

HAWTHORN, from haw and thorn; see Haw.

HAY (1), grass cut and dried. (E.) Formerly used also of uncut growing grass. ME. hey, hay; Chaucer, C. T. 16963 (H 14). 'Vpon grene hey' = on green grass; Wyclif, Mark, vi. 39. From OMerc. hæg (faenum), Vesp. Psalter, xxxvi[i]. 2. AS. hīg, grass, hay; 'ofer þæt grēne hig' = on the green grass; Mark, vi. 39. + Du. hooi; Icel. hey; Dan. and Swed. hø; Goth. hawi, grass; G. heu, MHG. houwe. β. The true sense is 'cut grass;' the sense of 'growing grass' being occasional. The Teut. type is **hau-jom*, n. From the base **hau(w)-* of the verb to hew, i. e. to cut. See Hew. Der. hay-cock, hay-maker. But not ME. hay-ward, where hay = hedge (below).

HAY (2), a hedge. (E.) ME. heie, heye; 'bi the heie,' by the hedge; Owl and Night., 817. AS. hege; see Corpus Gloss., 606. Teut. type **hagiz*; allied to Haw. Cf. OF. haie, a hedge, of Low

G. origin. Der. hay-ward, an officer who had charge of fences and enclosures; P. Plowman, C. vi. 16, and note.

HAZARD, chance, risk. (F.—Span.—Arab.) ME. hasard, the name of a game of chance, generally played with dice; Chaucer, C. T. 12525 (C 591). Earlier, in Havelok, 2326.—F. hasard, 'hazard, adventure'; Cot. The orig. sense was certainly 'a game at dice' (Littré). β. We find also Span. azar, an unforeseen accident, hazard, MSpan. azar, 'an ill token, a pricke or note in a die, a hucklebone'; also azar en el dado, 'a game at dice called hazard'; Minsheu. Cf. Mltal. zara, 'a game at dice called hazard, also a hazard or a nicke at dice'; Florio. It is probable that F. ha-, Span. a-, answers to the Arab. article al, turned into az by assimilation. Thus the F. word is from Span., and the Span. from Arab. al zahr, the die, a word only found in the vulgar speech; see Devic's Supplement to Littré. But Arab. zahr is a word of doubtful authority; and the etym. is uncertain. Der. hazard, verb, hazard-ous.

HAZE, vapour, mist. (Low G.) Not in early use. The earliest trace of the form haze is in Ray's Collection of Northern-English Words, 1691 (1st ed. 1674). He gives: 'it hazes, it misles, or rains small rain.' As a sb., it occurs in Phillips, ed. 1706: 'Haze, a Rime or thick Fog.' 'Hazy weather' is in Dampier's Voyages, ed. 1684 (R.); and 'thicke and hawsey' occurs in 1625 (N. E. D.). Apparently due to the Low G. phrase de Hase Brouet, i. e. a mist or haze is rising; see Bremen Wörterbuch. Brouet=brews, is brewing. Berg-haus enters the phrase under Hase, a hare; but does not explain the connexion. Rietz gives häs, a slight shower of rain, as a Swed. dial. word. Note also prov. E. haar, a cold sea-fog or mist (E. D. D.); Du. dial. harig, foggy, misty (Boekenooogen). Der. haz-y, haz-i-ness.

In this suffix, the -l is separable; the common form being -inga; as in fær-inga, suddenly.

HEAL, to make whole. (E.) ME. helen. 'For he with it coude bothe hele and dere'; i. e. heal and harm, Chaucer, C. T. 10554 (F 240). Teut. type **hausjan-*. Cf. Gk. ἀ-κού-ειν, to hear. ¶ It does not seem possible so to ignore the initial h as to connect it with the word ear, though there is a remarkable similarity in form between Goth. hausjan, to hear, and Goth. auso, the ear. See Ear. Der. hear-er, hear-ing, hear-say, q.v., hearken, q.v.

Parv. p. 236. Mr. Way's note says: 'This term is derived from a sort of pyramidal candlestick, or frame for supporting lights, called hercia or herpica, from its resemblance in form to a harrow, of which mention occurs as early as the xiith century. It was not, at first, exclusively a part of funeral display, but was used in the solemn services of the holy week . . . Chaucer appears to use the term herse to denote the decorated bier, or funeral pageant, and not exclusively the illumination, which was a part thereof; and towards the 16th century, it had such a general signification alone. Hardyng describes the honours falsely bestowed upon the remains of Richard II. when cloths of gold were offered "upon his hers" by the king and lords;' &c. See the whole note; also Rock, Church of our Fathers, ii. 495. The changes of sense are (1) a harrow, (2) a triangular frame for lights in a church service, (3) a frame for lights over a tomb, (4) a frame to support a pall, (5) a carriage for a dead body; the older senses being quite forgotten.—OF. herce, 'a harrow, also, a kind of portcullis, that's stuck, as a harrow, full of sharp, strong, and outstanding iron pins' [which leads up to the sense of a frame for holding candles]; Cot. Mod. F. herse, Ital. erpice, a harrow. —L. hirpicem, acc. of hirpex, a harrow, also spelt irpex. ¶ A remarkable use of the word is in Berners' tr. of Froissart, cap. cxxx, where it is said that, at the battle of Crecy, 'the archers ther stode in maner of a herse,' i. e. drawn up in a triangular form, the old F. harrow being so shaped. See Specimens of English, ed. Skeat, p. 160. Der. re-hearse.

Teut. type **hagjā*, f.; formed from hag- with suffix -jā, causing vowel-change of hag- to heg-; i.e. it is a secondary form from AS. haga, a hedge, preserved in mod. E. in the form haw; see Haw. + Du. hegge, heg, a hedge; cf. haag, a haw; Icel. heggr, a kind of tree used in hedges; cf. hagi, a haw (see Icel. Dict. p. 774); G. hecke. A weak verb, formed by vowel change from a sb. **hōd*, care, not found in AS. but occurring in OFries. hōde, hūde, care, protection, and allied to G. hut, OHG. huota, heed, watchfulness. + OSax. hōdian, to heed; Du. hoeden, to heed, guard, from hoede, guard, care, protection; G. hüten, to protect (OHG. huaten); from G. hut (OHG. huota), protection. β. For the vowel-change, cf. bleed (AS. blēdan) from blood (AS. blōd). Brugmann, i. § 754. Prob. allied to Hood. The notion of 'guarding' is common to both words. Der. heed, sb. = ME. hede, Chaucer, C. T. 305 (A 303); heed-ful, heed-ful-ly, heed-ful-ness, heed-less, heed-less-ly, heed-less-ness.

HEEL (1), the part of the foot projecting behind. (E.) ME. heel, heele; Wyclif, John, xiii. 18. AS. hēla, the heel; Grein, ii. 30. We find also the gloss: 'Calx, hēla, hóh nīpeward' = the heel, the lower part of the heel; Wright's Vocab. i. 283, col. 2 (Voc. 266. 8). + Du. hiel (from OFriesic hēla); Icel. hæll; Swed. hül; Dan. hæl. β. It is probable that AS. hēla is a contraction of **hōh-ila*, with the usual vowel-change from ō (followed by i) to ē; this would make the word a diminutive of AS. hōh, which also means 'the heel,' and is a commoner word. See Hough. Der. heel-piece.

HEEL (2), to lean over, incline. (E.) A corrupted form; the word has lost a final d, whilst the vowel has been lengthened. It is modified from ME. helden, hilden. Cf. the EFries. Du. and Swed. forms. Palsgrave has: 'I hylde, I leane on the one syde, as a bote or shyp, or any other vessell, te encline de cousté. Sytte fast, I rede [advise] you, for the bote begynneth to hylde.' 'Heldyn, or bowyn, inclino, flecto, deflecto'; Prompt. Parv. p. 234; see Way's note. β. The ME. helden or hilden was frequently transitive, meaning (1) to pour, esp. by tilting a vessel on one side; and (2) intransitively, to heel over, to incline. Wyclif has: 'and whanne the boxe of alabastre was brokun, she helde it [poured it out] on his heed'; Mark, xiv. 3. AS. hyldan, heldan, trans. to tilt, incline, intrans. to bow down; Grein, ii. 131. 'þū gestaðoladest . . . eorðan swā fæste, þæt hio on ænige heale ne heldeð' = Thou hast founded the earth so fast, that it will not heel over on any side; Ælfred's Metres, xx. 164. It is a weak verb, related to the (participial) adjective heald, inclined, bent down, which occurs in nīðer-heald, bent downwards; Grein, ii. 295. + Icel. halla (for **halða*), to lean sideways, heel over, esp. used of a ship; from hallr (< **halth-*), leaning, sloping; Dan. helde, to slant, slope, lean, tilt (both trans. and intrans.); cf. held, an inclination, slope; Swed. hälla, to tilt, pour; cf. EFries. hella, to heel over. The adj. is AS. -heald, OFries. hald, Icel. haltr, OHG. hald, inclined, bent forward; Teut. type **halthoz*. Allied to AS. hold, G. hold, faithful, true (to a master), Goth. hulths, gracious; Teut. type **hulthoz*. Cf.

'Grimm and Kuhn both consider the Gk. word borrowed from the East, and the Teutonic one from the L. cannabis which certainly made its way to them'; Curtius, i. 173. The word was borrowed so early that it suffered consonantal change. Der. hemp-en, with adj. suffix, as in gold-en; Hen. V, iii. chor. 8. Also canvas, q. v.

HEN, the female of a bird, especially of the domestic fowl. (E.) ME. hen, Chaucer, C. T. 15445; pl. hennes, id. 14872 (B 4629, 4056). AS. henn, hen, hæn; Grein, ii. 23. Teut. type **hanjā*, f.; from AS. hana, a cock; Grein, ii. 11. + Du. hen, fem. of haan, a cock; Icel. hæna, fem. of hani; Dan. høne, fem. of hane, a cock; Swed. höna, fem. of hane; G. henne, fem. of hahn, a cock. The AS. hana means, literally, 'singer,' the suffix -a denoting the agent, as in AS. hunt-a, a hunter. — ✓KAN, to sing; whence L. canere, to sing. Der. hen-bane, Prompt. Parv. p. 235; lit. 'fowl-poison'; see Bane. Also hen-coop, hen-harrier, a kind of hawk (see Harrier); hen-pecked, i. e. pecked by the hen or wife, as in the Spectator, no. 176: 'a very good sort of people, which are commonly called in scorn the henpeckt.' 'My henpecked sire'; Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Past. iii. 49.

HENCE, from this place or time. (E.) ME. hennes, P. Plowman, B. iii. 108; whence the shorter form hens, occurring in Lydgate's Minor Poems, p. 220. In the modern hence, the -ce merely records that the ME. hens was pronounced with voiceless s, not with a final z-sound. β. In the form hennes, the suffixed s was due to a habit of forming adverbs in -s or -es, as in twy-es, twice, need-es, needs; an older form was henne, Havelok, 843, which is found as late as in Chaucer, C. T. 2358 (A 2356). γ. Again, henne represents a still older henen or heonen, spelt heonene in Ancren Riwele, p. 230, l. 8. AS. heonan, hionan, hence; Grein, ii. 67. Here heonan stands as usual for an older **hinan*. A shorter form appears in the AS. heona (for hina), hence, Grein, ii. 67; closely allied to hi-ne, acc. masc. of the pron. hē, he. See He. ¶ Similarly, L. hinc, hence, is connected with L. hic, this. Der. hence-forth, compounded of hence and forth, and answering to AS. forð heonan, used of time; see examples in Grein, ii. 68, ll. 1-4; hence-forward, comp. of hence and forward.

HENCHMAN, a page, servant. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 121: 'Compare me the fewe . . . disciples of Jesus with the solemne pomp . . . of such as go before the bishop, of his hensemēn, of trumpets, of sundry tunes,' &c.; Udal, on St. Mark, c. 11. vv. 1-10. 'And every knight had after him riding Three henshmen on him awaiting'; The Flower and the Leaf, l. 252 (a poem wrongly ascribed to Chaucer, and belonging to the fifteenth century). ME. henksman; the pl. henksmen occurs in 1392, in the Earl of Derby's Expedition (Camden Soc.), p. 163; cf. p. 280. Spelt henxtman in 1402. The full (Latinised) form hengestmannus occurs in the Issue Roll for 1380 (Easter); see N. E. D. β. We also find Hinxman as a proper name in Wilts. (in the Clergy List, 1873); showing that the right etymology is from ME. hengest (cognate with Du. and G. hengst, Swed. and Dan. hingst), a horse, and E. man. We find similar formations in Icel. hestvörðr (lit. horse-ward), a mounted guard (Cleasby); and in Swed. kingstridare (lit. horse-rider), 'a groom of the king's stable, who rides before his coach'; Widegren's Swed. Dict. In this view, the sense is simply 'groom,' which is the sense required in The Flower and the Leaf. γ. The ME. hengest occurs in Layamon, l. 3546, and is from AS. hengest, a horse (Grein, ii. 34), once a common word. It is cognate with Icel. hest, Swed. and Dan. hingst and häst, G. hengst; from an orig. Teutonic **hangistoz*. The orig. sense of henchman was 'horseman'; then 'a page,' usually a young man of high rank. See A Student's Pastime (index). ¶ I find in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, the following: 'Henchman, qui equo innititur bellicoso, from the G. hengst, a war-horse: with us it signifies one that runs on foot, attending upon a person of honor or worship. [Mentioned] Anno 3 Edw. 4. cap. 5, and 24 Hen. 8. cap. 13. It is written henxman, anno 6 Hen. 8. cap. 1.'

D.). — Arab. hinna, the dyeing or colouring shrub; Lawsonia inermis; Rich. Dict., p. 582.

AS. hire, gen. and dat. case of hēo, she; the possessive pronoun being made from the gen. case, and indeclinable; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, Grammat. Introduction. The word is to be divided as hi-re, where hi- is to be referred to a Teut. pronominal base, signifying 'this'; and -re is the usual AS. fem. inflection in the gen. and dat. of adjectives declined according to the strong declension. See He. Der. her-s, ME. hires, Chaucer, C. T. 4647 (B 227); not found much earlier; her-self.

HERALD, an officer who makes proclamations. (F.—OHG.) ME. herald, heraud; Chaucer, C. T. 2601 (A 2599); P. Plowman, B. xviii. 16. — OF. heralt, heraut, a herald; Low L. heraldus; cf. Ital. araldo, a herald; OHG. herolt (G. herold), a herald (from OF.). β. Nevertheless, the OF. word is of Teut. origin; and prob. from OHG. harēn, to proclaim, cry aloud; with the usual F. suffix -alt for -ald < G. -wald (Toynbee, Gr. § 692. xx); the sense being 'crier' or 'proclaimer.' Cf. OHG. fora-haro, a herald; from for-harēn, to proclaim. γ. The OHG. harēn is cognate with Goth. hazjan, AS.

herian, to praise. Körtling, § 4491. Der. herald-ic; also herald-ry, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 213, spelt heraldie, Gower, C. A. i. 173; bk. ii. 399.

HERB, a plant with a succulent stem. (F.—L.) The word being of F. origin, the h was probably once silent, and is still sometimes so considered; there is a tendency at present to sound the h, the word being a short monosyllable. ME. erbe, herbe, Chaucer, C. T. 14972, 14955 (B 4156, 4139); King Alisaunder, 331.—F. herbe, 'an herb'; Cot.—L. herba, grass, a herb; properly herbage, food for cattle. β. And note ME. herbere, a herb-garden, from L. herbārium through the French; a word discussed under Arbour.

HERD (1), a flock of beasts, group of animals. (E.) ME. heerde, heorde. 'Heerde, or flok of beestys'; Prompt. Parv. p. 236. 'Ane heorde of heorten' = a herd of harts; Layamon, 305. Englished from L. hereditārius, hereditary.—L. hereditās, heredity.—L. herēdi-, decl. stem of hērēs, an heir. See Heir. Der. hereditari-ly. From the same base we have heredita-ble, a late and rare word, for which heritable (MF. heritable) was formerly used, as in Blackstone's Comment. b. ii. c. 5 (R.); also heredita-ment, in Fabyan's Chron., ed. Ellis, p. 650; heredit-y (F. herédité, L. acc. hereditātem).

HERESY, the choice of an opinion contrary to that usually received. (F.—L.—Gk.) The word means, literally, no more than 'choice.' ME. heresye, Avenbite of Inwynt, p. 267 (see Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 103, l. 149); eresie, Wyclif, Acts, xxiv. 14; in Ancren Riwle, p. 82.—OF. heresie, 'heresie, obstinate or wicked error'; Cot.—L. type **hērēsia*, for L. hæresis.—Gk. αἵρεσις, a taking, choice, sect, heresy.—Gk. αἵρεῖν, to take, αἵρεσθαι, to choose. HERIOT, a tribute paid to the lord of a manor on the decease of a tenant. (E.) See Blackstone, Comment. b. ii. capp. 6, 28; and see Hariot in Blount's Law Lexicon; and Heriot in Jamieson's Scot. Dict. [Sir D. Lyndesay speaks of a heriold hors, a horse paid as a heriot, The Monarchie, b. iii. l. 4734; but this represents AS. heregeld, war-tax.] ME. heriet; 'And [h]is beste best [beast] to heriet'; S. E. Legendary, ed. Horstmann, p. 445, l. 480. From AF. heriet, Year-books of Edw. I (1392-3), p. 213. From AS. heregeatu, lit. military apparel; Grein, ii. 36. The heregeatu (-geatwa, -geatwe) consisted of 'military habiliments or equipments, which, after the death of the vassal, escheated to the sovereign or lord, to whom they were delivered by the heir'; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, b. ii. glossary, s. v. In later times, horses and cows, and many other things were paid as heriots to the lord of the manor. 'And þām cinge minne hæregeatwa, fēower sword, and fēower spæra, and fēower scyldas, and fēower bægas, . . . fēower hors, and twā sylfene fæta'; i. e. And [I bequeath] to the king my heriots, viz. four swords, and four spears, and four shields, and four torques, . . . four horses, and two silver vessels; Will dated about 946-955; in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 499.—AS. here, an army (hence, belonging to war); and geatu, pl. geatwe, apparel, adornment; Grein, i. 495.

HERITAGE, an inheritance. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. heritage, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 25, last line but one; King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1281; also eritage, Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 981.—OF. heritage, 'an inheritance, heritage'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -age (answering to L. -aticum) from OF. heriter, to inherit.—L. hereditāre, to inherit; the loss of a syllable is exemplified by Low L. heritator, used for hereditator; it would seem as if the base hērī- was substituted for herēdi-.—L. herēdi-, decl. stem of hērēs, an heir; see Heir. Der. from same source, herit-able, herit-or.

HERMAPHRODITE, an animal or plant of both sexes. (L.—Gk.) In Gascoigne, The Steele Glas, l. 53. See Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17.—L. hermaphroditus.—Gk. ἐρμαφρόδιτος, a coined word, made up from Gk. Ἑρμῆς, Hermes (Mercury), as representing the male principle; and Ἀφροδίτη, Aphroditē (Venus), the female. Hence the legend that Hermaphroditus, son of Hermes, and Aphrodite, when bathing, grew together with Salmacis, the nymph of a fountain, into one person; see Ovid, Met. iv. 383. Der. hermaphrodit-ic, -ic-al, -ism; also hermaphrodis-.

HERMENEUTIC, explanatory. (Gk.) A modern word. From Gk. ἐρμηνευτικός, skilled in interpreting.—Gk. ἐρμηνεύτης, an interpreter; of which a shorter form is ἐρμηνεύς. Connected (perhaps) with L. sermo, speech (Prellwitz). Der. hermeneutic-al, hermeneutic-ly, hermeneutics (the science of interpretation).

HERMETIC, chemical, &c. (Gk.) 'Their seals, their characters, hermetic rings'; Ben Jonson, Underwoods, lxi. An Execration upon Vulcan, l. 73.—Low L. hermēticus, relating to alchemy; a coined word, made from the name Hermēs (= Gk. Ἑρμῆς); from the notion that the great secrets of alchemy were discovered by Hermēs Trismegistus (Hermes the thrice-greatest). Der. hermetic-al, hermetic-ly. ¶ Hermetically was a term in alchemy; a glass bottle was said to be hermetically (i. e. perfectly) sealed when the opening of it was fused and closed against the admission of air.

HERMIT, one who lives in solitude. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. eremite, heremite; in early use. [It first appears in Layamon, 18763, where the earlier text has æremite, the later heremite. This form was taken directly from L. herēmīta, the later form hermite being from the French. Heremite occurs in P. Plowman, B. vi. 190, and even as late as in Holinshed's Description of Britain, b. i. c. 9 (R.).] The shorter form armyte also occurs in Layamon, 18800; and hermyte is in Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 204 (R.).—F. hermite, 'an hermit'; Cot.—Late L. herēmīta, for herēmīta, in P. Plowman, B. xv. 281; but usually erēmīta.—Gk. ἐρεμίτης, a dweller in a desert.—Gk. ἐρημία, a solitude, desert.—Gk. ἐρήμος, deserted, desolate. Root uncertain; perhaps allied to Goth. arms, poor (Prellwitz). Der. hermit-age, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 34, spelt heremytage, Mandeville's Travels, p. 93, from F. hermitage, 'an hermitage'; Cot. Also hermit-ic-al, spelt heremital in Holinshed, Desc. of Britain, b. i. c. 9 (R.), from L. herēmīticus (better erēmīticus), solitary.

HERN, the same as Heron, q. v.

HERNIA, a kind of rupture; a surgical term. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715; hīrnia in Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale (I 423).—L. hernia, a rupture, hernia.

HERO, a warrior, illustrious man. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 270.—MF. heroë, 'a worthy, a demygod'; Cot.—L. hērōēm, acc. of hērōs, a hero.—Gk. ἥρως, a hero, demi-god. ¶ The mod. F. héros is now accommodated to the spelling of the L. nom. The L. acc. is, however, still preserved in the Span. heroe, Ital. eroe. Der. hero-ic, spelt heroicke in Spenser, F. Q. v. 1. 1, from MF. herōique (Cot.), which from L. hērōicus; hero-ic-al-ly, hero-ism; also hero-ine, q. v.

HEROINE, a famous woman. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Minshew. 'A heroine is a kinde of prodigy'; Evelyn, Memoirs; Mrs. Evelyn to Mr. Bohun, Jan. 4, 1672 (R.).—MF. heroïne, 'a most worthy lady'; Cot.—L. hērōinē.—Gk. ἥρωινῃ, f. of ἥρως, hero (above).

HERON, a long-legged water-fowl. (F.—OHG.) ME. heroune, Chaucer, Parliament of Fowles, 346. Also hayron, Wright's Vocab. i. 177; (Voc. 625. 4). 'Heern, byrde, heryn, herne, ardea'; Prompt. Parv. p. 237.—OF. hairon, 'a heron, herne, hernshaw'; Cot. (Mod. F. héron; OProv. aigros; Ital. aghirone, airone; Span. airon).—OHG. heigir, heiger, a heron; Dan. heire, a heron; Icel. hegri, a heron; Swed. häger, a heron; G. häher, heher, a jackdaw; AS. higora, a magpie; Gk. κίσσα (for **kik-ya*), Skt. kiki-, a jay (Prellwitz); of imitative origin. Brugmann, i. §§ 86, 639. ¶ The AS. name was hrāgra, Wright's Vocab. i. 29, col. 1 (Voc. 6. 37); with which cf. G. reiter, a heron; Du. reiger; allied to Gk. κρίγῃ, a creaking, κρίζειν, to screech. Der. heron-er, ME. heronere, Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 413; from OF. haironniere; Cotgrave explains faulcon haironniere as 'a heron, a faulcon made only to the heron.' Also heron-ry. And see Heronshaw, Egret.

HERONSHAW, HERNSHAW, (1) a young heron, (2) a heronry. (F.—OHG.) Spenser has herneshaw, a young heron; F. Q. vi. 7. 9. Two distinct words have been confused here. 1. Hernshaw, a heron, is a corruption of heronsewe; the name heronsew for the heron is still common in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire. Mr. Peacock's Glossary of Manley and Corringham (Lincoln) words has: 'Heronsew, the common heron. "There were vewed at this present survey certayne heronsewes whiche have allwayes used to brede there to the number of iiij."—Survey of Glastonbury, temp. Hen. VIII, Mon. Ang. i. 11. See Chaucer, Squyres Tale, F. 68.' The etymology of this heronsewe is given by Tyrwhitt, who cites the F. heronceau from 'the glossary,' meaning probably that in Urry's ed. of Chaucer; but it is verified by the fact that the OF. heroucel (older form of heronceau) occurs in the Liber Custumarum, p. 304, and means 'a young heron.' And again, Palsgrave has 'heronceau, an hernshawe;' p. 187. The suffix -el is a double dimin., as in lion-c-el, later lionceau. For ew < F. eau, cf. ME. beu-tee = F. beau-té. 2. Hernshaw in its other sense is due to a (false) popular etymology, as if it were from heron, and shaw, a wood. This sense is given by Cotgrave, who explains OF. haironniere by 'a heron's neast, or aerie; a herneshaw, or shaw of wood wherein herons breed.' Hence heronshaw (1) is (F.—OHG.); heronshaw (2) is hybrid.

HERRING, a small fish. (E.) ME. hering (with one r), Havelok, 758. AS. hêring; the pl. hêringas is in Ælfrie's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 24; also hêring, Wright's Vocab. i. 56, l. 4 (Voc. 94. 13; 181. 4). + Du. haring; G. haring; OHG. haring (Kluge). β. The explanation that the fish is named 'from its appearance in large shoals,' from the Teut. type **harjoz*, an army (as seen in Goth. harjis, AS. here, G. heer), seems to be phonetically impossible. The word remains unexplained.

HESITATE, to doubt, stammer. (L.) Spelt hesitate, hæsite in Minsheu, ed. 1627. [Perhaps suggested by the sb. hesitation, which occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. hesitation, whereas he explains hesiter only by 'to doubt, feare, stick, stammer, stagger in opinion.']—L. hæsītātus, pp. of hæsītāre, to stick fast; a frequentative formed from hæsūm, supine of hærēre, to stick, cleave. + Lithuanian gaizti, gaizoti, to tarry, delay (Nesselmann); Fick, i. 576. —✓GHAIS, to stick, cleave; where the gh is not palatal. Brugmann, i. § 627. Der. hesitat-ion, hesit-anc-y; from the same root, ad-here, co-here, in-her-ent.

HESPERIAN, western. (L.—Gk.) 'Your feigned Hesperian orchards;' Massinger, Virgin Martyr, A. iv. sc. 3 (where it refers to the Hesperides).—L. Hesperius, western; with suffix -an.—L. Hesperia.—Gk. Ἑσπερία, the western land; fem. of ἑσπερίος, evening, western.—Gk. ἑσπερος, evening. + L. vesper, evening; see Vesper. Der. Closely allied to the adj. ἑσπερίος is the fem. ἑσπερίς, whence the pl. Ἑσπερίδες, the daughters of Night, who dwelt in a western isle, and guarded a garden with golden apples; Hesiod, Th. 215.

HEST, a command. (E.) ME. hest, heste, a command; also, a promise; Chaucer, C. T. 11376 (F 1064). The final t is properly excrescent, as in whils-t, agains-t, amongst, amids-t, from ME. whiles, againes, amonges, amidides. AS. hæst, a command, Grein, i. 24; Teut. type **haittiz*, f. (> **haissiz*, with ss for tt).—AS. hātan, to command; Teut. type **haitan*. + Icel. heit, a vow, from heita, to call, promise; OHG. heiz (G. geheiss), a command, from OHG. heizan (G. heissen), to call, bid, command. Cf. Goth. haitan, to name, call, command.

HETEROCLITE, irregularly inflected. (L.—Gk.) A grammatical term; hence used in the general sense of irregular, disorderly. 'There are strange heteroclites in religion now adaies;' Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. iv. let. 35.—L. heteroclitus, varying in declension.—Gk. ἑτερόκλιτος, otherwise or irregularly inflected.—Gk. ἑτερος, decl. stem of ἕτερος, other; and -κλιτος, formed from κλίνειν, to lean, hence, to vary as a case does, cognate with E. lean (1).

HETERODOX, of strange opinion; heretical. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Compounded from Gk. ἕτερο-, decl. stem of ἕτερος, another, other; and δόξα, opinion, from δοκεῖν, to think. Der. heterodox-y, Gk. ἑτεροδοξία.

HETEROGENEOUS, dissimilar in kind. (Gk.) Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, gives the adjectives heterogene, heterogeneous, and the sb. heterogeneity. Compounded from Gk. ἕτερο-, decl. stem of ἕτερος, another, other; and γένος, kind, kin, cognate with E. kin. Der. heterogeneous-ly, -ness; heterogene-it-y.

HETMAN, a captain; of Cossacks, or in Poland. (Pol.—G.) First in 1710, in Whitworth, Acc. of Russia (ed. 1758, p. 19).—Polish hetman (Russ. ataman), a captain.—G. haupt, head; and mann, man.

HEW, to hack, cut. (E.) ME. hewen, Chaucer, C. T. 1424 (A 1422). AS. hēawan, to hew; Grein, ii. 62. + Du. houwen; Icel. höggva; Swed. hugga; Dan. hugge; G. hauen; OHG. houwan. Teut.

type **hauwan*. + Russ. kovate, to hammer, forge; Lith. kauti, to fight; cf. Lith. kowā, battle. Allied to L. cūdare, to strike, pound, beat. Brugmann, i. § 639. The root appears to be KEU, to strike, beat. Der. hew-er; also hay (1), q.v.; hoe, q.v.

HEXAGON, a plane figure, with six sides and angles. (L.—Gk.) Hexagonal is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Hexagone in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Named from its six angles.—L. hexagōnum, a hexagon.—Gk. ἑξάγωνος, six-cornered.—Gk. ἕξ, six, cognate with E. six; and γωνία, an angle, corner, allied to γόνυ, knee, cognate with E. knee. See Six and Knee. Der. hexagon-al, hexagon-al-ly.

HEXAMETER, a certain kind of verse having six feet. (L.—Gk.) 'This provoking song in hexameter verse;' Sidney's Arcadia, b. i. (R.). 'I like your late Englishe hexameters;' Spenser, letter to Harvey, qu. in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. xxviii.—L. hexameter; also hexametrus.—Gk. ἑξάμετρος, a hexameter; properly an adj. meaning 'of six metres' or feet.—Gk. ἕξ, six, cognate with E. six; and μέτρον, a measure, metre. See Six and Metre.

HEY, interjection. (E.) ME. hei, Legend of St. Katharine, l. 579; hay, Gawain and Grene Knight, 1445. A natural exclamation. + G. hei, interjection; Du. hei, hey! ho!

HEYDAY (1), interjection (G. or Du.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 190. 'Heyda, what Hans Flutterkin is this? what Dutchman does build or frame castles in the air?' Ben Jonson, Masque of Augurs. 'Ioly rutterkin, heyda!' Skelton, Magnif, 757. Borrowed either from G. heida, ho! hallo! or from Du. hei daar, ho! there. It comes to much the same thing. The G. da, Du. daar, are cognate with E. there. β. But note that Cotgrave has MF. hadea, 'interj. of perceiving or surprising, ha! are you there?'; cf. OF. hé dea, hé dia, interj. (Godefroy, s. v. dea). ¶ The interj. hey is older; see above.

HEYDAY (2), frolicsome wildness. (E.) 'At your age the heyday in the blood is tame;' Hamlet, iii. 4. 69. I take this to be quite a different word from the foregoing, though the commentators confuse the two. In this case, and in the expression 'heyday of youth,' the word may well stand for high day (ME. hey day); and it is not surprising that the old editions of Shakespeare have highday in place of heyday; only, unluckily, in the wrong place, viz. Temp. ii. 2. 190. So also 'in the highday of blood;' Macklin, Love-a-la-Mode, A. i (Sir Archy); 'in the highday of youth;' Smollett, Hum. Clinker, 1771, ii. 50. Cf. 'that sabbath day was an high day;' John, xix. 31. For the old spellings of high, see High.

HIATUS, a gap, defect, &c. (L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731.—L. hiātus, a gap, chasm; cf. hiātus, pp. of hiāre, to yawn, gape; cognate with E. yawn. See Yawn. Doublet, chasm, q.v.

HIERNAL, wintry. (F.—L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13, § 10, where it is spelt hybernal.—F. hibernal, 'winterly;' Cot.—L. hibernālis, wintry (Wisdom, xvi. 29, Vulg.); lengthened from L. hibernus, wintry. β. Hi-bernus is allied to Gk. χειμερινός, wintry, χειμα, winter; and to L. hi-ems, winter, Gk. χι-ών, snow, Skt. hi-ma-s, cold, winter; the form of the root is GHEI. Der. from same source, hibern-ate.

HICCOUGH, HICCUP, HICKET, a spasmodic inspiration, with closing of the glottis, causing a slight sound. (E.) Now generally spelt hiccough. Spelt hiccup (riming with prick up), Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. 346. Also hicket, as in the old edition of Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9, § 5; and in Minsheu. Also hickcock; Florio explains Ital. singhiozzi by 'yeaxings, hichecocks.' Also hickcock; Cotgrave has: 'Hoquet, the hickcock, or yexing;' also 'Hoqueter, to yex, or clock [cluck], to have the hickup or hickcock.' β. It seems to be generally considered that the second syllable is cough, but it is ascertained (see N. E. D.) that hiccough is an accommodated spelling, due to popular etymology. The evidence takes us back to the forms hick-ock, hick-et, both formed from hick by the help of the usual dimin. suffixes -ock, -et. Cf. F. hoqu-et, the hiccough, in which the final -et is certainly a dimin. suffix; Walloon hikett, a hiccough, hiket, a shaking (Remacle). γ. The former syllable hic, hik, or hick is of imitative origin, to denote the spasmodic sound or jerk; and is preserved in the prov. E. hick, to hiccough. It is not peculiar to English. + MDu. huck-up, 'the hick or hock;' also hick, 'the hick-hock,' Hexham; Du. hik, the hiccough, hikken, to hiccough; Dan. hikke, the hiccough; also, to hiccough; Swed. hicka, the hiccough; also, to hiccough. And cf. W. ig, a hiccough, sob; igio, to sob; Breton, hik, a hiccough, called hāk in the dialect of Vannes, whence (perhaps) F. hoquet. δ. All from an imitative base HIK, variant form of KIK, used to denote convulsive movements in the throat; see Chincough.

HICKORY, an American tree of the genus Carya. (N. Amer. Indian.) Short for pohickery, recorded in 1653 as the Amer. Indian name; Virginian pouchicora (Trumbull).

HIDALGO, a Spanish nobleman of the lowest class. (Span.—L.) The word occurs in Terry, Voyage to East India, ed. 1655, p. 169 (Todd); fidalgo, Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 116.—Span.

hidalgo, a nobleman; OSpan. fidalgo, Port. fidalgo, a nobleman; also MSpan. hijodalgo (Minshew). Lit. 'son of something,' i.e. a son to whom a father has left an estate. (So Körting; the explanation from filius Italicus is baseless.)  $\beta$ . Hijo, OSpan. fijo, is from L. filium, acc. of filius, son; see FILIAL; -dalgo is from L. dē aliquō, of something.

HIDE (1), to cover, conceal. (E.) ME. hiden, huden; Chaucer, C. T. 1479 (A 1477); Ancren Riwe, p. 130. AS. hýdan, Grein, ii. 125. + Gk. κεύθειν, to hide. And cf. L. cus-tōs, a custodian (see CUSTODY); W. cuddio, to hide (base coud-). —  $\checkmark$  KEUDH, to hide. Der. hid-ing. Brugmann, i. § 699.

HIDE (2), a skin. (E.) ME. hyde, Pricke of Conscience, l. 5299; hude, Ancren Riwe, p. 120. AS. hýd, the skin; Grein, ii. 125. + Du. huid; Icel. húð; Dan. and Swed. hud; OHG. hūt; G. haut. + L. cutis, skin; Gk. κύτος, σκότος, skin, hide; OPruss. keuto, hide. —  $\checkmark$  SKEU, to cover; Fick, i. 816. See SKY. Der. hide-bound, said of a tree the bark of which impedes its growth, Milton's Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 32, l. 2; also hide (3).

HIDE (3), to flog, castigate. (E.) Colloquial; 'to skin' by flogging. Cf. Icel. hýða, to flog; from húð, the hide. Der. hid-ing.

HIDE (4), a measure of land. (E.) 'Hide of land'; Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. Of variable size; estimated at 120 or 100 acres; or even much less; see Blount. Low L. hida; Ducange. AS. híd; Ælfred's tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 24; b. iv. c. 13, 16, 19. (See Kemble's Saxons in England, b. i. c. 4; and the Appendix, showing that the estimate at 120 or 100 acres is too large.)  $\beta$ . This word is of a contracted form; the full form is higid; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 657; Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, no. 243. This form higid is equivalent to hiwisc, another term for the same thing; and both words orig. meant (as Bede says) an estate sufficient to support one family or household. They are, accordingly, closely connected with AS. hiwan, domestics, those of one household, and with the Goth. heiuwa-frauja, the master of a household; see further under Hind (2). ¶ Popular etymology has probably long ago confused the hide of land with hide, a skin; but the two words must be kept entirely apart. The former is AS. higid, the latter AS. hýd.

HIDEOUS, ugly, horrible. (F.—L.?) The central e has crept into the word, and it has become trisyllabic; the true form is hidous. It is trisyllabic in Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 3. 34. ME. hidous (the invariable form); Chaucer, C. T., A 3520; he also has hidously, C. T., A 1701. — OF. hidos, hidus, hideus, later hideux, hideous; the earliest form is hisdos.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin; if the former s in hisdos is not an inserted letter, the probable original is L. hispidōsus, roughish, an extended form of L. hispidus, rough, shaggy, bristly. (Körting, § 4581.) Der. hideous-ly, hideous-ness.

HIE, to hasten. (E.) ME. hien, hyen, hizen; P. Plowman, B. xx. 322; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 10605 (F 291). The ME. sb. hie or hye, haste, is also found; id. 4629 (B 209). AS. higian (higian?), to hasten; Grein, ii. 72.  $\beta$ . Allied to Du. hijgen, to pant; which seems to be of imitative origin.

HIERARCHY, a sacred government. (F.—Gk.) Gascoigne has the pl. hierarchies; Steel Glas, 993; ed. Arber, p. 77; spelt hierarches, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 1. § 4. — F. hierarchie, 'an hierarchy'; Cot. — Gk. ἱεραρχία, the power or post of an ἱεράρχης. — Gk. ἱεράρχης, a steward or president of sacred rites. — Gk. ἱερ-, for ἱερός, sacred; and ἀρχεῖν, to rule, govern.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense of ἱερός was 'vigorous'; cognate with Skt. ishiras, vigorous, fresh, blooming (in the Peterb. Dict.); see Brugmann, i. § 851. For ἀρχεῖν, see Arch-, prefix. Der. hierarchi-c-al; we also find hierarch (Milton, P. L. v. 468), from Gk. ἱεράρχης.

HIEROGLYPHIC, symbolical; applied to picture writing. (L.—Gk.) 'The characters which are called hieroglyphicks'; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1051 (R.). See Hierarchy and Glyptic. Der. hieroglyphic-al, -al-ly; also the sb. hieroglyph, coined by omitting -ic.

HIEROPHANT, a revealer of sacred things, a priest. (Gk.) In Warburton's Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4 (R.). — Gk. ἱεροφάντης, teaching the rites of worship. — Gk. ἱερο-, for ἱερός, sacred; and φαίνειν, to show, explain. See Hierarchy and Phantom.

HIGGLE, to chaffer, bargain. (E.) 'To higgle thus'; Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2. l. 491. And used by Fuller, Worthies, Northumberland (R.). A weakened form of haggle; see Haggle (2). Der. higgl-er.

HIGH, tall, lofty, chief, illustrious. (E.) ME. heigh, high, hey, hy; Chaucer, C. T., A 316; P. Plowman, B. x. 155. AS. hēah, hēh; Grein, ii. 44. + Du. hoog; Icel. hār; Swed. hög; Dan. høi; Goth. hauhs; G. hoch; OHG. hōh. Teut. type *\*hauhoz*.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'knoblike', humped or bunched up; cf. G. hügel, a bunch, knob, hillock; Icel. haugr, a mound. The still older sense is simply 'rounded'; cf. Lith. kaukaras, a hill, kaukas, a boil, a swelling; Skt. kucha-s, the female breast.  $\checkmark$  KEUK, to bend, make round; cf. Skt. kuch, to contract, bend. Der. height, q. v.; high-ly; also high-born, K. John, v. 2. 79; high-bred; high-coloured, Ant. and Cleop. ii. 7. 4; high-fed; high-flown; high-handed; high-minded, i Hen. VI, i. 5. 12; high-minded-ness; high-ness, Temp. ii. 1. 172; high-priest; high-road; high-spirited; high-way = ME. heigh weye, P. Plowman, B. x. 155; high-way-man; high-wrought, Othello, ii. 1. 2; with numerous similar compounds. Also high-land (below); and see how (2).

HIGHLAND, belonging to a mountainous region. (E.) 'A generation of highland thieves and redshanks'; Milton, Observ. on the Art. of Peace (quoted in Todd). AS. hēahland, a high land; from hēah, high, and land, land; Cædmon, Exod. 385. Der. highland-er; highlands.

HIGHT, was or is called. (E.) Obsolete. A most singular word, presenting the sole instance in English of a passive verb; the correct phrase was he hight = he was (or is) called, or he was named. 'This grisly beast, which lion hight by name' = which is called by the name of lion; Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 140. ME. highte. 'But ther as I was wont to highte [be called] Arcite, Now highte I Philostrate'; Chaucer, C. T., A 1557. Older forms hatte, hette. 'Clarice hatte that maide' = the maid was named Clarice; Floriz and Blanchefur, ed. Lumby, l. 479. 'Thet hetten Calef and Iosue' = that were named Caleb and Joshua; Avenbite of Inwyte, p. 67. And see Stratmann's Dict., s. v. hāten. From AS. hātte, I am called, I was called; pres. and pt. t. passive or middle, of AS. hātan, active verb, to bid, command, call; Grein, ii. 16, 17. + Icel. heiti, I am named, from heita, to call; G. ich heisse, I am named, from heissen, to call.  $\beta$ . Best illustrated by Gothic, which has haitan, to call, name, pt. t. haihait; whence was formed the passive pres. tense haitada, I am called, he is called; as in 'Thomas, saei haitada Didymus' = Thomas, who is called Didymus; John, xi. 16. See Hest.

HILARITY, cheerfulness, mirth. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Restraining his ebriety unto hilarity'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 23, § 16. — F. hilarité, mirth; omitted by Cotgrave, but see Littré. — L. hilaritatem, acc. of hilaritās, mirth. — L. hilaris, hilarus, cheerful, gay. Not an orig. L. word; but borrowed. — Gk. ἱλαρός, cheerful, gay. Cf. Gk. ἱλαος, propitious, kind; ἱλῆμι, I am gracious. —  $\checkmark$  SEL; whence E. silly. Brugmann, iv. § 594. Der. Hence the late word hilarious, formed as if from a L. *\*hilariosus*; hilarious does not occur in Todd's Johnson. From same source, ex-hilarate. ¶ Hilary Term is so called from the festival of St. Hilary (L. Hilarius); Jan. 13.

HILDING, a base, menial wretch. (E.) In Shak. used of both sexes; Tam. Shrew, ii. 26; &c. [Not derived, as Dr. Schmidt says, from AS. healdan, to hold; which is impossible.] We also find hielding, hilding, heilding, applied to a worthless horse, a jade (N. E. D.). Prob. from ME. helden, to incline, to bend down. Cf. ME. heldinge, a bending aside; AS. hylding, a bending (Voc. 382. 2). See Heel (2).

And see Northumbrian version of St. Luke, xxiii. 30. + MDu. hil, hille; Oudemans.  $\beta$ . Further allied to Lithuan. kainas, L. collis, a hill; culmen, a top; Gk. κολλωνός, a hill. Brugmann, i. § 633. See Culminate, and Holm. From  $\checkmark$  QEL, to be elevated, rise up. Der. hill-y, hill-i-ness; dimin. hill-ock, in Shak. Venus and Adonis, 237. ¶ Not connected with G. hügel, a hill; for that is related to E. how, a hill; see How (2).

HILT, the handle of a sword. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, v. 2. 159; it was common to use the pl. *hilt*s with reference to a single weapon; Jul. Cæsar, v. 3. 43. ME. hilt; Layamon, 6506. Perhaps allied to Gk. κεμ-ās, a young deer. Der. hind-berry, a wild raspberry.

HIND (2), a peasant. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 12. The d is excrescent. ME. hine, Chaucer, C. T. 605 (A 603); hyne, P. Plowman, B. vi. 133. AS. **hina*, a domestic; but the word is unauthenticated as a nom. sing., and was orig. a gen. pl.; so that hina really stands for hina man = a man of the domestics. We find hina ealdor = elder of the domestics, i.e. master of a household; Ælfred's

tr. of Beda, iii. 9. β. Further, hina stands for higna, gen. pl. of hiwan (pl. nom.), domestics; Grein, ii. 78. Cf. hiwen, a family; hiwæden, a household; also G. hei-rath, marriage; Goth. heiwa-frauja, master of a household. Allied to L. ciuis, a citizen. Brugmann, i. § 609.

HIND (3), adj. in the rear. (E.) We say 'hind feet,' i.e. the two feet of a quadruped in the rear. But the older expression is 'hinder feet,' as in St. Brandan, ed. Wright, p. 30, the positive degree not being used; we also find hynderere, hyndrere, Wyclif, Gen. xvi. 13; hyndrest, Chaucer, C. T. 624 (A 622). HINDMOST, last. (E.) In Shak. Sonnet, 85. 12; 2 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 2; cf. henmast, Barbour, Bruce, viii. 245. The suffix is the word most, and the compound is of late formation. β. Distinct from AS. hindema, hindmost; Grein, ii. 76; where the suffix -ma is the same as that seen in L. opti-mus, optu-mus, best; see Aftermost; cf. Goth. hindumists, hindmost, Matt. viii. 12; to be divided as hind-u-m-ists; cf. Goth. fru-ma, first. See Hind (3). ¶ Also spelt hindermost, as in Holinshed, Hist. Scotland, an. 1290 (R.). And again, we have ME. hind-r-est, as in Chaucer, C. T. 624 (A 622).

HINGE, the joint on which a door turns. (E.) The i was formerly e. ME. henge (with hard g), a hinge; with dimin. form hengel, a hinge. For the sound, cf. singe, swinge. Der. hinge, verb.

HINT, a slight allusion. (E.) a. The verb is later than the sb. 'As I have hinted in some former papers,' Tatler, no. 267. First found in 1648. Only the sb. occurs in Shak., where it is a common word; Oth. i. 3. 142, 166. Esp. used in the phrases 'to take the hint,' or 'upon this hint.' β. Hint properly signifies 'a thing taken,' i.e. a thing caught or apprehended; being a derivative of the ME. henten (pp. hent), to seize upon. Palsgrave has: 'I hente, I take by violence'; also spelt hinten. Cf. hint, sb., a sudden seizure, Dunbar, Fenyet Friar, l. 88. 'Hyntyd, raptus; Hyntyn, or revyn, or hentyn, rapio, arripio'; Prompt. Parv. p. 240. The earlier spelling of the verb was henten, pt. t. hente, Chaucer, C. T. 700 (A 698); the pp. hent occurs even in Shak. Meas. iv. 6. 14. AS. hentan, to seize, to hunt after; Grein, ii. 34. Cf. Goth. -hinthan, to seize. See Hunt. Der. hint, verb.

Perhaps allied to Gk. κύβος, the hollow near the hips of cattle. Der. hip-bone, AS. hype-bān; Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 1, last line (Voc. 159. 24). ¶ The word hipped, depressed, is connected with hypochondria; see Hippish.

AS. hēope (Voc. 133. 36); whence the comp. hēop-brýmel, a hip-bramble; Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 1; to translate L. rubus (Voc. 138. 37). + Dan. hyben, pl.; MDan. hjubentorn, hip-thorn; MHG. hiefe, OHG. hiufo, a bramble-bush.

HIPPISH, hypochondriacal. (Gk.) In Byron, Beppo, st. 64. The word is merely a colloquial substitute for hypochondriacal, of which only the first syllable is preserved. Hence hippish is for hyp-ish. See Somerville's poem entitled 'The Hip.'

HIPPOCAMPUS, a kind of fish. (Gk.) Hyppocamps ends a line in W. Browne's Britannia's Pastorals, bk. ii. song 1. Also ist, 'st. Cf. Dan. hys, interj. silence! hysse, to hush.

Coined from Gk. ἱστο-, for ιστός, a web; and -λογία, from λόγος, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. β. The orig. sense of ιστός is a ship's mast, also the bar or beam of a loom, which in Greek looms stood upright; hence, a warp or web. γ. So called because standing upright; from Gk. ἵστημι, to make to stand, set, place; from ✓STA, to stand; see Stand.

HISTORY, also STORY, a narrative, account. (L. — Gk.) Story (q. v.) is an abbreviated form. Gower has histoire, C. A. iii. 48; bk. vi. 1383. Fabyan gave to his Chronicle (printed in 1516) the name of The Concordance of Histories. In older authors, we commonly find the form storie, which is of F. origin. Historie is Englished directly from L. historia, a history. — Gk. ἱστορία, a learning by enquiry, information, history. — Gk. ἱστορ-, stem of ἵστωρ or ἵστωρ, knowing, learned; for **ἵδ-τωρ*, from the weak grade ἵδ- of εἰδέναι, to know. — ✓WEID, to know; see Wit. Der. histori-an, formerly historien, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 24; histori-c-al, Tyn-dal's Works, p. 266, col. 2; histori-c-al-ly; histori-c; histori-o-grapher, a writer of history (from Gk. γράφειν, to write), Gascoigne's Steel Glas, 981; histori-o-graphy.

HISTRIONICAL, relating to the stage. (L.) In Minshew. 'And is a histrionical contempt'; Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, A. iii. sc. 4. Coined, with suffix -al, from L. histrionicus, of or belonging to a player. — L. histrioni-, decl. stem of histrion, a player, actor. From Etruscan hister, a player; Livy, vii. 2.

HIT, to light upon, to strike, to attain to. (Scand.) ME. hitten, P. Plowman, B. xii. 108; xvi. 87; Layamon, l. 1550. — Icel. hitla, to hit upon, meet with; Swed. hitla, to find, discover, light upon; Dan. hitte, to hit upon. Der. hit, sb.

HITCH, to move by jerks, catch slightly, suddenly. (E.) ME. hicchen. 'Hytychyn, hychyn, hytchen, or remevyn, Amoveo, moveo, removeo'; Prompt. Parv. p. 239; where the word should have been printed as hyccchyn or hyccchen. We also find: 'Hatchyd [read hacchyd], or remevyd, hichid, hychyd, Amotus, remotus;' ibid. Cf. Lowland Scotch hatch, hotch, to move by jerks; Jamieson. Also prov. E. hotch, hutch, to jerk, to hitch; huck, to draw near, to hitch (E.D.D.). Of obscure origin. Perhaps related to prov. E. huck, to hunch up; Du. hokken, to squat, to crouch, also to stick; as het hokt, there is an obstacle (or hitch); Calisch. If so, it is allied to huckster. See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1903, p. 150. Der. hitch, sb.

HITHE, HYTHE, a small haven. (E.) ME. hithe; as in Garleke-hithe, P. Plowman, B. v. 324; and see Prompt. Parv., p. 242, note 1. AS. hȳð, a haven; Grein, ii. 126. Teut. type **hūthjā*, f.

HITHER, to this place. (E.) ME. hider, hither, Chaucer, C. T. 674 (A 672); the right form in Chaucer being probably hider, since he rhymes thider with slider; C. T. 1265 (A 1263). [So also ME. fader, moder are now father, mother.] AS. hider (common); Grein, ii. 71. + Icel. hēdra (for hiðra); Goth. hidrē. + L. citrā, on this side. β. From the Teutonic pronominal base hi- (see He); with a suffix allied to the Idg. comparative suffix -ter. Der. hither-to; hither-ward, ME. hiderward, P. Plowman, B. vi. 323.

HIVE, a basket for bees. (E.) The old sense is 'hood.' ME. hyue (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 15398 (B 4582). Spelt hyfe, Wright's Vocab. i. 223, col. 2 (Voc. 706. 41). AS. hȳf, f.; Voc. 123. 16; 'Aluearia, hyfi'; Corpus Gloss. 133. Teut. type **hūfiz*. + Du. huif, a hood, a hive (see Franck); Dan. dial. hyve. Allied to L. cūpa, a tub, a cup. See Cupola.

HO, HOA, a call to excite attention. (E.) 'And cryed ho!' Chaucer, C. T., A 1706. Merely a natural exclamation; cf. Icel. hō, interj. ho!, also Icel. hōa, to shout out ho!

HOAR, white, grayish white. (E.) ME. hor, hoor; Chaucer, C. T. 3876, 7764 (A 3878, D 2182); P. Plowman, B. vi. 85. AS. hār, Grein, ii. 14. + Icel. hār, hoar, hoary; G. hehr, exalted, OHG. hēr, proud, lofty, orig. 'reverend.' Teut. type **hairoz* (= hai-roz), lit. 'shining'; hence, white. The base hai- appears in Goth. hais, a torch, G. hei-ter, orig. 'bright', Icel. hei-ð, brightness; cf. Skt. kētus, a sign, a meteor (Kluge). ¶ To be kept distinct from Icel. hār, which is the E. high (the r being merely the sign of the nom. case); and also from E. hair. Der. hoar-y, occurring in the comp. horilocket, having hoary locks, Layamon, 25845; hoar-i-ness; also hoar-frost, ME. hoarfrost, Wyclif, Exod. xvi. 14; also hoar-hound, q. v.

HOARD, a store, a treasure. (E.) ME. hord, Chaucer, C. T. 3262; Gower, C. A. iii. 155; bk. vii. 2094. AS. hord, Grein, ii. 96. + Icel. hodd; G. hort; Goth. huzd, a treasure. β. The Teutonic type is **huzdo-*, due to Idg. **kudh-dho-*, 'a thing hidden'; from **kudh*, weak grade of **KEUDH*, whence Gk. κεῦθ-ειν, AS. hȳd-an, to hide. See Hide (1). Brugmann, i. § 699. Der. hoard, verb, AS. hordian, in Sweet's A. S. Reader; cf. Goth. huzdjan, to hoard; hoard-er, AS. hordere (Bosworth).

HOARDING, HOARD, a fence enclosing a house while builders are at work. (F.—Du.; or Du.) Rare in books; it is difficult to say how long it may have existed in E. as a builder's term. Hoard occurs in 1757 (N. E. D.). Either taken directly from Du. horde, a hurdle; or from OF. hourd, 'a scaffold', in Froissart (Godefroy, s. v. hourt), which is borrowed from it. The suffix -ing is, of course, English. Cf. Picard hourdage, a scaffold (Corblet); AF. hurdys, a scaffold, in Liber Albus; p. 477. The true E. word is Hurdle, q. v.

HOARHOUND, HOREHOUND, the name of a plant. (E.) The true hoarhound is the white, Marrubium vulgare; the first part of the word is hoar, and the plant is so called because its bushy stems 'are covered with white woolly down'; Johns, Flowers of the Field. The final d is excrescent; the ME. form being horehune. 'Marubium, horehune;' Wright's Vocab. i. 139 (Voc. 554. 2). AS. hārhiune; or simply hiune; for numerous examples of which see Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 334; where we also find: 'the syllable hār, hoary, describes the aspect, so that "black horehound" shows how we have forgotten our own language.' The words are also found separate; þa hāran hūnan. We also find hwite hāre hūnan, white horehound, an early indication of the black horehound, Ballota nigra, a very strong-smelling plant. β. The first syllable is obvious; see Hoar. The second syllable is unexplained. ¶ It thus appears that the right names should have been hoar houn and black houn; white hoarhound involves a reduplication; and black hoarhound, a contradiction.

HOARSE, having a rough, harsh voice. (E.) The r in this word is probably intrusive, and is (generally) not sounded; still, it was inserted at an early period. ME. hoos, hos, hors; all three spellings occur in P. Plowman, B. xvii. 324 (and various readings); hors, Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 347. AS. hās, Grein, ii. 14. + Dan. hæs; Swed. hes; Du. heesch; G. heiser. β. All from a Teutonic type **haisoz*; or (if the r be original) **hairsoz*; perhaps the latter is indicated by the Icel. form häss. See N. E. D. Der. hoarse-ly, hoarseness.

HOARY, white; see Hoar.

HOAX, to trick, to play a practical joke. (Low L.) In Todd's Johnson; not found in early writers. The late appearance of the word suggests that it is a corruption of hocus, used in just the same sense. 'Legerdemain, with which these jugglers hocus the vulgar;' Nalson, in Todd. 'This gift of hocus-pocussing;' L'Estrange (Todd). See Hocus-Pocus. Der. hoax, sb.

HOB (1), HUB, the nave of a wheel, part of a grate. (E.) The true sense is 'projection.' Hence hub, 'the nave of a wheel (Oxfordshire); a small stack of hay, the mark to be thrown at in quoits, the hilt of a weapon; up to the hub, as far as possible;' Halliwell. The mark for quoits is the same word as hob, 'a small piece of wood of a cylindrical form, used by boys to set on end, to put half-pence on to chuck or pitch at;' Halliwell. Hob also means the shoe (projecting edge) of a sledge. The hob of a fire-place is explained in the N. E. D. as having been orig. 'a boss or mass of clay behind the fire-place.' EFries. hobbe, a rough tump of grassy land rising out of water; hubbel, a projection. + Du. hobbel, a knob; G. hübel, OHG. hubel, a hillock. [Cf. Du. heuvel, a hill; AS. hofer, a hump.] Lith. kup-stas, a tump of grass. Der. hob-nail, a nail with a projecting head, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 398; 2 Hen. VI, iv. 10. 63; hob-nail-ed.

HOB (2), a clown, a rustic, a fairy. (F.—OHG.) 'The hobbes as wise as grauest men;' Drant's tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry (R.). 'From elves, hobs, and fairies That trouble our dairies;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas, iv. 6. See Nares; also Hob in Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary, where, however, the suggestion of identifying hob with elf is to be rejected. It is quite certain that Hob was a common personal name, and in early use. 'To beg of Hob and Dick;' Cor. ii. 3. 123. That it was in early use is clear from its numerous derivatives, as Hobbs, Hobbins, Hobson, Hopkins, Hopkinson. β. That Hob, strange as it may seem, was a popular corruption of Robin is clearly borne out by the equally strange corruption of Hodge from Roger, as well as by the name of Robin Goodfellow for the hob-goblin Puck; (Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 40). Robert Bruce was nicknamed 'kyng Hobbe;' Polit. Songs, p. 216. γ. The name Robin is French, and, like Robert, is of OHG. origin; Littré considers it as a mere pet corruption from Robert, a name early known in England, as being that of the eldest son of Will. I. Der. hob-goblin (see goblin); spelt hobgoblin in Palsgrave, who translates it by F. goblin.

HOBBLE, to limp, walk with a limp. (E.) ME. hobelen (with one b), P. Plowman, A. i. 113; P. Plowman's Crede, 106; and see Barbour's Bruce, iv. 447. Practically, the frequentative of hop; so that the lit. sense is 'to hop often.' + Du. hobbelen, to toss, ride on a hobby-horse, stammer, stutter (all with the notion of repetition of uneven motion); frequent. of hobben, to toss up and down; allied to huppen, huppelen, to hop, skip. Cf. EFries. and Westphal. hub-belen, to hobble; OF. hober, to move, bestir oneself; prov. G. hoppeln, to hop, hobble (Flügel). See Hop (1). Der. hobble, sb.

HOBBLEDEHOY, a youth approaching manhood. (E.) A jocosse word, very variously spelt (see N. E. D.). Palsgrave, in 1540, has hobledehoye; Cotgrave explains F. marmaille as 'young rascals . . . a troop of . . . unprofitable hoberdihoies.' The true origin is unknown. Perhaps suggested by E. hobble, expressive of clumsy movement, and hoy! as an interjection. Cf. F. hober, 'to remove from place to place, a rustic word;' Cot. Low G. hop-hei, an assembly of common people who dance about; Alsace hoppetihopp, a giddy, flighty, eccentric man (Martin); Low G. hupperling, a boy who jumps about, and cannot be still. Hobby was also a pet name for Robert; see Hobby (1).

HOBBY (1), HOBBY-HORSE, an ambling nag, a toy like a horse, a favourite pursuit. (F.—OHG.) See Hobby in Trench, Select Glossary. A hobby is now a favourite pursuit, but formerly a toy in imitation of a prancing nag, the orig. sense being a kind of prancing horse. In Hamlet, iii. 2. 142. 'They have likewise excellent good horses, we term the hobbies;' Holland, Camden's Ireland, p. 63. A corruption of ME. hobin, a nag; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xiv. 68, 500; [whence OF. hobin, 'a hobby, a little ambling and short-maned horse;' Cot.] β. But this ME. Hobin was a horse's name (see N. E. D.); of which Dobbin is a familiar variant. And Hobin is but an E. variant of F. Robin; see further under Hob (2).

HOBBY (2), a small species of falcon. (F.—Du.) Obsolete. Cotgrave translates MF. hobreau by 'the hawke teamed a hobby.' ME. hobi, hoby (with one b). 'Hoby, hawke;' Prompt. Parv.; pl. hobies, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, cap. xviii; see Spec. of English, ed. Skeat, p. 204. Like other terms of falconry, it is of F. origin; being from OF. hobet, a hobby, allied to the MF. hobreau mentioned above. So named from its movement. — OF. hober, 'to stirre, move, remove from place to place;' Cot. — MDu. hobben, to toss, move up and down. See Hobble. ¶ This etymology is confirmed by noting that the OF. verb hober was sometimes spelt auber (Cot.); corresponding to which latter form, the hobby was also called aubereau (Cot.).

HOBGOBLIN, a kind of fairy. (F.—OHG.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 40; hobgoblyng in Palsgrave. Compounded of hob and goblin. See Hob (2) and Goblin.

HOBNAIL, a kind of nail. See Hob (1).

HOBNOB, HABNAB, take or leave, in any case, at random. (E.) Compounded of hab and nab, derived respectively from AS. habban, to have, and nabban, not to have. 1. In one aspect it means 'take it or leave it'; implying free choice, and hence a familiar invitation to drink, originating the phrase 'to hob-nob together.' 'Hob-nob is his word; give't or take't,' Twelfth Night, iii. 4. 262. 2. In another aspect, it means hit or miss, at random; also, in any case. 'Philautus determined, hab, nab, to sende his letters;' i.e. whatever might happen; Lyly's Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 354. 'Although set down hab-nab, at random;' Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 990.  $\beta$ . Hab is from AS. habban; see HAVE. Nab is from AS. nabban, a contracted form of ne habban, not to have.

HOCK (1), the hough; see Hough.

HOCK (2), the name of a wine. (G.) 'What wine is it? Hock;' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Chances, A. v. sc. 3. Shortened from Hockamore (Stanford Dict.), which was an Anglicised form of Hochheimer, i.e. wine of Hochheim, the name of a place in Germany, on the river Main, whence the wine came. It means 'high home;' see High and Home.

HOCKEY, the name of a game. (E.) Also called hawkey; so named because played with a hooked stick; see Hook. ¶ In some places called bandy, the ball being banded backwards and forwards.

HOCUS-POCUS, a juggler's trick, a juggler. (Low L.) Hokos-Pokos is the name of the juggler in Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, Chorus at end of Act i. In Butler's Hudibras, it means a trick; 'As easily as hocus-pocus;' pt. iii. c. 3. l. 716. If the word may be said to belong to any language at all, it is bad Latin, as shown by the termination -us. The reduplicated word was a mere invention, used by jugglers in playing tricks. 'At the playing of every trick, he [a juggler in the times of James I] used to say "hocus pocus, tontus, talontus, vade celeriter, jubeo;"' Ady's Candle in the Dark, Treat. of Witches, &c. p. 29; cited in Todd. See the whole article in Todd. ¶ The 'derivations' sometimes assigned are ridiculous; the word no more needs to be traced than its companions tontus and talontus. Der. hocus, to cheat; see Todd. Hence also hoax, q. v.

HOD, a kind of trough for carrying bricks on the shoulder. (MDu.) 'A lath-hammer, trowel, a hod, or a traie;' Tusser. Five Hundred Points of Husbandry, sect. 16, st. 16 (E. D. S. edition, p. 37, last line). Cotgrave has: 'Oiseau, a bird . . . also, a Hodd, the Tray wherein Masons carry their Mortar.'—MDu. hodde, 'a basket or a maund;' given by Hexham, s. v. Botte. Cf. Swed. dial. hodda, hudda, f., a hut; MDan. hodde, a hut, huddle, a small room; cognate with Alsace hutte, G. hotte, a wooden vessel, a tub, a vintager's dosser (Flügel); [whence F. hotte, 'a scuttle, dosser, basket to carry on the back; the right hotte is wide at the top and narrow at the bottom;' Cot.]  $\beta$ . All (perhaps) from Teut. \**hud-*, weak grade of \**heid-* = Gk. κείν, to hide; the orig. sense being 'cover' or 'case.' See Phil. Soc. Trans., 1902, p. 671. ¶ Note that E. has the Low G. form, but F. the HG. form; whence ME. hotte, in Chaucer, Hous of Fame, 1940; see my note.

HODGE-PODGE, a mixture; see Hotchpot.

HOE, an instrument for cutting up weeds, &c. (F.—G.) 'How, pronounced as [i.e. to rime with] mow and throw; a narrow iron rake without teeth, to cleanse gardens from weeds; rastrum Gallicum [a French rake]; Ray's Collection of South-Country Words, ed. 1691. Written haugh by Evelyn (R.).—F. houe, 'an instrument of husbandry, which hath a crooked handle, or helve of wood, some two foot long, and a broad and in-bending head of iron;' Cot.; Norm. dial. hoe.—OHG. houwa, G. haue, a hoe.—OHG. houwan, to hew; cognate with E. hew. See Hew. Der. hoe, vb.

HOG, the name of an animal, a pig. (E.) ME. hog; Wyclif, Luke, xv. 16; King Alisaunder, 1885. Also hogge, 'maialis, est enim porcus carens testiculis;' Cathol. Anglicum, p. 187. Cf. hog-sheep, one clipped the first year. It occurs as AS. hog in Hogges tūn, Kemble, Cod. Dipl. Moisy, ed. 1895, gives Norm. dial. hogge, a six-months' lamb, a pig; and hogastre, a two-year-old sheep (both prob. from E.). AS. hogg, Cambridge Phil. Soc. Proceedings, lxi-lxiii (1902), p. 13, l. 2.  $\beta$ . Cf. also the prov. E. hog, vb., to cut short a horse's mane, to cut a hedge, to pollard a tree, to hack off (E. D. D.).—Norw. hogga, to cut (Aasen); allied to Icel. höggva (base hagg-), to hew. See Phil. Soc. Trans., 1903, p. 151. Der. hogg-ish, hoggish-ly, hogg-ish-ness; hog-ring-er; hog's-lard.

HOGSHEAD, a measure containing about 52½ gallons; a half-pipe. (E.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 252; L. L. L. iv. 2. 88; &c. Also in Cotgrave, to translate F. tonneau; it seems to have meant a large cask. Minshew, ed. 1627, refers us to 'An. i Rich. III, cap. 13.' Cf. 'ij pipes, v hogges-hedes,' in The Earl of Derby's Expeditions (Camden Soc.), p. 156 (A.D. 1392). Certainly derived from ME. hogges hed, 'hog's head;' a fanciful name, of which the origin is not known; but it seems as sensible as pipe in 'pipe of wine.' Hence were borrowed MDan. hogshoved, a hog's head, modified into Dan. oxehoved, as if it meant 'ox-head;' Low G. hukeshovet, a hogshead (Lübben); also Swed. oxhufvud, a hogshead, lit. 'ox-head;' G. oxhofs, a hogshead; Du. oxhoof. Cf. also prov. E. hogget, a hogshead, a large cask.

HOLDEN, HOYDEN, a romping girl. (MDu.) See hoyden in Trench, Select Glossary; in old authors, it is usually applied to the male sex, and means a clown, a lout, a rustic. 'Badault, a fool, dolt, sot, . . . gaping hoydon;' Cot. 'Falourdin, a luske, lowt, . . . lumpish hoydon;' id. 'Hills. You mean to make a hoiden or a hare Of me, to hunt counter thou, and make these doubles;' Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. ii. sc. 1.—MDu. heyden (mod. Du. heiden), a heathen, gentile; also a gipsy, vagabond; Sewel.—MDu. heyde, a heath. See Heathen, Heath. ¶ This derivation, proposed by Skinner, is probable enough! The W. hoeden, having only the modern E. meaning of 'coquette,' must have been borrowed from English, and is not the original, as some have supposed.

HOIST, to heave, raise with tackle. (MDu.) The t is excrescent, and due to confusion with the pp. The verb is properly hoise, with pp. hoist = hoised. 'Hoised up the main-sail;' Acts, xxvii. 40. Shak. has both hoise and hoist, and (in the pp.) both hoist and hoisted; Rich. III, iv. 4. 529; Temp. i. 2. 148; Hamlet, iii. 4. 207; Antony, iii. 10. 15, iv. 12. 34, v. 2. 55. 'We hoise up mast and sayle;' Sackville's Induction, st. 71 (A.D. 1563). 'I hyse up the sayle;' Palsgrave. 'Made the saylles to be hyssed uppe;' Caxton, Eneydos, ch. 31, p. 116. 'With anker hoist;' Lydgate, Troy-book, bk. iii. c. 13; fol. I. i (1555).—MDu. hyssen, to hoise (Sewel); mod. Du. hijshen. [The MDu. y (mod. ij) being sounded like English long i, the vowel-change is slight.] + Low G. hisen, hiessen, to hoist; whence Dan. høise, hisse, to hoist; Swed. hissa, to hoist; hissa upp, to hoist up. Cf. F. hisser, to hoist a sail, borrowed from the Du. or Low G.; quite distinct from F. hausser, to exalt, which is from L. altus; high (F. haut).

HOLD (1), to keep, retain, defend, restrain. (E.) ME. holden, Chaucer, C. T. 12116 (C 182). AS. haldan, haldan, Grein, ii. 50. + Du. houden; Icel. halda; Swed. hålla; Dan. holde; Goth. haldan; G. halten. Teut. type **haldan-*; pt. t. **he-hald*. Der. hold, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 10481 (F 167); hold-fast, hold-ing; be-hold, up-hold.

HOLD (2), the 'hold' of a ship. (Du.) 'A hulk better stuffed in the hold;' 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 70. Not named, as might be supposed, from what it holds; but a nautical term, borrowed (like most other such) from the Dutch. The d is really excrescent, and due to a natural confusion with the E. verb. The right sense is 'hole.'—Du. hol, a hole, cave, den, cavity; Sewel gives also 'het hol van een schip, the ship's hold or hull.' Cognate with E. Hole, q. v.

HOLE, a cavity, hollow place. (E.) ME. hole, hol; Chaucer, C. T. 3440, 3442; Havelok, 1813. AS. hol, a cave; Grein, ii. 92. + Du. hol; Icel. hol; Dan. hul; Swed. hål. Cf. also Goth. hulundi, a hollow, cave; us-hulōn, to hollow out, Matt. xxvii. 60.  $\beta$ . Teut. type \**hulom*, n.; orig. neut. of \**huloz*, adj. hollow, as in AS. hol, Du. hol, Icel. holr, Dan. hul, G. hohl. Prob. from \**hul-*, weak grade of Teut. \**helan-*, to cover; see Hell. ¶ Not allied to Gk. κοῖλος, hollow.

HOLIBUT, a fish. (E.) See Halibut.

HOLIDAY, a holy day, festival, day of amusement. (E.) For holy day. Spelt holy day; Chaucer, C. T. 3309; haliday, P. Plowman, B. v. 409. See Holy and Day.

HOLINESS, a being holy. (E.) See Holy.

HOLLA, HALLO, stop, wait! (F.) Not the same word as halloo, q. v., but somewhat differently used in old authors. The true sense is stop! wait! and it was at first used as an interjection simply, though easily confused with halloo, and thus acquiring the sense of to shout. 'Holla, stand there!' Othello, i. 2. 56. 'Cry holla [stop!] to thy tongue;' As You Like It, iii. 2. 257.—F. holà, 'an interjection, hoe there, enough; . . . also, hear you me, or come hither;' Cot.—F. ho, interjection; and là, there.  $\beta$ . The F. là is an abbreviation from L. illāc, that way, there, allied to illie, pron. he yonder. Der. holla, hollo, verb; K. Lear, iii. 1. 55; Twelfth Night, i. 5. 291. ¶ The form hallo is due to confusion with halloo.

HOLLAND, Dutch linen. (Du.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 82. 'A shert of feyn Holond;' Cov. Myst. p. 241. From the name of the country; Du. Holland. Orig. form Holt-land, i.e. wood-land; see Holt. (N. E. D.) Der. from the same source, hollands, i.e. gin made in Holland.

HOLLOW, vacant, concave; as sb., a hole, cavity. (E.) ME. holwe, Chaucer, C. T. 291, 1365 (A 291, 1363). Regularly formed from AS. holze, dat. form of holh, only as a sb., signifying a hollow place, vacant space; also spelt holg; see Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 365; Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 218, ll. 1, 3, 4, 9; p. 241, l. 7. Cf. OHG. huliwa, a pool, puddle. An extended form from AS. hol, a hole; see Hole. Der. hollow, verb; 'hollow your body more, sir, thus;' Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ed. Wheatley, i. 5. 136; hollow-ly, Temp. iii. 1. 70; hollow-ness, ME. holownesse, Chaucer, Troil. v. 1809; hollow-eyed, Com. Errors, v. 240; hollow-hearted, Rich. III, iv. 4. 435.

HOLLY, the name of a prickly shrub. (E.) The word has lost a final n. ME. holin, holyn. The F. houx [holly] is glossed by holyn in Wright's Vocab. i. 163, l. 17; the spellings holin, holie both occur in the Ancræn Riwle, p. 418, note l. AS. holen, holegn; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 332. + W. celyn; Corn. celin; Bret. kelen, holly; Gael. cuilionn; Irish cuileann, holly. Idg. type **kolenno-*; Stokes-Fick, p. 91. β. The base of the AS. word is also preserved in Du. hulst, Low G. hulse, holly; and from the older form (hulis, huls) of the G. word the F. houx is derived. Der. holm-oak, q. v.

HOLLYHOCK, a kind of mallow. (E.) It should be spelt with one l, like holiday. ME. holihoc, to translate L. althea and OF. ymalue, in a list of plants; Wright's Vocab. i. 140, col. 1, l. 6 (Voc. 556. 24). [Here the OF. ymalue = mod. F. guimauve, the marsh mallow (Cot.).] Also spelt holihocce, holihoke; see Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 332, col. 1, bottom. Compounded from ME. holi, holly; and hocce, hoke, hoc, a mallow, from AS. hoc, a mallow; id. Minshew, ed. 1627, gives 'Holie hocke, i.e. malua sacra.' β. The mallow was also called in AS. hoclēaf. Cf. W. hocys, mallows; hocys bendigaid, hollyhock, lit. 'blessed mallow' (where bendigaid is equivalent to L. benedictus); but this W. form is merely borrowed from the AS. nom. pl. hoccas. γ. 'Of hagiological origin; another name was caulis Sancti Cuthberti;' N. E. D.

HOLM, an islet in a river; flat land near a river. (Scand.) 'Holm, a river-island;' Coles, ed. 1684. 'Holm, in old records, an hill, island, or fenny ground, encompassed with little brooks;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The true sense is 'a mound,' or any slightly rising ground; and, as such ground often has water round it, it came to mean an island. Again, as a rising slope is often situated beside a river, it came to mean a bank, wharf, or dockyard, as in German. The most curious use is in AS., where the main sea itself is often called holm, from its convex shape; the later senses are Scandinavian. ME. holm. 'Holm, place besydne a water, Hulmus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 243; see Way's note, which is full of information about the word. [The Low L. hulmus is nothing but the Teutonic word Latinised.] - Icel. hōlmr, hōlmi, holmr, an islet; 'even meadows on the shore with ditches behind them are in Icelandic called holms;' Dan. holm, a holm, quay, dockyard; Swed. holme, a small island; whence G. holm, a hill, island, dockyard, wharf (Flügel). + L. culmen, a mountain-top; cf. L. collis, a hill. See Culminate and Hill.

HOLM-OAK, the evergreen oak. (E.) Cotgrave translates MF. yeuse by 'the holme oake, barren scarlet oak, French oak.' The tree is the Quercus Ilex, or common evergreen oak, 'a most variable plant, . . . with leaves varying from being as prickly as a holly to being as even at the edge as an olive;' Eng. Cyclop. s. v. Quercus. Whether because it is an evergreen, or because its leaves are sometimes prickly, we at any rate know that it is so called from its resemblance to the holly. β. The ME. name for holly was holin, sometimes phonetically varied to holm or holy. 'Holme, or holy;' Prompt. Parv. p. 244; and see Way's note. 'Hollie, or Holmitree;' Minshew. The form holm is in Chaucer, C. T. 2923 (A 2921). Thus holm-oak = holly-oak. See Holly.

HOLocaust, an entire burnt sacrifice. (L.-Gk.) So called because the victim offered was burnt entire. It occurs early, in the Story of Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1319, 1326, where it is plainly taken from the Vulgate version of Gen. xxii. 8. - L. holocaustum; Gen. xxii. 8. - Gk. δόλκαυστον, neut. of δόλκαυτος, δόλκαυτος, burnt whole. - Gk. όλο-, for όλος, whole, entire; and καίειν (fut. καύσ-ω), to burn. β. The Gk. όλος is cognate with Skt. sarva(s), all. Brugmann, i. § 319. For καίειν see Caustic.

HOLOTHURIAN, belonging to the genus of sea-slugs; as sb., a sea-slug, sea-cucumber, trepang. (L.-Gk.) Modern. - Modern L. holothūria, neut. pl. of Gk. όλοθούριον, a kind of zoophyte (Aristotle).

HOLSTER, a leathern case for a pistol. (Dn.-G.) Merely 'a case;' though now restricted to a peculiar use. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. i. l. 391. - Du. holster, a pistol-case, holster; also, a soldier's knapsack (Sewel). β. The word is not orig. E., though we find hulstred = covered, Rom. of the Rose, 6146; and AS. heolstor, a hiding-place, cave, covering, Grein, ii. 67; as well as Icel. hulstr, a case, sheath; Goth. hulistr, a veil, 2 Cor. iii. 13. γ. But any real connexion with these words is very doubtful; as the Du. word appears to have been borrowed (with change of ft to st) from G. holfter, hulfter, a holster; MHG. hulfter, a quiver; from OHG. hulft, a cover, case (Franck, Kluge). Hexham has MDu. hulfte, 'a galloch to weare with shoes or booties.'

HOLT, a wood, woody hill. (E.) 'Holt, a small wood, or grove;' Kersey, ed. 1715. ME. holt, Chaucer, C. T. 6. 'Hoc virgultum, a holt;' Wright's Vocab. i. 270, col. 1 (Voc. 796. 29). AS. holt, a wood, grove; Grein, ii. 95. + Du. hout (MDu. holt), wood, timber; Icel. holt, a copse; G. holz, a wood, grove; also wood, timber. Teut. stem **hulto-*, Idg. stem **kaldo-*. Allied to OIrish caill, coill (for **cald-*), a wood; W. celli, a grove; Russ. kolóda, a log; Gk. κλάδος, a twig. Stokes-Fick, p. 82.

T. 178; AS. hālig; Grein, ii. 7. + Du. heilig; Icel. heilagr, often contracted to helgr; Dan. hellig; Swed. helig; G. heilig; Goth. heilag, neut., in an inscription. Teut. type **hailagoz*, a derivative of Teut. **hailoz*, whole (AS. hāl) or of **hailoz* or **hailiz*, sb., a good omen. Cf. Irish cél, W. coel, an omen; Stokes-Fick, p. 88. See Whole. Der. holi-ly; holi-ness, AS. hālignes; holi-day, q. v.; holly-hock (for holy hock), q. v.; hali-but (= holy but), q. v.

AS. hām, home, a dwelling; Grein, ii. 9. The acc. case is used adverbially, as in hām cuman, to come home; cf. L. ire domum. + Du. heem, a farm; heim, in the comp. heimelijc, private, secret; Icel. heimr, an abode, village, heima, home; Dan. hjem, home; also used adverbially, as in E.; Swed. hem, home; and used as adv.; G. heim; Goth. haims, a village. + Lithuanian kēmas, OPruss. caymis, a village (Fick, iii. 75). Teut. types **haimoz*, **haimiz*. Some compare Skt. kshēma(s), safety, safe abode, from kshi, to dwell; but this is to be rejected. Cf. Brugmann, i. § 920. Der. home-bred, Rich. HOMOEOPATHY, a particular treatment of disease. (Gk.) The system is an attempt to cure a disease by the use of small doses of drugs such as would produce the symptoms of the disease in a sound person. Hence the name, signifying 'similar feeling.' Proposed (ab. 1796) by Dr. Hahnemann, of Leipsic (died 1843). The old name for the bird was houpe or hoope, as in Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627; spelt houpe in 1580 (N. E. D.). Also called hoopoep in 1668 (N. E. D.), in imitation of the L. name. Cf. also OF. pupu, a hoopoe; Low G. huppupp (Danneil). All from L. upupa, a hoopoe; the initial h in the mod. E. form being borrowed from the h in the F. form. γ. Called ἑπὶ ψ in Greek; both L. up-up-a and Gk. ἑπ-ψ are words of onomatopoeic origin, due to an imitation of the bird's cry. ¶ The bird has a remarkable tuft on its head; hence F. huppe, a tuft of feathers. But the tuft is named from the bird; not vice versa.

HOOT, to shout in derision. (Scand.) ME. houten, whence the pp. yhouted, yhowted = hooted at; P. Plowman, B. ii. 218; also huten, Ormulum, 2034. Of Scand. origin; the original being preserved in MSwed. huta, in the phrase huta ut en, lit. to hoot one out, to cast out with contempt, as one would a dog (Ihre); Swed. huta ut, to take one up sharply; Norw. huta, to shout, hut (with ū), a cry to a dog (Aasen). Hence also Norm. dial. houter, as a variant of houper, to whoop. β. Formed from the Swed. interj. hut, begone! a word of imitative origin; cf. Norw. hūt (above), W. hwt, off! away! Irish ut, out! psha! Gael. ut! ut! interjection of dislike. So also MHG. hiuzen, hūzen, to call to the pursuit, from the interjection hiu (mod. G. hui), hallo! So also Dan. huje, to shout, hoot, halloo, from hui, hallo! OF. huer, to shout. The regular modern form would be hout, but the expressive ū has been preserved. Der. hoot, sb.; cf. hue, in the phrase hue and cry; see Hue (2).

HOP (1), to leap on one leg. (E.) Formerly used of dancing on both legs. ME. hoppen, huppen. 'At every bridal wolde he singe and hoppe,' i. e. dance; Chaucer, C. T. 4373 (A 4375). 'To huppe abowte' = to dance about, P. Plowman, C. xviii. 279. AS. hoppian, to leap, dance; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 202, l. 18. + Du. hoppen, to hop; Icel. hoppa, to hop, skip; Swed. hoppa, to leap, jump, hop; Dan. hoppe (the same); cf. G. hüpfen (the same). Teut. type **huppōjan*-, from Idg. base **qup-n-*; allied to Russ. kipele, to boil. Brugmann, i. § 421 (7). Der. hop, sb. (we still sometimes use hop in the old sense of 'a dance'); hopp-er (of a mill), ME. hoper or hopper, Chaucer, C. T. 4034 (A 4036); hop-scotch, a game in which children hop over lines scotched or traced on the ground (see Scotch); hopp-le, a fetter for horses, causing them to hop or progress slowly, a frequentative form. Also hobb-le (= hopp-le); see Hobble. Also grass-hopper, q.v.

HOP (2), the name of a plant. (Du.) In Cotgrave, to translate MF. houblon (= F. houblon). Also in Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Hoppe, humulus, lupulus;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'Hoppes in biere' [beer]; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 21. The pl. hoppis occurs as early as 1502, in Arnold's Chron.; ed. 1811, pp. 236, 246; and hops are frequently mentioned in the Northumberland Household-book, 1512. 'Hoppe, sede for beyre (v. r. bere), Hummulus, secundum extraneos; (i.e. it is a foreign word); Prompt. Parv. (1440). — MDu. hoppe (Franck), Du. hop, the hop-plant. + G. hopfen, the hop. β. We also find AS. hymele, Icel. humall, Swed., Dan. humle, MDu. hommel, the hop (Kilian); whence the Late L. humulus, now used as the botanical name. [The F. houblon is of Walloon origin, and ultimately from the Dutch.] But these can hardly be related words. ¶ An old note of the word occurs in an Old Westphalian gloss.: 'volubilis major, hoppe;' Mone, Quellen, p. 292. Cf. O. Low G. hoppo, hupo, the hop (Gallée). Dr. E. Scott writes:—'One of the Westminster Abbey documents, temp. Henry I or late 11th century, begins—"Hec est firma . . . ad panem vj. cumbas . . . xx hopis de brasio."'

Der. hop-vine, hop-bind (corruptly hop-bine).

HOPE (1), expectation; as a verb, to expect. (E.) The verb is weak, and seems to be derived from the sb. ME. hope, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 88. ME. hopen, verb, sometimes in the sense 'to expect'; as, 'Our manciple, I hope he wil be deed'=I fear he will be dead; Chaucer, C. T. 4027 (A 4029). See P. Plowman, C. xviii. 313, and the note. AS. hopa, sb., in Ælfric's Hom. i. 350, l. 24; i. 568, l. 8; also used in the comp. iðhopa, hope, Grein, ii. 545; hopian, v. to hope, Grein, ii. 96. + Du. hoop, sb., hopen, v.; Dan. haab, sb., haabe, v.; Swed. hopp, sb., whence the reflexive verb hoppas, to hope; MHG. hoffe, sb., represented by mod. G. hoffnung; G. hoffen, to hope. Der. hope-ful, hope-ful-ly, hope-ful-ness; hope-less, -ly, -ness.

HOPE (2), a troop. (Du.) Only in the phr. forlorn hope, North's Plutarch, ed. 1631, p. 372. The phr. also occurs in An Eng. Garner, vii. 128, where Sir F. Vere describes the battle of Nieuwport (S.W. of Ostend) in the year 1600; here it is at once connected with Du. verloren hoop; see Forlorn. Here hoop=band, troop, as in 'een hoop krijghs-volck, a troupe or a band of souldiers'; Hexham. Cf. verloren hoop (Kilian). It is now obsolete in Dutch. The usual sense of Du. hoop is heap; see Heap.

HOPLITE, a heavy-armed foot-soldier. (Gk.) Modern. From Gk. ὁπλίτης, a hoplite. — Gk. ὅπλον, a weapon, piece of armour; with suffix -ιτης (E. -ite); allied to ὀπλομαι, I prepare for myself, and to ἐπιω, I am busy with (Prellwitz).

HOPPLE, to fetter a horse, &c. (E.) 'To hopple an horse, to tye his feet with a rope'; Kersey (1721); and in Coles (1684). Lit. to make to hopple, or hobble; see E. D. D. Cf. MDu. hoppelen, to hobble; see Hobble, and Hop.

HORDE, a wandering troop or tribe. (F.—Turk.—Tatar.) Spelt hoord in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 61; and in Hakluyt, Voy. i. 491. — F. horde, first in use in the 16th century (Littre). — Turk. urdū, a camp (Zenker, p. 117); cf. Pers. ōrdū, 'a court, camp, horde of Tartars'; also urdū, a camp, an army; Rich. Pers. Dict., pp. 56, 201. — Tatar ūrdū, a royal camp, horde of Tartars (Tartars); see Pavet de la Courteille, p. 54. First applied to the Tatar tribes.

HORDOCK; see Hardock.

HOREHOUND, a plant; see Hoarhound.

HORIZON, the circle bounding the view where earth and sky seem to meet. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 81. [But we also find ME. orizonte, Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, prol. l. 7. This is (through the OF.) from the L. acc. horizontem.] — F. horizon, 'a horizon'; Cot. — L. horizōn (stem horizont-). — Gk. ὁρίζων, the bounding or limiting circle; orig. the pres. pt. of the vb. ὁρίζειν, to bound, limit. — Gk. ὄρος, a boundary, limit; perhaps allied to Gk. ἐρκος, an enclosure (Prellwitz). Der. horizont-al, horizont-al-ly.

HORN, the hard substance projecting from the heads of some animals. (E.) ME. horn, Chaucer, C. T. 116. AS. horn, Grein, ii. 98. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. horn; Du. horen [for horn, the e being due to the trilling of the r]; G. horn; Goth. haurn. Teut. type **hornom*, n. + W., Gael., and Irish corn; L. cornu. β. The Celtic forms are from the Idg. base **kor-no-*; Stokes-Fick, p. 79. Further allied to Gk. κέρας, a horn; and to Hart. Der. horn-beam, a tree; horn-bill, a bird; horn-blende, a mineral term, wholly borrowed from G. horn-blende, where -blende, i.e. a 'deceitful' mineral, yielding little ore, is from blenden, to dazzle, lit. to make blind; horn-book, L. L. L. v. 1. 49; horn-ed, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 243, spelt hornyd in Prompt. Parv. p. 247; horn-owl or horn-ed owl; horn-pipe, Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 47, a dance so called because danced to an instrument with that name, mentioned in the Rom. of the Rose, 4250; horn-stone; horn-work, a term in fortification, named from its projections; horn-less; horn-y, Milton, P. R. ii. 267; also horn-et, q. v. From the same source are corn (2), corn-er, corn-et, &c.

HORNET, a kind of large wasp. (E.) So called from its resounding hum. In Holland's Pliny, b. xi. c. 21. AS. hyrnet, hyrnetu; the pl. hyrnytta occurs in Exod. xxiii. 28. 'Crabro, hyrnet'; Ælfric's Gloss., De Nominibus Insectorum. Formed, with suffix -et, from horn, a horn, by regular vowel-change; cf. hyrned=horned, Grein, ii. 133. The vowel has, however, reverted in mod. E. to the original o, for clearness. See Horn. + EFries. hōrnetje; Westphal. hōrntje; Low G. horneke (Schambach). Cf. OSax. horno-bero, a hornet, lit. a 'horn-bearer'; AS. horn-bera, a trumpeter. Hexham has MDu. horener, hornte, a hornet, horentoren, a wasp; from horen, a horn. ¶ It is curious that G. hornisse, OHG. hornaz (without vowel-change) is referred to a Teut. type **hurznatoz* (cf. Du. horz-elen, to buzz), allied to L. crābro (for **cras-ro*), a hornet, Lith. szirszū (gen. szirsz-ens), a hornet; lit. 'a buzzer'; see Brugmann, i. § 626.

HOROLOGE, an instrument for telling the hours, a clock. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 135. Nearly obsolete. ME. orloge, Chaucer, C. T. 14860 (B 4044). — OF. horologe, horloge; 'Horloge, a clock or dyall'; Cot. — L. hōrologium, a sun-dial, a water-clock. — Gk. ὥρολόγιον, the same. — Gk. ᾠρο-, for ᾠρα, a season, period, hour; and -λογιον, formed from λέγειν, to tell. See Hour and Logic. Der. horolog-y, horolog-i-cal.

HOROSCOPE, an observation of the sky at a person's nativity. (F.—L.—Gk.) A term in astrology. In Cotgrave. [Chaucer uses the L. term horoscopum; Treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pt. ii. § 4.] — F. horoscope, 'the horoscope, or ascendant at a nativity'; Cot. — L. hōroscopus, a horoscope; from hōroscopus, adj., that shows the hour. — Gk. ᾠροσκόπος, a horoscope; from the adj. ᾠροσκόπος, observing the hour. — Gk. ᾠρο-, for ᾠρα, season, hour; and σκοπεῖν, to consider, related to σκέπτομαι, I consider. See Hour and Sceptic. Der. horoscop-y, horoscop-i-c, horoscop-ist.

HORRIBLE, dreadful, fearful. (F.—L.) ME. horrible, also written orrible, Chaucer, C. T. 4893 (B 473). — OF. horrible, 'horrible, terrible'; Cot. — L. horribilis, terrible, lit. to be trembled at; formed with suffix -bilis from horrere, to tremble, shake. See Horror. Der. horribly, Chaucer, C. T. 14535 (B 3807); horrible-ness.

HORRID, dreadful. (L.) Directly from Latin. Spenser uses it in the L. sense of 'rough'. 'His haughty helmet, horrid all with gold'; F. Q. i. 7. 31. — L. horridus, rough, bristly, &c. — L. horrere, to be rough. See Horror. Der. horrid-ly, horrid-ness.

HORRIFY, to make afraid, scare. (L.) A late word; not in Johnson. Coined, by analogy with words in -fy (mostly of F. origin), from L. horrificare, to cause terror. — L. horrificus, causing terror. — L. horri-, from horrere, to dread; and -fic-, for facere, to make. Der. From L. horrificus has also been coined the adj. horrific, Thomson's Seasons, Autumn, 782. See Horror.

HORROR, dread, terror. (F.—L.) Formerly also spelt horroure (Minsheu), because at first taken from the French. Sir T. Elyot has horroure; Castel of Helth, bk. iii. ch. 1; and so in Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale (I 224). We find 'sad horror' in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 23; and horrors in Hamlet, ii. 1. 84, in the first folio edition. — OF. horroure; later horreur, 'horror'; Cot. — L. horrōrem, acc. of horror, terror, dread. — L. horrere, to bristle, be rough; also, to dread, with reference to the bristling of the hair through terror. Cf. Skt. hrsh, to bristle, said of the hair, esp. as a token of fear or of pleasure. Thus horrere is for **hōrsere* (cf. L. hirsutus, rough, shaggy); from ✓ GHERS, to be rough. Der. From L. horrere we have horrent (from the stem of the pres. part.); also horri-ble, q. v., horri-d, q. v.; horri-fy, q. v.; and horri-fic. Cf. hirsute, urchin.

HORSE, the name of a well-known quadruped. (E.) The final e merely marks that the s is hard, and is not to be pronounced as z. ME. hors; pl. hors (unchanged), also hors-es, as now. Chaucer, C. T. 74, 10504 (A 74, F 190). 'Thei sellen bothe here hors and here harneys'=they sell both their horses and their harness; Mandeville's Travels, p. 38. AS. hors, neut.; pl. hors, Grein, ii. 98. + Icel. hross; also hors; Du. ros; G. ross, MHG. ros, ors, OHG. hros. β. Teut. type **horsom*, n.; Idg. stem **curs-o-*; prob. allied to curs-us, pp. of L. currere, to run, whence also E. coursier with the sense of 'horse.' See Coursier. γ. This supposition is made more probable by the fact that the same base will account for AS. horsc, swift, Grein, ii. 98; cf. MHG. rosch, swift. Brugmann, i. § 516; ii. § 662. Der. horse, verb, Wint. Ta. i. 2. 288; horse-back, ME. hors-bak, Gower, C. A. iii. 256; bk. vii. l. 4908; horse-block, horse-breaker, horse-fly, horse-guards; horse-hair, Cymb. ii. 3. 33; horse-leech, Hen. V, ii. 3. 57; horse-man, Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 67; horse-man-ship, Hen. V, iii. 7. 58; horse-power, horse-race, horse-racing; horse-shoe, Merry Wives, iii. 5. 123; horse-tail, horse-trainer, horse-whip, sb. and vb. Also numerous other compounds, as horse-bread, horse-flesh, horse-pond, all readily understood. Also horse-chestnut, said to be so called because the nuts were ground and given to horses; the word also occurs in several plant-names, as horse-foot, horse-knop, horse-radish, horse-tail, horse-thistle, horse-tongue, horse-velch. Also wal-rus.

HORSE-COURSER, HORSE-SCORSER, a jobbing dealer in horses. (Hybrid; E. and F.—L.) The latter form is corrupt; see examples in Nares, s. v. Horse-coursier, Scorse. And coursier is for cosser, coser; 'Hic mango, a cosyr'; Voc. 684. 40. And cf. Gloss. to Elyot's Governour, ed. Croft, s. v. Skocer. From AF. cossour (1310), a broker, in Riley, Mem. of London, p. xxii. — Late L. cōciātōrem, acc. of cōciātor, a broker (Duc.). Cf. L. cōcio, a broker. See my Notes on E. Etym., p. 136.

HORTATORY, full of encouragement. (L.) 'He animated his soldiers with many hortatorie orations;' Holland, Ammianus, p. 202 (R.). Formed as if from L. **hortātorius*, a coined word from hortātor, an encourager. — L. hortā-, as in hortārī, to encourage; prob. connected with horiri (pres. tense horior), to urge, incite. Perhaps allied to E. yearn (Prellwitz, s. v. χαίρω). Der. So also hortative (Minsheu), a better form, from L. hortātiuus, encouraging; also ex-hort, q. v.

HORTICULTURE, the art of cultivating gardens, gardening. (L.) First in Phillips, ed. 1678. From L. horti, gen. of hortus, a garden; and culture, Englished form of L. cultūra, cultivation. See Culture. L. hortus is allied to E. yard; see Yard (1). Der. horticultur-al, horticultur-ist.

HOSANNA, an expression of praise. (Gk.—Heb.) In Matt. xxi. 9, 15; &c. It is rather a form of prayer, as it signifies 'save, we pray.' — Gk. ᾠσαννά, Matt. xxi. 9. — Heb. hōshī'āh nā, save, we pray; Ps. cxviii. 25. — Heb. hōshīa', save, from yāsha', to save; and nā, a particle signifying entreaty.

HOSE, a covering for the legs and feet; stockings. (E.) ME. hose, pl. hosen; Chaucer, C. T. 458 (A 456); Ancren Riwle, p. 420. AS. hosa, pl. hosan; 'Caliga vel ocrea, hosa;' Wright's Vocab. i. 81, col. 2 (Voc. 327. 29). + Du. hoos, hose, stocking, spout, water-spout; Icel. hosa, the hose covering the leg between the knee and ankle, a kind of gaiter; Dan. hose, pl. hoser, hose, stockings; G. hose, breeches (whence OF. hose). Perhaps cf. Skt. kōsha-s, a sheath. Der. hos-i-er, where the inserted i answers to the y in law-y-er, bow-y-er; hos-i-er-y.

HOSPICE, a house for the reception of travellers as guests. (F.—L.) Modern; chiefly used of such houses in the Alps. — F. hospice, a hospice. — L. hospitium, a hospice. — L. hospiti-, decl. stem of hospes, a guest; also, a host. See Host (1), Hospital.

HOSPITABLE, showing kindness to strangers. (F.—L.) In K. John, ii. 244; Cor. i. 10. 26. — F. hospitable, 'hospitable;' Cot. Coined, with suffix -able, from Late L. hospitāre, to receive as a guest; Ducange. — L. hospit-, stem of hospes, a guest, host. See Host (1). Der. hospitabl-y, hospitable-ness.

HOSPITAL, a building for receiving guests; hence, one for receiving sick people. (F.—L.) ME. hospital, hospitale; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 81; hospital, Eng. Gilds, ed. T. Smith, p. 350, l. 25. — OF. hospital, 'an hospitall, a spittle;' Cot. — Late L. hospitale, a large house, palace, which occurs A.D. 1243 (Brachet); a sing. formed from L. pl. hospitālia, apartments for strangers. — L. hospit-, stem of hospes; see Host (1). Der. hospitall-er, ME. hospitalier, Chaucer, C. T. Persones Tale, De Luxuria (I 891); hospital-i-ty, ME. hospitalité, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 96. Doublets, hostel, hotel, spital.

HOST (1), one who entertains guests. (F.—L.) ME. host, hoste, Chaucer, C. T. 749 (A 747). — OF. hoste, 'an hoste, inn-keeper;' Cot. Cf. Port. hospede, a host, a guest. — L. hospitem, acc. of hospes, (1) a host, entertainer of guests, (2) a guest. β. The base hospit- is commonly taken to be short for **hosti-pot-*, where hosti- is the decl. stem of hostis, a stranger, a guest, an enemy; see Host (2). Again, the stem -pot- is supposed to have meant 'lord,' being allied to L. pot-ens, powerful; cf. Skt. pati-, a master, governor, lord; see Possible. γ. Thus hospes = **hostipotis*, guest-master, a master of a house who receives guests. Cf. Russ. gospode, the Lord, gospodare, governor, prince; from gostie, a guest, and -pode = Skt. pati-, a lord. Brugmann, i. § 240. Der. host-ess, from OF. hostesse, 'an hostesse,' Cot.; also host-el, q. v., host-ler, q. v., hotel, q. v.; and from the same source, hospital, q. v., hospice, q. v., hospitable, q. v.

HOST (2), an army. (F.—L.) The orig. sense is 'enemy' or 'foreigner.' ME. host, Chaucer, C. T. 1028 (A 1026); frequently spelt ost, Will. of Palerne, 1127, 1197, 3767; Cursor Mundi, 6160. — OF. host, 'an host, or army, a troop;' Cot. — L. hostem, acc. of hostis, a stranger, an enemy; hence, a hostile army, host. + Russ. goste, a guest, visitor, stranger, alien; AS. gæst; see Guest. Der. host-ile, Cor. iii. 3. 97, from F. hostile, which from L. hostilis; host-ile-ly; host-il-i-ty, K. John, iv. 2. 247, from F. hostilité, which from L. acc. hostilitatem. Doublet, guest.

HOST (3), the consecrated bread of the eucharist. (L.) 'In as many hostes as be consecrate;' Bp. Gardner, Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 35 (R.). And in Holland's Plutarch, p. 1097 (R.). ME. oste, Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, l. 8849. Coined by dropping the final syllables of L. hostia, a victim in a sacrifice; afterwards applied to the host in the eucharist. β. The old form of hostia was fostia (Festus), and it signified 'that which is struck or slain.' — L. hostire (old form fostire), to strike.

HOSTAGE, a person delivered to the enemy as a pledge for the performance of the conditions of a treaty. (F.—L.) In early use.

ME. hostage, Layamon, 4793, 8905 (later text only). — OF. hostage, 'an hostage, pawne, surety,' Cot.; mod. F. otage. Cf. Ital. ostaggio; OProv. ostatge, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Prov. col. 173, l. 18. Perhaps from a Late L. **obsidāticum*, acc. of **obsidāticus*, not found, yet preserved also in Ital. statico, a hostage, and regularly formed from Late L. obsidātus, the condition of a hostage, hostage-ship. Obsidātus is formed (by analogy with principātus from princip-, stem of princeps) from L. obsid-, stem of obses, a hostage, one who remains behind with the enemy. — L. obsidēre, to sit, stay, abide, remain. — L. ob, at, on, about; and sedēre, to sit, cognate with E. sit. See Sit. ¶ Another explanation is from a Late L. form **hospitāticum*, a receiving as a guest; from L. hospit-, for hospes, a host; see Host (1). So Körting. The words may have been confused.

HOSTEL, an inn. (F.—L.) Now commonly hotel, q. v. ME. hostel, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1397; Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 805. — OF. hostel, an inn. Regularly contracted from Late L. hospitāle; see Hospital. Doublets, hotel, hospital, spital. Der. hostel-ry, ME. hostelrie, Chaucer, C. T. 23; hostler, q. v.

HOSTLER, OSTLER, a man who takes care of horses at an inn. (F.—L.) 'Host'ler, the horse-groom, but properly the keeper of an hostelry;' Coles, ed. 1684. Orig. the inn-keeper himself, and so named from his hostel. ME. hostler, Chaucer, C. T. 241. — OF. hostelier, 'an inn-keeper;' Cot. — OF. hostel; see Hostel.

HOT, very warm, fiery, ardent. (E.) The vowel was formerly long. ME. hot, hoot, Chaucer, C. T. 687. 'Nether cold, nether hoot;' Wyclif, Rev. iii. 16. AS. hāt, hot; Grein, ii. 15. + Du. heet; Icel. heitr; Swed. het; Dan. hed; G. heiss, OHG. heiz. Teut. type **haitoz*. The weak grade **hit-* appears in Icel. hiti, heat, G. hitze. Cf. also Goth. hais, a torch, heilō, fever; Lithuan. kaitra, heat. Der. hot-bed; hot-blooded, Merry Wives, v. 5. 2; hot-headed; hot-house, Meas. ii. 1. 66; hot-ly, hot-spur. Also heat, q. v.

HOTCH-POT, HODGE-PODGE, a farrago, confused mass. (F.—Du.) Hodge-podge is a mere corruption; the old term is hotch-pot. The intermediate form hotch-potch is in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 336. 'A hotchpot, or mingle-mangle;' Minsheu. 'An hotchpotte, incision;' Levins. 'A hotchepotte of many meates;' Palsgrave. ME. hochepot, Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus, C. T. B 2447. — F. hochepot, 'a hotch-pot, or gallimaufrey, a confused mingle-mangle of divers things jumbled or put together;' Cot. Cf. F. hocher, 'to shake, wag, jog, nob, nod;' id. — MDu. hutsepot (Hexham); hutspot, 'hodge-podge, beef or mutton cut into small pieces;' Sewel. So called from shaking or jumbling pieces of meat in a pot. — MDu. huts-, base of hutsen, to shake, jolt (Oudemans); and Du. pot, a pot. From hutsen was also formed the frequentative verb hutselen, 'to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket;' Sewel. The verb hutsen was also spelt hotsen (Sewel), which comes still closer to the French; so also EFries. hotjen, hutjen, to shake up. Cf. WFlem. hotteren, to shake up (De Bo). See Hustle and Pot.

HOTEL, an inn, esp. of a large kind. (F.—L.) A modern word; borrowed from mod. F. hôtel = OF. hostel. See Hostel.

HOTTENTOT, a native of the Cape of Good Hope. (Du.) The word is traced in Wedgwood, who shows that the Dutch gave the natives this name in ridicule of their peculiar speech, which sounded to them like stuttering. He cites the word from Schouten (1653). En is Dutch for 'and;' hence hot en tot = 'hot' and 'tot;' where these words indicate stammering. Cf. hateren, to stammer, tateraer, a stammerer, in Hexham's Du. Dict., 1647; tateren to tattle (Sewel); Pomeran. hütentüt, a quack (a derisive name). See also Phil. Soc. Trans. 1866; p. 15.

HOUDAH, HOWDAH, a seat to be fixed upon an elephant's back. (Hind.—Arab.) Used in works of travel; and in The Surgeon's Daughter, c. xiv. by Sir W. Scott. — Hind. haudah (Forbes). — Arab. hawdaj, a litter carried by a camel, in which Arabian ladies travel; a seat to place on an elephant's back; Rich. Dict. p. 1694; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 709. (See Yule.)

HOUGH, HOCK, the joint in the hind-leg of a quadruped, between the knee and fetlock, corresponding to the ankle-joint in man; in man, the back part of the knee-joint. (E.) Now generally spelt hock; but formerly hough. 'Unto the camel's hough;' 2 Esdras, xv. 36 (A.V.). Cotgrave translates F. jarret by 'the hamme, or hough.' ME. houch, Wallace, ed. Jamieson, i. 322. The pl. hoses occurs in Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, l. 1357. AS. hōh, the heel; Grein, ii. 92. + Icel. hā-, in the comp. hāsinn = hock-sinew. Teut. type **hanhoz*. The E. heel is related; see Heel. β. Hock is a later form; and may have arisen in the comp. 'hough-sinew,' spelt hōhsinu in AS., and hōxene, hōxne in OFriesic. (AS. hs > x.) See G. heckse (in Kluge); and see Hox. Allied to L. coxa, the hip; Skt. kaksha-s, the arm-pit. Der. hough, verb, to cut the ham-string of a horse, Josh. xi. 6, 2 Sam. viii. 4; often altered to hox, sometimes spelt hocks; see Shak. Wint. Ta. i. 2. 244; hoxe, Wyclif, Josh. xi. 6 (later version).

HOUND, a dog. (E.) ME. hound, hund; P. Plowman, B. v. 261; Havelok, 1994. AS. hund, Matt. vii. 6; Du. kond; Icel. hundr; Dan. and Swed. hund; G. hund; Goth. hunds. Teut. type **hundoz*, m. Further allied to L. can-is, a dog, Gk. κύων (genitive κυν-ός), Skt. çvan, a dog; also Irish cu, Gael. cu, W. ci, a dog; Russ. suka, a bitch; Lith. szū (stem szun-), a dog. Brugmann, i. § 609. The final d may have been suggested by confusion with Teut. **henthan-*, to catch. See Hunt. Der. hound, verb, in Otway, Caius Marius, Act iv. sc. 2 (R.); hound-fish, Chaucer, C. T. 9699 (E 1825); hound's-tongue.

HOURL, a certain definite space of time. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. houre, Chaucer, C. T. 14733 (B 3613). — AF. houre, Statutes of the Realm, p. 30 (1275); OF. hore (mod. F. heure). — L. hōra. — Gk. ῥῆμα, a season, hour; cf. ῥῆμα, a season, a year. Allied to year. See Year. Der. hour-ly, adj. Temp. iv. 108, adv. Also horo-loge, horo-scope, which see.

HOURI, a nymph of Paradise. (F.—Pers.—Arab.) 'With Paradise within my view And all his houris beckoning through,' Byron, The Giaour; see note 39 to that poem. Also in Dr. Johnson's Irene, iv. 5. 10. — F. houri. — Pers. hūrī, a virgin of Paradise; hūrā, hūr, a virgin of Paradise, a black-eyed nymph; so called from their fine black eyes. — Arab. hūr, pl. of Arab. hawrā, fem. of ahwar, having fine black eyes; Rich. Arab. Dict. pp. 585, 33; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 206. — Arab. root hawira, to be black-eyed like a doe. (Devic.)

HOUSE, a dwelling-place; a family. (E.) ME. hous, Chaucer, C. T. 252. AS. hūs, Matt. xii. 25. + Du. huis; Icel. hūs; Dan. huus; Swed. hus; Goth. -hus, in the comp. gud-hus, a house of God; G. haus, OHG. hūs. Teut. type **hūsom*, n. β. Probably allied to Hoard, and Hide (1). From ✓KEUDH, to hide. Brugm. i. § 796. Der. house, verb, now 'to provide a house for,' as in Gower, C. A. iii. 18 (bk. vi. 498), but the ME. housen also meant 'to build a house,' as in Rob. of Glouc. p. 21, l. 13 (cf. 'howsyn, or puttyn yn a howse, domifero;' 'howsyn, or makyn howsyes, domifico;' Prompt. Parv. p. 251); house-breaker, house-breaking; house-hold, ME. household, Chaucer, C. T. 5681 (D 99), so called because held together in one house; house-holder, ME. housholder, Chaucer, C. T. 341; house-keeper, Cor. i. 3. 55, Macb. iii. 1. 97; house-keeping, L. L. L. ii. 104; house-leek, ME. hous-leke, Prompt. Parv. p. 251; house-less, K. Lear, iii. 4. 26; house-maid, house-steward, house-warming, house-wife, spelt husewif, Ancrén Riwle, p. 416, also hosewif or huswif, Wyclif, 3 Kings, xvii. 17, and frequently huswife, as in Shak. Cor. i. 3. 76, Romeo, iv. 2. 43; house-wife-ry, or hus-wife-ry, Oth. ii. 1. 113, with which cf. 'huswyfery, yconomia;' Prompt. Parv. See also Husband, Hussy, Hustings, Hoard.

HOUSEL, the eucharist or sacrament of the Lord's Supper. (E.) The orig. sense is 'sacrifice.' ME. housel, Rom. of the Rose, 6386; P. Plowman, C. xxii. 394. AS. hūsel (for **hunsel*), the eucharist; Grein, ii. 112. + Goth. hunsl, a sacrifice, Matt. ix. 13. The orig. sense was prob. 'holy rite.' Allied to Lith. szwentas, holy, consecrated; Zend spēnta-, holy. Brugmann, i. § 377. Der. houcel, verb, ME. hoselen, houselen, P. Plowman, C. xxii. 3; unhoucel'd, Hamlet, i. 5. 77.

HOUSINGS, trappings of a horse. (F.—Arab.) Unconnected with house, but probably often supposed to be related to it; the old form was houss, the addition -ings being English. 'The cattle used for draught . . . are covered with housings of linnen;' Evelyn, Diary, end of May, 1645. 'A velvet bed of state drawn by six horses, houss'd with the same,' Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 22, 1658. 'Spread on his back, the houss and trappings of a beast;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. b. xii. 582. 'Housse, the cloth which the king's horseguards wear behind the saddle;' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. 'A house of a horse;' Cath. Angl. (1483). — OF. houce (Godefroy); F. houss, 'a short mantle of course cloth (and all of a peece) worn in ill weather by country women about their head and shoulders; also a footcloth for a horse; also a coverlet;' Cot. Cf. Low L. hūcia, a long tunic; houcia, a long tunic, coverlet for a horse, also spelt hūcia, hussia. Ducange dates hūcia in A.D. 1326, and hūcia in A.D. 1259, so that the word is of some antiquity. The sense is clearly 'covering.' β. Perhaps from OHG. hulst, a cover (Schade). + Icel. hulstr, AS. heolstor, Goth. hulistr, a cover. From **hul-*, weak grade of Teut. **helan-*, to cover, hide; cf. AS. helan, to hide, OHG. and Du. hullen, to cover. γ. But Devic suggests as the origin Arab. ḡushiah, a covering, veil (Mém. de la soc. de ling. de Paris; V. 37). Körting, § 4666. Cf. Arab. ghushwa(t), a veil, covering; Rich. Dict. p. 1052. ¶ The W. hus, a covering, is borrowed from E. houss.

HOVEL, a small hut. (F.—Teut.) ME. hovel, hovil. 'Hoville, lytlylle howse, Teges;' Prompt. Parv. p. 250. 'Hovyl for swyne, or oþer beestys;' ibid. Perhaps from an AF. **huvel*; cf. OF. huvelet, a penthouse (Godefroy), a double diminutive. Apparently (like OF. huvet, a cap, helmet, from OF. huve, a cap, covering for the head) from AS. hūfe, a hood; cf. OHG. hūba (G. haube), a hood; MDu. huyve, a tilt of a cart, a coif (Hexham); Norw. huva, Icel. hūfa, a hood. Note prov. E. hovel, huvel, a finger-stall; from AS. hūfe. See Hive.

HOVER, to fluctuate, hang about, move to and fro. (E.) In Macb. i. 1. 12. 'Hover, to stay, wait for. "Will you hover till I come?"' E. D. S. Gloss. B. 22, p. 96. A frequentative, with suffix -er, of ME. houen (= hoven), sometimes used in precisely the same sense, and once a common word. 'O night! alas! why wiltow [wilt thou not] over us hove;' Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1427; also in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 83 (see the note); 'Where that she hoved and abode;' Gower, C. A. iii. 63; bk. vi. 1848; 'He hovede and abode;' Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 2825; 'He houede' = he waited, Rob. of Glouc. p. 172, l. 12. In the earliest examples, it had the sense of 'hover,' or 'be poised.' In the Bestiary, l. 69, it is said of the eagle that 'he houed in ðe sunne,' he soars or is poised in the sunlight. The o in ME. hōven was long (N. E. D.). The origin is unknown; but if the orig. idea was that of soaring or being lifted up, it may be related to hōf, the strong grade of AS. hebban, to heave. See Heave. ¶ The W. hofio, to hover, to fluctuate, to suspend, was borrowed from English.

HOW (1), in what way. (E.) ME. how, hou, hu; spelt hu, Ancrén Riwle, p. 182, l. 20; also hwu, id., p. 256, l. 10; also whow, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 141. AS. hū; Grein, ii. 110. + OFries. hū, hō, how; Du. hoe; Goth. hwaiwa. β. The Goth. form shows that the word is closely related to the pronoun who, which is Goth. hwas, AS. hwā. Cf. Gk. ῥῶς, how; and G. wie. See Who, Why. Der. how-be-it, Hen. V, i. 2. 91, Cor. i. 9. 70; how-ever, K. John, i. 173; how-so-ever, Hamlet, i. 5. 84.

HOW (2), a hill. (Scand.) Chiefly in place-names; as Silver How, near Grasmere. ME. how; Hampole's Psalter mentions 'howys . . and hilles;' Ps. lxxi. 3. — Icel. haugr, a how, mound; Swed. hög, a heap, pile, mound; Dan. høj, a hill. Allied to E. high, Goth. hauhs. Cf. Icel. hār, Swed. hög, Dan. høj, high; also Lithuan. kaukaras, a hill. See High.

HOWDAH, the same as Houdah, q. v.

HOWITZER, a short light cannon. (G.—Bohemian.) Sometimes spelt howitz; a mod. word, in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from G. haubitze, a howitzer; a word formerly spelt haufnitz. — Bohemian haufnice, orig. a sling for casting a stone; Jungmann, Bohem. Dict. i. 662. The F. obus, a bomb-shell, is from the same G. word.

HOWL, to yell, cry out. (E.) ME. houlen, Chaucer, C. T. 2819 (A 2817); Gower, C. A. ii. 265. An imitative word; and prob. native; cf. MDu. huylen, to howl; Dan. hyle; Icel. ýla; Swed. yla; G. heulen. Similar forms are L. ululāre, to shriek, howl (whence OF. huller); Gk. ὕλαω, I bark (said of a dog), I howl or cry out (said of a man); ὀλολυγή, a cry. ¶ As Scheler remarks, the h in OF. huller was due to German influence. Der. howl, sb.; cf. hurly-burly, q. v. And see Owl.

HOX, to hamstring. (E.) ME. hoxe, Wyclif, Josh. xi. 6. To cut the hox or hamstring; this sb. occurs in Wyclif, 2 Sam. viii. 4; and is short for hoxen, huxen, or hockshin, lit. 'hock-sinew,' AS. hōhsinu. — AS. hōh, heel, also hock, hough; and sinu, a sinew. See Hough and Sinew.

HOY (1), a kind of sloop. (Du.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 64. 'Equyptt a hoye, and set hir under sayle;' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 136. 'An hoye of Dorderyght;' Paston Letters, iii. 388. — MDu. hoei (Verwij's), variant of MDu. heu, heude, 'a boate or a ship' (Hexham); a kind of flat-bottomed merchantman, a hoy; whence also MF. heù, explained by Cotgrave to mean 'a Dutch hoy.' Of uncertain origin.

HOY (2), interj. stop! (E.) A nautical term. 'When one ship hails another, the words are, What ship, hoy? that is, stop, and tell the name of your ship;' Pegge, Anecdotes of the English Language, p. 16 (Todd). Also an exclamation, sometimes of joy; ME. hoy, P. Plowman, C. ix. 123. Cf. Du. hui, hoy! come! well! Dan. hui, hallo! See Ho! Der. a-hoy, q. v.

HOYDEN, the same as Hoiden, q. v.

HUB, the projecting nave of a wheel; a mark at which quoits are cast; &c. (E.) The orig. sense is 'projection.' 'Hubs, naves of wheels;' Marshall's Leicestershire and Warwickshire Words, ed. 1790 (E. D. S.). Also (in many dialects), the back of a grate, or the side-ledge of it; see N. E. D. The same word as hob; see Hob (1).

HUBBUB, a confused noise. (C.) Another spelling is whoobub, Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 629; Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, ii. 5. 35. Spenser has 'shrieking hububs;' F. Q. iii. 10. 43; also 'a terrible yell and hubbabow;' View of State of Ireland, p. 632 (Globe ed.). An imitative word; and perhaps suggested by Gael. ub! interj. of aversion; Irish abu! a wacry. Hubbub was confused with E. hoop-hoop, and whoobub with E. whoop-hoop. See Hoop (2).

HUCKABACK, a sort of linen cloth. (Low G.?) 'Huckaback, a sort of linen cloth that is woven so as to lie partly raised; Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. First in 1690 (N. E. D.). The word bears so remarkable a resemblance to Low G. hukkebak, G. huckeback, pick-a-back, that it seems reasonable to suppose that it at first meant 'peddler's ware'; see Huckster. Cf. Pomeran. eenen hukbak drägen, to carry one pick-a-back; Low G. hokeboken, to carry on the back (Lübben). Weigand (i. 828) explains G. Huckepack as (1) a humped back for carrying a thing; (2) a burden borne on the back.

HUCKLE-BERRY, a berry of the Gaylussacia, a low berry-bearing shrub, common in N. America. (E.) In Hawthorne, Twice-told Tales, ed. 1851; I. xvi. 249: 'a lot of huckleberries.' The same as whortleberry, formerly hurtleberry. Spelt hurtilberyes; Babees Book, p. 123, l. 82. See Whortleberry.

HUCKLE-BONE, the hip-bone. (E.) 'The hip . . . wherein the joint doth move The thigh, 'tis called the huckle-bone;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, v. 297. 'Ache in the huckle-bones;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 6. Huckle is the dimin. of prov. Eng. huck, which is a mere variant of hock; thus huck-le = hock-le. See E. D. D. And see Hough. Dunbar has hukebanis, hip-bones or hock-bones; Flyting with Kennedie, 181. ¶ In dialects, the hock, orig. the heel, is confused with the ham and the hip.

HUCKSTER, a peddler, hawker, retailer of small articles. (O. Low G.) Properly a feminine form, the corresponding masc. form being hawker, as now spelt, though huckster answers better to hucker. We have the expression 'she hath holden hokkerye,' i. e. followed a huckster's trade; P. Plowman, B. v. 227. But the AS. distinction in gender between the terminations -er and -ster was lost at an early period, so that the word was readily applied to men. 'Hukstare, hukstere, auxionator, auxionatrix, auxionarius. Hukstare of frute, colibista;' Prompt. Parv. p. 252. Hucster, as a gloss to institorum; Wright's Vocab. i. 123. 'Forr þatt te33 turndenn Godess hus inntill hucsterress boþe' = for that they turned God's house into a huckster's booth; Ormulum, 15816, 7. β. An O. Low G. word, but it does not appear in AS. The related words are Du. heuker, a retailer, heuken, to retail; also 'heukeren, to sell by retail, to huckster; heukelaar, a huckster, retailer;' Sewel's Du. Dict. Also Swed. hökare, a cheesemonger (Widegren); Dan. höker, a chandler, huckster, hökeri, the huckster's trade; hökerske, a 'huxteress' (this form is the Dan. equivalent of E. huckster); hökre, to huckster. γ. The word was imported, about A. D. 1200, probably from the Netherlands; the termination -ster being Dutch as well as English, as shown by Du. spin-ster, a spinster, &c. δ. The etymology is much disputed; but it is well illustrated by Hexham's MDu. Dict., which gives us hucken, to stoop or bow; een hucker, a stooper, bower, or bender; onder eenen suaren last hucken, to bow under a heavy burden; een hucker, a huckster, or a mercer. Compare also the Icel. hokra, to go bent, to crouch, creep, slink about, on which it is noted that 'in modern usage hokra means to live as a small farmer, whence hokr, in bū-hokr, small farming;' Vigfusson. Nothing could be more fitting than to describe the peddler of olden times as a croucher, creeper, or slinker about; his bent back being due to the bundle upon it. (See Sir W. Scott's description of Bryce Snailsfoot in The Pirate.) ε. Cf. also MDu. huycken, huken, Du. huiken, to stoop down, crouch (Oudemans); Icel. hūka, to sit on one's hams, with its deriv. hokra; Low G. huken, to crouch (Brem. Wört.); hoker, a huckster (Lübben). So also G. hucke is properly the bent back, whence G. huckeback, pick-a-back; G. hocken is to squat, also to carry on the back, and G. höcker means (1) a hump on the back, and (2) a huckster. See Hawker.

HUDDLE, to throw together confusedly, to crowd together. (E.) Used in late authors in the sense of performing a thing hastily; see examples in Todd; but it simply meant, originally, to hide in a heap, hence to crowd up, or to crowd; see Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 28; Much Ado, ii. 1. 252. 'To huddle up together;' Minshew. Not found in early writers; but the equivalent form to hudder (the suffixes -er, -le being similarly used to express a frequentative) is represented by ME. hodren = hoderen (with one d). 'For scatred er thi Scottis, and hodred in þer hottes' = for thy Scots are scattered, and huddled (dispersedly) in their huts; Rob. Manning, tr. of Langtoft, ed. Hearne, p. 273. β. But again, this ME. hoderen also had the sense of 'cover;' as in 'hodur and happe' = cover and wrap up; Le Bone Florence, 112, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. iii; and the true notion of huddle or hudder was to crowd together for protection or in a place of shelter, a notion still preserved when we talk of cattle being huddled together in rain. So also Low G. hudern, to huddle oneself up (Schambach), Kurhessen hutiern, to cover up warm. γ. From Teut. base **hud-*, weak grade allied to ME. huden, to hide, Ancren Riwele, p. 174, more frequently written hiden, whence mod. E. hide; see Hide (1). Thus to huddle is to hide closely, to crowd together for protection, to crowd into a place of shelter. Cf. also the ME. sb. hudels (= AS. hýdels), a hiding-place; Ancren Riwele, p. 146; Wyclif, Deut. xxvii. 15. δ. The notion of doing things hastily may have been due to the influence of Du. hoetelen, 'to do a thing unskilly;' Hexham. This is allied to G. hudein, to bungle, of which the Alsatian form is hudlen; cf. Swed. hulla, Dan. hulle, to bungle.

HUE (1), show, appearance, colour, tint. (E.) ME. hewè, often a dissyllabic word; Chaucer, C. T. 396 (A 394); but properly monosyllabic, and spelt heu, Havelok, 2918. AS. **hiw*, hēow, appearance, Grein, ii. 78. + Swed. hy, skin, complexion; Goth. hiwi, form, show, appearance, 2 Tim. iii. 5. Teut. type **hiwjom*, n. Cf. Skt. chhavi, skin, complexion, beauty. Der. hue-d, ME. hewed, Chaucer, C. T. 11557 (F 1245); hue-less.

HUE (2), clamour, outcry. (F. — Teut.) Only in the phr. hue and cry, Merry Wives, iv. 5. 92; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 556. See Hue and cry in Blount's Nomolexicon; he notes that 'hue is used alone, anno 4 Edw. I. stat. 2. In ancient records this is called hutesium et clamor;' for the latter phrase he cites a passage from the Close Rolls, 30 Hen. III. m. 5. ME. hue, a loud cry; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 872 (or 873). — OF. hu, a cry (Godefroy); huer, 'to hoot, . . . make hue and cry;' Cot. Cotgrave also gives huée, 'a showing, . . . outcry, or hue and cry.' Of Teut. origin. — MHG. hū, interj.; hūzen, to hoot; MSwed. huta, to hoot; see Hoot.

HUFF, to puff, bluster, bully. (E.) 'A huff, a huffing or swaggering fellow. Huff, to puff or blow, to rant or vapour;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. 'And still you huff it;' Ben Jonson, Every Man, i. 2. 35. Hence huffer, a braggart; 'By such a braggadocio huffer;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3, l. 1034. The old sense was 'to blow' or 'puff up.' 'When as the said winde within the earth, able to huffe up the ground, was not powerful enough to breake forth and make issue;' Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 85. β. Of imitative origin; we find huf, puf, and haf, pauf in Reliq. Antiq. i. 240, to represent forcible blowing; cf. puff. Cf. Lowl. Sc. hauch, a forcible puff; heck, to breathe hard. See Puff, Whiff. Der. huff, at draughts, simply means 'to blow;' it seems to have been customary to blow upon the piece removed; Jamieson gives 'blaw, to blow, also, to huff at draughts; I blaw, or blow you, I take [i. e. huff] this man.' (So also in Danish; blæse en brikke, to huff (lit. blow) a man at draughts.) Also huff-er, in Hudibras, as above; huff-ish, huff-ish-ly, huff-ish-ness, huff-y, huff-i-ness.

HUG, to embrace closely. (Scand.?) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 6. 16; Rich. III, i. 4. 252; &c. [Quite distinct from hug, to shrink, shudder; Palsgrave has: 'I hugge, I shrinke me in my bed. It is a good sporte to se this lytle boye hugge in his bedde for cold.'] β. Of uncertain origin. Perhaps (but with a change of sense) from Icel. hugga, to soothe, to comfort; hugga barnið, to soothe a child; allied to huga, to mind; hugna, to please; cf. Swed. hugna, to delight, gratify; Dan. hue, to like. Kalkar has MDan. hugge, to console, to encourage. This is not far from the sense of hug, in Comus, 164: 'and hug him into snares,' i. e. entice, lure.

HUGE, very great, vast. (F.) ME. huge, Chaucer, C. T. 2953 (A 2951); P. Plowman, B. xi. 242; Will. of Palerne, 2569. Oddly spelt hogge; 'an hogge geant;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 31, l. 17. The etymology is much disguised by the loss of an initial a, mistaken for the E. indef. article; the right word is ahuge. (The same loss occurs in ME. avow, now always vow, though this is not quite a parallel case, since vow has a sense of its own.) — OF. ahuge, huge, vast; a 12th-century word. In the account of Goliath, in Les Livres des Rois, we find: 'E le fer de la lance sis cenx, e la hanste fud grosse e ahuge cume le suble as teissures' = and the iron of his lance weighed six hundred (shekels), and the shaft (of it) was great and huge as a weaver's beam; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 45, l. 36. Also ahoge, ahoge (Godefroy). β. Of unknown origin; but perhaps connected with OHG. irhöhen (G. erhöhen), to exalt; and the OHG. hōh, Icel. hār, AS. hēah, high. Cf. Norw. hauga, to heap up; Icel. haugr, a hill, whence OF. hoge, hogue, a hill; Norm. dial. hogu, arrogant (Moisy). See How (2). Der. huge-ly; huge-ness, Cymb. i. 4. 157.

HUGGER-MUGGER, secrecy. (E. and Scand.) In Hamlet, iv. 5. 84, in phr. in hugger-mugger. A reduplicated form; orig. hucker-mucker, as in More, Dialogue, ii. 52 b, iv. 121 b (N. E. D.). The E. prefix hucker is unmeaning, but rimes to mucker, from ME. mukren, mokeren, to heap up, hoard, conceal, from Norw. mukka, a heap. See Muck.

HUGUENOT, a French protestant. (F. — G.) 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists, French Protestants;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. And in Minshew. — F. huguenots, s. pl. 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists;' Cot. As if from some person of the name of Huguenot. This name was in use as a Christian name two centuries before the time of the Reformation. 'Le 7 octobre, 1387, Pascal Huguenot de Saint Junien en Limousin, docteur en decret;' Hist. Litt. de la France, t. xxiv. p. 307 (Litttré). Huguenot is a dimin. of Hugues, Hugh. — MHG. Hūg, Hugh. β. But this form was due to popular etymology; and was perverted from G. eidgenoss, a confederate, or from the equivalent Low G. form eedgenoot (MDu. eedigenoot in Hexham). Wedgwood cites the Swiss Romance forms einguenot, higuenot, a protestant, also from G. Cf. Körting, § 3215.

HULK, a heavy ship. (Late L.—Gk.) Sometimes applied to the body of a ship, by confusion with hull; but it is quite a different word, meaning a heavy ship of clumsy make; Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 277. The hulks were old ships used as prisons. ME. hulke. 'Hulke, shyppe, Hulcus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 252. 'Hulke, a shyppe, hevreque;' Palsgrave. 'Orque, a hulk or huge ship;' Cot. Late AS. hulc; 'Liburna, hulc;' Voc. 181. 28. — Late L. hulka, a heavy merchant-ship, a word used by Walsingham; see quotation in Way's note to Prompt. Parv.; also spelt hulcus, as quoted above. Also spelt (more correctly) holcas; Ducange. — Gk. ὄλκας, a ship which is towed, a ship of burden, merchantman. — Gk. ὄλκω, to draw, drag; whence also ὄλκη, a dragging, ὄλκος, a furrow, a machine for dragging ships on land; from the base **selk-*. Allied to L. sulcus, a furrow, AS. sulh, a plough. Brugmann, i. § 645. Der. hulk-ing, hulk-y, i. e. bulky or unwieldy. ☞ Not the same word as ME. hulke, a hovel, Wyclif, Isaiah, i. 8; which is from AS. hulc, a hut; Wright's Vocab. i. 58.

HULL (1), the husk or outer shell of grain or of nuts. (E.) ME. hule, hole, hoole. 'Hoole, hole, holl, or huske, Siliqua;' Prompt. Parv. p. 242. 'Hull of a beane or pese, escosse. Hull or barcke of a tree, escorce;' Palsgrave; and see Way's note in Prompt. Parv. Peese hole (or pese hule) = pea-shell; P. Plowman, B. vii. 194, in two MSS.; see the footnote. AS. hulu, a husk; see index to Napier's glosses. Allied to G. hülse, a husk. From Teut. **hul-*, weak grade of **helan-*, to hide, to cover, as in AS. helan. Lit. 'covering.' See Hell. Allied words are OSaxon bihullean, to cover, Heliand, 1406 (Cotton MS.); Du. hullen, to put a cap on, mask, disguise; Goth. huljan, to hide, cover; G. ver-hüllen, to wrap up; Icel. hylja, to hide, cover; Swed. hölja, to cover, veil; Dan. hylle, to wrap. Der. see housings.

HULL (2), the body of a ship. (E.) Not in very early use. First in 1571. 'She never saw above one voyage, Luce, And, credit me, after another, her hull Will serve again;' Beaumont and Fletcher. Wit Without Money, i. 2. 17. The hull is, literally, the 'shell' of the ship, being the same word with the above; see Hull (1). β. But it is probable that its use with respect to a ship was due to some confusion with ME. holl, Du. hol, the hold of a ship; see Hold (2). Cf. 'Hoole (holle) of a schyppe, Carina;' Prompt. Parv. Der. hull, verb, to float about, as a ship does when the sails are taken down, Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 217; Rich. III, iv. 4. 438; Hen. VIII, ii. 4. 199. So in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, we find: 'Hull, the body of a ship, without rigging. Hulling is when a ship at sea takes in all her sails in a calm.'

HUM (1), to make a low buzzing or droning sound. (E.) ME. hummen; Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1199; Palladius on Husbandry, ed. Lodge, vii. 124. Of imitative origin. + G. hummen, to hum. Cf. also Du. hommelen, to hum; the frequentative form; and Hem (2). Also MSwed. hum, a rumour (Ihre). Der. hum (2), q. v., hum-bug, q. v., hum-drum, q. v., humble-bee, q. v.; also humming-bird, Pope's Dunciad, iv. 446, and in Evelyn's Diary, July 11, 1654; called a hum-bird, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 8. § 10.

HUM (2), to trick, to cajole. (E.) A particular use of the word above. In Shak. hum not only means to utter a low sound, as in Temp. ii. 1. 317, but also to utter a sound expressive of indignation, as in 'turns me his back And hums,' Macb. iii. 6. 42; 'to bite his lip and hum At good Cominius,' Cor. v. 1. 49. See Richardson and Todd, where it further appears that applause was formerly expressed by humming, and that to hum was to applaud; from applause to flattery, and then to cajolery, is not a long step. See the passage in Ben Jonson, The Alchemist, Act i. sc. 1, where Subtle directs his dupe to 'cry hum Thrice, and then buz as often;' showing that the word was used in a jesting sense. β. Wedgwood well points out a similar usage in Port. zumbir, to buzz, to hum, zombar, to joke, to jest; to which add Span. zumbar, to hum, resound, joke, jest, make one's-self merry, zumbon, waggish. Der. hum, sb. a hoax (Todd); hum-bug, q. v. Cf. humh! interj., Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, i. 2.

HUMAN, pertaining to mankind. (F.—L.) Formerly humaine, but now conformed to the L. spelling. 'All humaine thought;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 3. 51. 'I meruayle not of the inhumanities that the humain people committeth;' Golden Book, lett. 11, § 2. — MF. humain, 'gentle, . . . humane, manly;' Cot. — L. hūmānus, human; perhaps for **hūmānus* (Bréal); allied to L. hom-o, a man. See Homage. Der. human-ly, human-ise, human-is-at-ion, human-ist, human-kind; also human-i-ty, ME. humanitee, Chaucer, C. T. 7968 (E 92), from OF. humaniteit, which is from L. acc. hūmānitātem, nom. hūmānitās; hence humanit-ar-i-an. And see Humane. ☞ The accent distinguishes human, of French origin, from humane, taken directly from Latin.

HUMANE, gentle, kind. (L.) In Shak., humane (so spelt) does duty both for human and humane, the accent being always on the former syllable; see Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. Hence it has the sense of 'kind;' Temp. i. 2. 346. We have now differentiated the words, keeping the accent on the latter syllable in humane, to make it more like the L. hūmānus. We may therefore consider this as the L. form. Both L. hūmānus and F. humain have the double sense (1) human, and (2) kind. See Human. Der. humane-ly, humane-ness.

HUMBLE, lowly, meek, modest. (F.—L.) ME. humble, Chaucer, C. T. 8700 (E 824). Spelt umble in O. Kentish Sermons, in An O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 30. — OF. (and F.) humble, 'humble;' Cot. (With excrement b.) — L. humilem, acc. of humilis, humble; lit. near the ground. — L. humus, the ground; humī, on the ground. Cf. Gk. χαμαί, on the ground; Russ. zemlia, earth, land. Brugmann, i. § 604. Der. humbl-y; humble-ness, formerly humbleesse, Chaucer, C. T. 1783 (A 1781). Also, from L. humilis, humili-ty, q. v., humili-ate, q. v. Also, from L. humus, ex-hume, q. v. And see Chameleon.

HUMBLE-BEE, a humming bee. (E.) To humble is to hum; or more literally, to hum often, as it is the frequentative form, standing for humme-le; the b being excrement. 'To humble like a bee;' Minsheu. ME. humblen, for hummlen. 'Or elles lyk the last humblinge After the clappe of a thundringe;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 1039. Hence hombel-be or hombul-be; Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ed. Wright and Halliwell, i. 81. 'Hic tabanus, a humbyl-bee;' Wright's Vocab. i. 255 (Voc. 767. 20). + Du. hommelen, to hum, a frequentative form; hommel, a humble-bee, a drone, G. hummel, a humble-bee; hummen, to hum; Swed. humla, a humble-bee. See Hum (1).

HUMBLE-PIE; see under Umble.

HUMBUG, a hoax, a piece of trickery, an imposition under fair pretences. (E.) 'Humbug, a false alarm, a bugbear;' Dean Milles MS. (written about 1760), cited in Halliwell. The word occurs in a long passage in The Student, vol. ii. p. 41, ed. 1751, cited in Todd. An alleged earlier trace of the word is on the title-page of an old jest-book, viz. 'The Universal Jester, or a pocket companion for the wits; being a choice collection of merry conceits, drolleries, . . . bon-mots, and humbugs,' by Ferdinando Killigrew, London, said to be about 1735–40; but it is no older than 1754 (N. E. D.). See the Slang Dictionary, which contains a good article on this word. It is probably a compound of hum, to cajole, to hoax, and the old word bug, a spectre, bugbear, ghost; the orig. sense being 'sham bugbear' or 'false alarm,' as given by Dean Milles. [The N. E. D. makes hum, v., to cajole, a shortened form of humbug, but it is of the same date at least; and see Hum (1).] See Hum (2) and Bug. Der. humbug, verb, as in 'humbugged, egad!' Smollett, Peregrine Pickle, ch. 85 (1751); humbug, sb., improperly used for humbugger.

HUMDRUM, dull, droning. (E.) Used as an adv., with the sense of 'idly' or 'listlessly' in Butler. 'Shall we, quoth she, stand still hum-drum?' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 112. But it is properly an adj., signifying monotonous, droning, tedious, as in 'an old humdrum fellow;' Addison, Whig Examiner (1710), No. 3 (Todd); and is thus found as early as 1553. The sb. humdrum, a dull fellow, is in Ben Jonson, Every Man, i. 1. Merely formed, as a reduplicated word, from hum, a humming noise, and drum, a droning sound, made to rhyme with hum. See Hum (1).

HUMERAL, belonging to the shoulder. (L.) 'Humeral muscle, the muscle that moves the arm at the upper end;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — Late L. humeralis, belonging to the shoulder; cf. L. humeralē, a cape for the shoulders. — L. humerus, better umerus, the shoulder. + Gk. ὤμος, the shoulder; Goth. amsa, the shoulder; Skt. amśa-s, the shoulder. Brugmann, i. § 163.

HUMID, moist. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 151; and in Cotgrave. — F. humide, 'humid, moist;' Cot. — L. humidus, better ūmidus, moist. — L. hūmēre, better ūmēre, to be moist; allied to ūuens, moist, ūuidus, ūidus, moist. + Gk. ὕγ-ρός, moist; Icel. vökr, moist. Brugmann, i. §§ 658, 667. Der. humid-ness, humid-i-ty, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43; and see humour.

HUMILIATE, to make humble. (L.) A late word, really suggested by the sb. humiliation, used in Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale (I 480). The verb is formed from L. humiliatus, pp. of humiliāre, to humble. — L. humili-, decl. stem of humilis, humble. See Humble. Der. humiliat-ion (formed by analogy with other words in -ation) from L. acc. humiliātiōnem, nom. humiliātiō.

HUMILITY, humbleness, meekness. (F.—L.) ME. humilitee, Chaucer, C. T. 13405 (B 1665). — OF. humiliteit, later humilté. — L. acc. humilitātem, from nom. humilitās, humility. — L. humili-, decl. stem of humilis, humble. See Humble.

HUMOUR, moisture, temperament, disposition of mind, caprice. (F.—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary, and Study of Words. 'He knew the cause of every malady, And wher engendred, and of what humour; Chaucer, C. T. 423 (A 421). [The four humours, according to Galen, caused the four temperaments of mind, viz. choleric, melancholy, phlegmatic, and sanguine.]—OF. humor (Littre), later humeur, 'humour, moisture; Cot.—L. hūmōrem, acc. of hūmor, better ūmor, moisture.—L. hūmēre, better ūmēre, to be moist. See Humid. Der. humour, verb; humor-ous, humor-ous-ly, humor-ous-ness, humour-less, humor-ist; from the same source, humect-ant, moistening (rare).

HUMMOCK, HOMMOCK, a mound, hillock, mass. (E.) 'Common among our voyagers,' Rich.; who refers to Anson, Voyage round the World, b. ii. c. 9; Cook, Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 4. 'Round hoommockes or hyllockes;' R. Eden, ed. Arber, p. 381 (1555). It appears to be related to hump and hunch. Cf. EFries. hūmmel, variant of humpel, hūmpel, a hillock; Du. hompe, a hump, hunch; 'een hompe kaas, a lunch [i.e. hunch] of cheese;' Sewel. 'Hompeelig, rugged, craggy;' id. So too Low G. hūmpel, a little heap or mound; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 669. Hummock is formed with dimin. -ock, as in hill-ock; whilst the EFries. hūmmel is formed with the dimin. -el. See Hump, Hunch.

HUMP, a lump, bunch, esp. on the back. (E.) 'Hump, a hunch, or lump, Westmoreland;' Halliwell. Of O. Low G. origin, and may be claimed as E., though not in early use. 'Only a natural hump' [on his back]; Addison, Spectator, no. 558. 'The poor hump-backed gentleman;' id. no. 559. +Du. hompe, a hump, lump; cf. Low G. hūmpel, a small heap, Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 669; Dan. humpel, a hummock; Norw. hump, a knoll, a hillock; Swed. dial. hump, a clot or piece of earth, &c.; Low G. humpe, hompe, a hunch of bread (Berghaus). Cf. also Skt. kubja-s, hump-backed. Der. hump-backed; hummock, q. v.; hunch, q. v.

HUNCH, a hump, bump, a round or ill-shaped mass. (E.) A variant of hump. Hunch-backed occurs in the later quarto edd. of Shak. Rich. III. iv. 4. 81 (Schmidt). 'Thy crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back;' Dryden, qu. in Todd (no reference); it occurs in Œdipus, i. 6, by Dryden and Lee (N. E. D.). A palatalised form of prov. E. hunk, a lump; which agrees with WFlem. hunke, as in hunke brood, a hunch of bread (De Bo). And see Franck, s. v. honk. Der. hunch, vb., hunch-backed.

HUNDRED, ten times ten. (E.) ME. hundred, Chaucer, C. T. 2155 (A 2153); also hundreth, Pricke of Conscience, 4524. AS. hundred, Grein, ii. 111. A compound word.—AS. hund, a hundred, Grein, ii. 111; and -red, with the sense of 'reckoning' or rate, to denote the rate of counting; cf. Icel. hund-rað, which orig. meant 120; and G. hund-ert. This suffix is allied to Goth. raþjo, number (L. ratio); cf. Goth. garathjan, to reckon, number, Matt. x. 30; and see Rate (1). Thus the word grew up by the unnecessary addition of -red (denoting the rate of counting) to the old word hund, used by itself in earlier times. β. Dismissing the suffix, we have the cognate OHG. hunt (also once used alone), Goth. hund; cf. also W. cant, Gael. ciad, Irish cead, L. centum, Gk. ê-kar-ôv, Lith. szimtas, Russ. sto, Pers. sad, Skt. śatam, all meaning a hundred. γ. All from an Idg. type **kantóm*, prob. a docked form of **dekantóm*, a decad; and allied to Goth. taihuntē-hund, a hundred, which Brugmann explains as dekádov dekas (a decad of decads). See Brugmann, i. § 431, ii. § 179. And see Ten. ¶ The ME. hundreth is a Scand. form; from the Icel. hundrað. Der. hundred-th, hundred-fold, hundred-weight, often written cwt., where c=L. centum, and wt=Eng. weight.

HUNGER, desire of food. (E.) ME. hunger, Chaucer, C. T. 14738 (B 3618). AS. hungor, Grein, ii. 111. +Icel. hungur; Swed. and Dan. hunger; Du. honger; G. hunger; Goth. hūhrus, hunger; whence huggrjan (=hungarian), to hunger. Teut. types **hungruz*, **hunhruz*, m. Allied to Lith. kanka, suffering. Brugm. i. § 639. Der. hunger, verb=AS. hyngnan (with vowel-change of u to y); hungry=AS. hungrig (Grein); hungri-ly; hunger-bitten, Job, xviii. 12.

HUNT, to chase wild animals. (E.) ME. hunen, honten, Chaucer, C. T. 1640. AS. huntian; see Ælfric's Colloquy, in Voc., p. 92. Properly 'to capture;' a secondary verb related to hentian, to seize, also a weak verb; Grein, ii. 34. β. We also find Goth. hunths, captivity, Eph. iv. 8; formed from the weak grade (hunth-) of the verb hinthan (pt. t. hanth), to seize, capture, only used in the comp. fra-hinthan, with pp. fra-hunthans, a captive, Luke, iv. 19. It would hence appear that hunt- is a variant of hunth-, though the variation is not easy to explain. 'On an apparent pre-Teutonic change of nt to nd in these and some other words, see Prof. Napier in Mod. Quart. Lang. & Lit., July, 1898, p. 130; cf. Brugmann, i. § 701.—N. E. D. Der. hunt, sb.; hunt-er, Chaucer, C. T. 1638, later form of AS. hunta, a hunter, in Ælfric's Colloquy; hunt-r-ess, with F. suffix -ess, As You Like It, iii. 2. 4; hunt-ing, sb., hunt-ing-box, hunt-ing-seat; hunt-s-man (=hunt's man), Mid. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 143; hunts-man-ship; hunts-up (=the hunt is up, i.e. beginning), Rom. iii. 5. 34, replaced by the hunt is up, Tit. Andron. ii. 2. 1.

HURDLE, a frame of twigs interlaced or twined together, a frame of wooden bars. (E.) ME. hurdel; pl. hurdles, K. Alisaunder, 6104. AS. hyrdel; 'cleta, cratis, hyrdel;' 'crates, i.e. flecta, hyrdel;' Wright's Vocab. i. 26. col. 2, 34. col. 1 (Voc. 126. 16; 140. 23). Also O Merc. hyrdil, Voc. 16. 7. A dimin. from a Teut. base **hurd-*; see the cognate words. +Du. horde, a hurdle; Icel. hurð; G. hürde, MHG. hurt; Goth. haurds, a door, i.e. one made of wicker-work, Matt. vi. 6. Further allied to L. crātis, a hurdle, Gk. κάρταλος, a (woven) basket, from √QERT, to weave; whence also Skt. kṛt, to spin, chṛt, to connect together. Cf. also Skt. kaṭa-s, a mat. Brugmann, §§ 529, 633; also Stokes-Fick, p. 80, where we find Irish cerile, glossed by L. 'glomus.' Der. hurdle, verb, pp. hurdled, Milton, P. L. iv. 186. Doublet, crate, q. v.

HURDY-GURDY, a kind of violin, but played by turning a wheel. (E.) 'Hum! plays, I see, upon the hurdy-gurdy;' O'Hara's play of Midas, Act i (1764). Suggested by Lowl. Sc. hirdy-girdy, a confused noise; cf. also hirdum-dirdum, with the same sense. Note also: 'Som vseþ straunge wlaflerynge, chiterynge, harrynge and garrynge, i.e. some people use a strange babbling, chattering, snarling and growling; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 159. Cf. Lowland Sc. hur, to snarl; gurr, to snarl, growl, purr; Jamieson. 'R is the dog's letter, and hur-reth in the sound;' Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar. The word seems to have been fashioned on the model of hurly-burly.

HURL, to throw rapidly and forcibly, to push forcibly, drive. (Scand.) 'And hurlest [Tyrwhitt has hurtlest] al from est till occident'—and whirlest all from east to west; Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 297=1. 4717. 'Into which the flood was hurlid;' Wyclif, Luke, vi. 49, in six MSS.; but seventeen MSS. have hurtilid. So again, in Luke, vi. 48, most MSS. have hurtilid, but eight have hurlid. In the Ancien Riwle, p. 166, we find 'mid a lutel hurlunge'=with a slight collision; where another reading is hurtinge. β. It is plain that hurl was often confused with hurtil, both being used in the sense of to push violently, jostle, strike with a forcible collision. For those who wish to make the comparison, further references are (1) for hurlen: Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 211; Poems and Lives of Saints, ed. Furnivall, xxiii. 25; Will. of Palerne, 1243; Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 140; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 44, 223, 376, 413, 874, 1204, 1211; Destruction of Troy, 1365; Rob. of Glouc. p. 487, l. 9974; Fabyan's Chron., an. 1380-1 (R.); Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 2, &c.; (2) for hurtilen, Wyclif, Jerem. xlviii. 12; Prompt. Parv. p. 253; Will. of Palerne, 5013; Pricke of Conscience, 4787; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, Cleopatra, 59; &c. β. Nevertheless, they seem to have no etymological connexion. Hurl is not found in AS., nor earlier than 1225; so that it is prob. of Scand. origin. Explained by Swed. dial. hurra, to whirl, to whirl round; whence hurrel, a whirl, hurrel-wind, a whirlwind. So also Dan. hurle, to buzz; whence hurle, to whirl (Larsen); Norw. hurra, to whirl, hum; hurla, to buzz; cf. Icel. hurr, a noise. And cf. EFries. hurrel, a gust of wind; hurreln, to blow in gusts; hurrel-wind, a whirlwind. We likewise find E. hurleblast, a hurricane, hurlepool, a whirlpool; hurlewind, a whirlwind. See Hurry. And compare Whirl, of which hurl is perhaps a 'weak-grade' form. Der. hurl-er.

HURLY-BURLY, a tumult. (F. and E.) In Macb. i. 1. 3; as adj., 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 78. Spelt hurly-burlye, in Bale's Kynge Johan, p. 63 (before 1560). A reduplicated word, the second syllable being an echo of the first, to give more fullness. The simple form hurly is the original; see K. John, iii. 4. 169; 2 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 25.—OF. hurlee, a howling, great noise, orig. fem. pp. of hurler, 'to howle, to yell;' Cot. Cf. Ital. urlare, to howl, yell. Both these forms are corrupt, and contain an inserted r. The OF. form was orig. huller, to howl, also in Cot.; cf. Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 354, l. 24; and the correct Ital. form is ululare, to shriek, also to howl or yell as a wolf (Florio).—L. ululāre, to howl; ulula, an owl. ¶ The MF. hurluburlu, a heedless, hasty person, used by Rabelais, does not seem to be immediately connected. But we may note MDan. hulderbolder, noise, racket (Kalkar); Swed. huller om buller, pell-mell. The mod. E. hullabaloo seems to be a corruption.

HURRAH, an exclamation of joy. (G.) Spelt whurra in Addison, The Drummer (near the end). From G. hurra, MHG. hurrā. Of imitative origin; see Hurl. The older word is Huzzah, q. v.

HURRICANE, a whirlwind, violent storm of wind. (Span.—Caribbean.) Formerly hurricane. 'The dreadful spout, Which shipmen do the hurricane call;' Shak. Troilus, v. 2. 172.—Span. huracan, a hurricane; spelt hurracon in Pineda.—Caribbean huracan, as written by Littre, who refers to Oviedo, Hist. des Indes. 'Great tempestes which they caule furacanas or haurachanas;' Eden, ed. Arber, p. 216. See also Washington Irving's Life of Columbus, b. viii. c. 9 (Trench); Rich. quotes from Dampier's Voyages, v. ii.

pt. ii. c. 6, that hurricanes are 'violent storms, raging chiefly among the Caribbee islands.' Hence also Port. furacão, a hurricane.

HURRY, to hasten, urge on. (Scand.) Quite different from harry, with which Richardson confuses it. In Shak. Romeo, v. i. 65; Temp. i. 2. 131. Extended by the addition of y from an older form hurr, just as scurry is from skirr. It is probably the same word with the rare ME. horien, to hurry. 'And by the hondes hym hent and horyed hym withinne' = and they [the angels] caught him [Lot] by the hand, and hurried him within; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 883. — MSwed. hurra, to swing or whirl round (Ihre); Swed. dial. hurra, to whirl round, to whiz; Swed. dial. hurr, great haste, hurry (Rietz); Dan. hurra, to buzz, to hum; Icel. hurr, a noise.  $\beta$ . Of imitative origin, and a weaker form of the more expressive and fuller form whir; see Whir, Whiz. Ben Jonson says of the letter R that it is 'the dog's letter, and hurreth in the sound.' Der. hurry, sb.

HURST, a wood. (E.) In Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 2, l. 187: 'that, from each rising hurst.' ME. hurst (Stratmann). Very common in place-names in Kent, e.g. Pens-hurst. AS. hyrst, i.e. Hurst in Kent; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 65. + MHG. hurst, a shrub, thicket; Low G. horst; EFries. hōrst; MDu. horst, horscht, 'the wood of osieres or withes'; Hexham. Perhaps allied to Hurdle.

HURT, to strike or dash against, to injure, harm. (F.) In early use. ME. hurten, herten, used in both senses (1) to dash against, push; and (2) to injure. Ex. (1) 'And he him *hurte*th [pusheth] with his hors adoun'; Chaucer, C. T. 2618 (Six-text, A 2616), according to 4 MSS.; 'heo hurten heora hafden' = they dashed their heads together, Layamon, 1878. (2) 'That no man hurte other = that none injure other; P. Plowman, B. x. 366. In the Ancien Riwle, it has both senses; see the glossary. — OF. hurter, later heurter, 'to knock, push, jur, joulte, strike, dash, or hit violently against'; Cot. 'Se heurter à une pierre, to stumble at a stone,' id.  $\beta$ . Hardly of Celtic origin; and not from W. hyrddu, to ram, push, impel, butt, make an assault, hurdd, a push, thrust, butt; see Thurneysen, p. 81. We find also OProv. urtar, hurtar (Gloss. to Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale), Ital. urtare, to knock, hit, dash against; perhaps from a late L. type *\*urtāre*, as if from *\*urium*, unused supine of urgere, to urge, to press on. See Körting, § 9924. ¶ MDu. horten, and Low G. hurten, to push, are from F. Der. hurt, sb., Ancien Riwle, p. 112, Chaucer, C. T. 10785 (F 471); hurt-ful, hurt-ful-ly, hurt-ful-ness; hurt-less, hurt-less-ly, hurt-less-ness.

HURTLE, to come into collision with, to dash against, to rattle. (F.; with E. suffix.) Nearly obsolete, but used in Gray's Fatal Sisters, st. 1; imitated from Shak. Jul. Cæsar, ii. 2. 22. ME. hurtlen, to jostle against, dash against, push; see references under Hurl. To these add: 'And he him *hurtle*th with his hors adoun'; Chaucer, C. T. 2618 (Six-text, A 2616), in the Ellesmere MS., where most other MSS. have *hurte*th.  $\beta$ . In fact, hurt-le is merely the frequentative of hurt in the sense 'to dash.' And this hurt is the ME. hurten, to dash, also to dash one's foot against a thing, to stumble. 'If ony man shal wandre in the day he *hirti*th not,' i.e. stumbles not; Wyclif, John, xi. 9. Du Wes. has MF. hurteler, 'to hurtle together'; perhaps from E.; see Palsgrave, p. 948, col. 2. See further under Hurt.

HURTLEBERRY, a bilberry. (E.) Hakluyt has hurtilberies, Voy. i. 477. Also called huckleberries, hurts, horts, hearts, hart-berries; E. Plant-names (E. D. S.). Spelt hurtes, A. Boorde, Dytary, ed. Furnivall, p. 267. AS. heorotberge, a berry of the buckthorn; AS. Leechdoms, iii. 331; but cf. Voc. 33. 12, 203. 22, 409. 13, 443. 28. From AS. heorot, a hart; and berge, berie, a berry. See Hart and Berry.

HUSBAND, the master of a house, the male head of a household, a married man. (Scand.) The old sense is 'master of a house.' ME. husbonde, husebonde. 'The husebonde . . . warneð his hus þus' = the master of the house guardeth his house thus; OEng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 247. 'Till a vast husbandis hous' = to an empty [waste] house of a farmer; Barbour's Bruce, vii. 151. AS. hūsbonða; 'æt hira hūsbondum' = from their fellow-dwellers in the same house; Exod. iii. 22. Not a true AS. word, but borrowed from Scandinavian. — Icel. hūsbonði, the master or 'goodman' of a house; a contracted form from hūsþuandi. — Icel. hūs, a house; and þuandi, dwelling, inhabiting, pres. part. of þúa, to abide, dwell. See Boor, Busk. Der. husband-man, ME. housbonde-man, a householder, Wyclif, Matt. xx. 1; husband-ry, ME. housbonderye, P. Plowman, B. i. 57, spelt housbondrye, Chaucer, C. T. 9172 (E 1296).

HUSH, to enjoin silence. (E.) Chiefly used in the imp. mood and in the pp. ME. hushen, hussen; 'and husht was al the place', Chaucer, C. T. 2983, ed. Tyrwhitt; spelt husht, huyst in Six-text, A 2981. 'Tho weren the cruel clariouns ful whist [Camb. MS. husht] and full stille'; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 5, l. 16 (or 25). 'After iangling wordes cometh "huissht! pees, and be stille";' Test. of Love, bk. i. ch. 5, l. 90.  $\beta$ . The word is purely imitative, from the use of the word hush or husht to signify silence (husht being afterwards looked upon as a pp.); and it is seen that whist is but another expression of the same kind. See Whist. Cf. Low G. husse bussee, an expression used in singing children to sleep; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 678; Hamburg hüssen, to hush to sleep (Richey). So also G. husch, hush! quick! Pomeran. hüsch, Dan. hys, hush! also Swed. hyssa, Dan. husse, MDan. hvisse, to hush. And see Hist. Der. hush-money, Guardian, no. 26, April 10, 1713. ¶ In the form husht, the t was at first an integral part of the word, just as in whist. 'I huste, I styll,' Palsgrave; 'to huste, silere'; Levins.

HUSK, the dry covering of some fruits, &c. (E.) ME. huske. 'Huske of frute or oþer lyke'; Prompt. Parv. p. 254. 'The note [nut] of the haselle hathen an husk with-oute'; Mandeville, Trav. ch. xviii. p. 188. The k is a dimin. suffix. From AS. hūs, a house. Cf. Low G. huuske; (1) a little house; (2) core of an apple (Berghaus); Pomeran. hüseken, the same; EFries. hūske, a little house, core of an apple, small case; MDu. huysken, a little house, case, husk of fruit (Kilian). And note AS. pisan hōsa, pea-shell, as a gloss to L. siliqua; Corpus Gloss. 1867. Der. husk, verb, to take off the shells; husk-ed.

HUSKY, hoarse, as applied to the voice. (E.) A peculiar use of husky, i.e. full of husks (N. E. D.). 'Huskye, or ful of huskes, siliquōsus,' Hulot (1552). And see the other examples. But perhaps influenced by prov. E. hask, dry, parching, tart, hoarse (E. D. D.); husk, hoarse, dry, also hoarseness (id.). Der. husk-i-ness.

HUSSAR, a cavalry soldier. (G.—Hungarian.—Servian.—Gk.—L.) 'Hussars, Husares, Hungarian horsemen'; Coles' Dict. ed. 1684. 'After the manner of the Hussars'; Spectator, no. 576. 'Hussars, light cavalry in Poland and Hungary, about 1600. The British Hussars were enrolled in 1759'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. — G. Husar. — Hungar. huszar, a free-booter, later, a light horseman. — Serv. χусар, a hussar, free-booter, robber, sea-robber; Popović. — Late Gk. κουράριος, a corsair, pirate (Ducange). — Late L. cursarius, a corsair. — L. curs-us, a course. See Corsair; of which hussar is a doublet. ¶ The word is older than the story about Mathias Corvinus (1458); see N. and Q. 8 S. ii. 156; Miklosich, p. 148.

HUSSIE, a case containing thread, needles, and other articles for sewing. (E.) 'Hussif, that is, house-wife; a roll of flannel with a pin-cushion attached, used for the purpose of holding pins, needles, and thread'; Peacock, Gloss. of words used in Manley and Corringham, co. Lincoln. Spelt husswife in Garrick, Miss in her Teens, Act 2. sc. 1 (1747). The sense is 'housewife's companion.' [It is remarkably like Icel. hūsi, a case; but this is accidental.] From House and Wife. The ME. word was nedyl-hous, i.e. needle-house; Voc. 659. 37.

HUSSY, a pert girl. (E.) 'The young hussesys'; Spectator, no. 242. Hussy is a corruption of huswife; cf. 'Doth Fortune play the huswife with me now?'; Hen. V, v. 1. 85. And again, huswife stands for house-wife = woman who minds a house; from house and wife in the general sense of woman; cf. 'the good housewife Fortune,' As You Like It, i. 2. 33; 'Let housewives make a skillet of my helm'; Oth. i. 3. 273. Cf. ME. hoswyf, mater familias; Voc. 794. 9. See House and Wife. And see Hussif.

HUSTINGS, a platform used by candidates for election to parliament. (Scand.) The modern use is incorrect; it means rather a 'council,' or assembly for the choice of such a candidate; and it should rather be used in the singular husting. Minshew has hustings, and refers to 11 Hen. VII. cap. 21. ME. husting, a council; 'hulden muchel husting' = they held a great council; Layamon, 2324. AS. hūsting, a council (of Danes); A. S. Chron. an. 1012. Not an AS. word, but used in speaking of Danes. — Icel. hūsping, 'a council or meeting, to which a king, earl, or captain summoned his people or guardsmen.' — Icel. hūs, a house; and ping, (1) a thing, (2) as a law term, 'an assembly, meeting, a general term for any public meeting, esp. for purposes of legislation; a parliament, including courts of law.' Cf. Swed. ting, a thing, an assize; hålla ting, to hold assizes; Dan. ting, a thing, court, assize.  $\beta$ . The Icel. hūs is cognate with E. house; and ping with E. thing. See House and Thing.

HUSTLE, to push about, jostle in a crowd. (Du.) It should have been hutsle, but the change to hustle was inevitable, to make it easier of pronunciation. In Johnson's Dict., but scarce in literature. First in 1684. — Du. hutselen, to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket; onder malkanderen hutselen, to huddle together [lit. to hustle one another]; Sewel. A frequentative form of MDu. hutsen, Du. hutsen, to shake, jog, jolt. 'Hutselen, or hutsen, to shake something in a hat'; Hexham. Cf. Lowland Sc. hotch, hott, to move by jerks, hotter, to jolt; prov. G. hotze, a cradle, a swing (Schade). See Hotchpot.

HUT, a cottage, hovel. (F.—OHG.) ME. hotte. 'For scatred er þi Scottis, and hodred in þer hottes' = for scattered are thy Scots, and huddled in their huts; Rob. Manning, tr. of Langtoft, ed. Hearne, p. 273. — F. hutte, 'a cote [cot] or cottage; Cot. — OHG. hutta, G. hütte, a hut, cottage; whence also Span. huta, a hut; and probably Du. hut, Dan. hytte (since these words have not the Low G. d for HG. t). + Swed. hydda, a hut; MDan. hodde, a hut, huddle, a nook (Kalkar). From Teut. **hud-*, weak grade of **heud-*, to hide. See Hide (1), Hod.

HUTCH, a box, chest, for keeping things in. (F.—Low L.) Chiefly used now in the comp. rabbit-hutch. Shak. has bolting-hutch, a hutch for bolted (or bouted) flour; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 495. (and F.) huche, 'a hutch or binne; Cot. — Low L. hūtica; 'quadam cista, vulgo hutica dicta; Ducange. β. Of unknown origin; but prob. Spelt hyacin in Daniel, Sonnet 34. — F. hyacinthe, 'the blew or purple jaeint, or hyacinth flower; we call it also crow-toes; Cot. — L. hyacinthus. — Gk. ἵακινθος, an iris or larkspur (not what is now called a hyacinth); said, in Grecian fable, to have sprung from the blood of the youth Hyacinthos; but, of course, the fable is later than the name. Cf. Brugmann, i. § 280. Der. hyacinth-ine, i. e. curling like the hyacinth, Milton, P. L. iv. 301; Pope, Odys. vi. 274. Doublet, jacynth.

'She's a wild Irish born, sir, and a hybride; Ben Jonson, New Inn, A. ii. sc. 2 (Host); also spelt hybride in Minshew. — L. hibrida, hybrida, a mongrel, hybrid; esp. with reference to a wild boar and a sow; Pliny, bk. viii. c. 53. β. Sometimes derived from Gk. ὑβριδ-, stem of ὑβρις, insult, wantonness, violation; but this is doubtful. Rather, from Gk. ῥῆς, for ῥῆς, a sow; and ἵπο-, only known from the comp. ἵπρι-καλοι=χοῖροι, i. e. hogs (Hesychius). So M. Warren, in Amer. Journal of Philology; vol. v. no. 4.

Also idolater, from OF. idolatre, ‘an idolater’ (Cot.); also idolastre in OF., whence ME. idolastre, an idolater, Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Cf. also Du. of, OFries. of, OSax. of, G. ob; OHG. iba, condition, stipulation, whence the instrum. case ibu, ipu, used in the sense of ‘if,’ lit. ‘on the condition,’ also OHG. upī, upa, ube, mod. G. ob, whether. β. The OHG. ibu is the instrumental case of iba, as said above; so also the Icel. ef, if, is closely related to (and once a case of) Icel. ef (if), doubt, hesitation, whence also the verb efa (ifa), to doubt. See Kluge, s. v. ob. ¶ The guess of Horne Tooke, that AS. gif is the imperative mood of AS. gifan, to give, has been copied only too often. It is plainly wrong, (1) because the AS. use of the words exhibits no such connexion, and (2) because it fails to explain the cognate forms.

IGNITION, a setting on fire. (F.—L.) ‘Not a total ignition,’ Sir T. Browne, Works, b. ii. c. 2. § 6.—F. ignition, ‘a burning, firing,’ Cot. Also igneous, Englished from L. igneus, fiery, by the common change from L. -us to E. -ous. Also, directly from the Latin, ignis fatuus, lit. ‘foolish fire,’ hence, a misleading meteor; see FATUOUS. ‘Fuller (Comment. on Ruth, p. 38) would have scarcely spoken of “a meteor of foolish fire,” if ignis fatuus, which has now quite put out “firedrake,” the older name for these meteors, had not been, when he wrote, still strange to the language, or quite recent to it,’ Trench, Eng. Past and Present, lect. iv. (ed. 1875).

IGNOBLE, not noble, mean, base. (F.—L.) In Shak. Rich. III, ii. 7. 127.—F. ignoble, ‘ignoble,’ Sherwood’s index to Cotgrave.—L. ignobilis.—L. i-, short for in-, not; and gnobilis, later nobilis, noble. See I- and NOBLE. Der. ignobl-y, ignoble-ness. And see IGNOMINY.

IMBECILE, feeble. (F.—L.) 'We in a manner were got out of God's possession; were, in respect to Him, become imbecile and lost;' Barrow, Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 22 (R.) [Formerly a rare word as an adj.; but the verb to imbécill (accented on the penultimate) was rather common; see note below.] Imbecility is in Shak. Troil. i. 3. 114.—MF. imbecille, 'weak, feeble;' Cot.—L. imbécillum, acc. of imbécillus, feeble. Root unknown. Der. imbecil-i-ty. ¶ The examples in R. show that the verb to imbécill or imbécal, to weaken, enfeeble, was once tolerably well known. It also meant 'to diminish' or 'subtract from,' and was repeatedly confused with the verb to embezzle, to purloin. An example from Udal, on the Revelation of St. John, c. 16, shows this sense. It runs as follows: 'The second plague of the second angell is the second iudgement of God against the regiment of Rome, and this is imbesehyng and diminishyng of theyr power and domynion, many landes and people fallynge from them.' The quotations (in R.) from Drant's tr. of Horace, b. i. sat. 6 and sat. 5, introduce the lines: 'So tyrannous a monarchie imbecelyng freedom, than' [then]; and: 'And so imbecill all theyr strengthe that they are naught to me.' These lines completely establish the accentuation of this verb, and further illustrate its sense. See Embezzle. The old word bezzle, to squander, is, however, the real original of im-bezzle; from OF. besiler, to destroy, waste.

Variant of OF. embeuver, embreuver, to moisten; allied to MItal. imbevere, which Torriano gives as equivalent to imbuire, 'to sinke into, to moist or wet, to embrue;' Florio. Cf. mod. Ital. imbevere, to imbibe. β. The OF. embreuver is formed, like mod. F. abreuver, from a causal verb -beuver, to give to drink, turned into -breuer in the 16th century, and thence into -bruer. See abreuver in Brachet. γ. This causal verb (as if L. **biberäre*) is founded on OF. bevre (F. boire), to drink; from L. bibere, to drink. δ. Hence imbrue is the causal of imbibe, and signifies 'to make to imbibe,' to soak, drench. See Imbibe. ¶ Probably it has often been confounded with imbue (below). Unconnected with E. brew, with which it is sometimes supposed to be allied.

IMBUE, to cause to drink, tinge deeply. (L.) 'With noysome rage imbew'd;' Spenser, Ruines of Rome, st. 24, l. 6. Cf. Milton, P. L. viii. 216.—L. imbuiere, to cause to drink in.—L. im-, for in, in; and -buere, a causal form, apparently allied to L. bibere, to drink. Cf. INDOLENCE, idleness. (F. — L.; or L.) Also indolency. 'Indolence or Indolency;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Only indolency is given in Coles and Blount, and occurs in Holland's Plutarch, p. 480 (R.). Indolence and indolent both occur in the Spectator, no. 100; the former is from F. indolence. Indolency is Englished from L. indolentia, freedom from pain; hence, ease. — L. in-, neg. prefix; and dolent-, stem of dolens, pres. part. of dolere, to grieve. See In- (3) and Dolour. Der. indolent (later than indolence); indolent-ly.

INDUE (1), to invest or clothe with, supply with. (L.) 'Infinite shapes of creatures there are bred . . . Some fitt for reasonable sowles t'indew;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 6. 35. 'Indu'd with robes of various hue;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. b. xi. l. 264; where the Lat. has 'induitur uelamina mille colorum,' Metam. xi. 589. — L. induere, to put into, put on, clothe with. And see Higden's Polychronicon, iii. 453, where indue occurs in the 15th cent. translation, and Higden has induit. β. Connected with induiā, clothes, ex-uuia, spoils; the prefix is ind- rather than in-, there being no connexion with Gk. ἐνδύειν, ἐνδύειν, to put on. See Exuvia. Der. indue-ment (rare). And see below.

INDUE (2), a corruption of Endue, to endow, q.v. (F. — L.) This word is distinct from the above, but some of our best writers seem to have confused them. For instances, see Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 105, Oth. iii. 4. 146, &c.; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 6. See Todd's Johnson. The mistake chiefly arises in the phrase 'indued with,' miswritten for 'endued with,' in the sense of 'endowed with;' see Shak. Two Gent. v. 4. 153, Com. Errors, ii. 1. 22. Dryden uses 'indued with' correctly, as in the instance cited under Indue (1).

Origin doubtful; it is not even certain whether the prefix is in- or ind-. Bréal explains indulgentia as from **indu-licentia*; but Prellwitz connects it with Gk. ἐν-δελειχής, continuous, Goth. tulgus, steadfast, and E. long; see Long (2). Der. indulg-ent, Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 16, from F. indulgent, 'indulgent,' Cot. Hence the (later) verb indulge, Dryden, tr. of Persius, Sat. v. 74, answering to L. indulgere.

INDURATE, to harden. (L.) Indurated occurs four times, and induration twice, in Barnes, Works, p. 282. Q. i. 10. 45. — F. industrie, 'industry;' Cot. — L. industria, diligence. — L. industrius, diligent. β. Of uncertain origin; perhaps for **industrius* = **indu-stru-us*, from indu, OLat. extension from in, in; and the base stru-, occurring in struere, to arrange, build (hence, to toil); see Instruct. Der. industri-al, industri-al-ly; also industri-ous, Temp. iv. 33, from F. industrieux,

INGOT, a mass of metal poured into a mould, a mass of unwrought metal. (E.) See my note to Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2. 17. ME. ingot, Chaucer, C. T. 16677, 16691, 16696, 16701 (G 1209-33); where it means 'a mould in which metal is cast;' see the passages. But the true sense is that which is still preserved, viz. 'that which is poured in,' a mass of metal. From AS. in, in; and goten, poured, pp. of gēotan, to pour, shed water, fuse metals; Grein, i. 504. Cf. Du. ingieten, Swed. ingjuta, to pour in. β. The AS. gēotan is cognate with Du. gieten, G. giessen, Icel. gjōta (pp. gotinn), Dan. gyde, Swed. gjuta (pp. guten), Goth. gutan, to pour, shed, fuse; all from GEN, to pour, seen also in L. fundere (pt. t. fūdi, pp. fūsus); which is an extension of GEN, to pour. See Fuse, Chyle.

α. From the E. ingot is derived the F. lingot, an ingot, which stands for l'ingot, by that incorporation of the article which is not uncommon in French; cf. lendemain (= le en demain), loriot (from L. aureolus), luette (from L. uva), lierre (from L. hedera). And again, from F. lingot (found in 1405) was formed the Low Lat. lingotus, which is not an early word, but assigned by Ducange to A. D. 1440. This Low Lat. word has been by some fancifully derived from L. lingua, the tongue; owing to a supposed resemblance of a mass of molten metal to the shape of the tongue; much as the countryman described the size of a stone as being 'as big as a lump of chalk.'

β. Scheler hesitates to accept the derivation here given, from the notion that the AS. verb gēotan soon became obsolete. This is quite a mistake, as it is still extant; see 'Vote, to pour,' in Halliwell, and cf. Cleveland yelling, a small iron pan; and more E. dialect words from the same source might be adduced. The ME. verb yeten was long in use also; see examples in Stratmann, s. v. ȝeoten, 3rd ed., p. 262. 'Hys mase [mace] he toke in hys honde tho, That was made of yoten bras,' i. e. brass formed in a mould; Rich. Coer de Lion, ed. Weber, 370. 'The lazor tok forth his coupe [cup] of gold; Bothe were yoten in o mold,' i. e. both the lazars' cup and another were cast in one mould; Amis and Amiloun, ed. Weber, 2023. 'Mawmez igoten of golde' = idols cast out of gold; Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 38, l. 13. γ. Moreover, there was a derivative sb. gote, a channel; see Prompt. Parv., p. 205, and note; it occurs in the statutes 33 Hen. VIII, c. 33, 2 and 3 Edw. VI, c. 30; still in use in the forms gote, gowt, gut, got, in various parts of England; cf. Du. goot, a gutter; Low G. güte, gete, a can for pouring out, the beak of such a can; göte, a pouring out; see Bremen Wörterb. ii. 502. δ. And note particularly that the whole word ingot has its parallel in the cognate (yet independent) G. einguss, 'infusion, stillation, pouring in, potion, drink (given to horses); as a technical term, jet, ingot;' Flügel's G. Dict. Cf. also Swed. ingöte, the neck of a mould for casting metals (Öman); Low G. ingote = G. einguss (Berghaus). The objection that the ME. pp. was usually yoten rather than goten, is not fatal; cf. E. give with ME. yeven, yiven.

INGRAFT, ENGRAFT, to graft upon. (F. — L. — Gk.) See Engraffed and Engraft in Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. Spelt ingraft, Milton, P. L. xi. 35. Coined from In- (1) or In- (2) and Graft, q. v.

Language, ed. Smith, p. 55, on the signification of to dye in grain, or of a fast colour. And see Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 255, Hamlet iii. 4. 90; Milton, Il Pens. 33, Comus, 750. — F. en graine, in grain; Cot. gives 'graine, the seed of herbs, also grain wherewith cloth is died in grain, scarlet die, scarlet in graine.' β. The F. en = L. in, in; the F. graine is from Late L. grāna, the dye produced from cochineal, which appears also in Span. and Ital. grana, grain, seed, cochineal. So named from the resemblance of the dried cochineal to fine grain or seed; from L. grānum, a grain; see Grain.

Borde, ab. 1542, has instep, Introd. of Knowledge, ed. Furnivall, p. 189, l. 26. β. It would seem that instep and instop (or instup) were both in use; the former must be from in, prep. in, and ME. steppen, to step. The latter may contain the strong grade stōp- of AS. steppan, to step; cf. AS. stōp-el, a footprint, OSax. stōp-o, a step. The reference seems to be to the movement of the instep in walking. See Step.

Late L. interesse, interest. Besides this, the use of this sb. helped to modify the verb below; q. v. Spenser has the Ital. form interesse, F. Q. vii. 6. 33; cf. intresse, Chaucer, Fortune, 71; interesse, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 170.

By the Capitol, And all our gods, but that the dear republic, Our sacred laws, and just authority Are interess'd therein, I should be silent'; Ben Jonson, Sejanus, iii. 1. Thus, in Ferrex and Porrex, Act iv. sc. 2, we have: 'And wisdom will me without protract [delay] In speedie wise to put the same in ure,' i. e. in operation, not in use; see the passage in Morley's Library of Eng. Literature, Plays, p. 59, col. 1. And again, 'I wish that it should streight be put in ure;' id. Act v. sc. 1. γ. Hence was also formed the verb ure, used in the same sense as inure. 'Ned, thou must begin Now to forget thy study and thy books, And ure thy shoulders to an armour's weight'; Edw. III, Act i. sc. 1, l. 159 (in the Leopold Shakspere, p. 1038). δ. The etymology of ure is from the OF. ovre, oeuvre, œuvre, eure, work, action, operation. [Mr. Wedgwood well remarks upon the similar sound-changes by which the F. man-œuvre has become the E. man-ure.] Der. inure-ment (rare). ¶ The word ure here treated of is quite distinct from ME. ure, fate, destiny, luck, as used in Barbour's Bruce, i. 312, ii. 434, &c.; see glossary to my edition. In this case, ure is the OF. eur, aur (mod. F. heur in bonheur), from L. augurium; see Augur.

INVEIGH, to attack with words, rail. (L.) In Shak. Lucrece, 1254. The close connexion of inveigh with the sb. inveective at once points out the etymology. In this word, the L. h is expressed by the guttural gh, just as the AS. h was replaced by the same combination; see Mätzner, Eng. Gram. i. 149. Cf. Span. invehir, to inveigh. —L. inuehere (pp. inuectus), to carry into or to, to introduce, attack, inveigh against. —L. in, into; and uehere, to carry; see Vehicle. Prob. a frequentative from irrire, also spelt hirrīre, to snarl as a dog, which seems to be an imitative word. Der. irritat-ion=F. irritation, 'an irritation' (Cot.), from L. acc. irritationem; irritat-ive, irritat-or-y; irrit-ant, from the stem of pres. pt. of irritāre; also irrit-able, in Minshew, ed. 1627, from L. irritābilis; irrit-abl-y, irrit-able-ness, irrit-abili-ty.

IS, the 3 pers. pres. of the verb substantive. (E.) AS. is; see further under Are, Essence.

ISINGLASS, a glutinous substance made from a fish. (Du.) 'Ising-glass, a kind of fish-glue brought from Island [Iceland], us'd in medicines;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt ison-glass in 1662 (N. E. D.). A singular perversion of MDu. huyzenblas, mod. Du. huisblad. 'Isinglass, huyzenblas;' Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict.; 1754. The lit. sense is 'sturgeon-bladder;' isinglass being obtained from the bladder of the sturgeon (Accipenser sturio).—MDu. huys, a sturgeon; blaese, a bladder (Kilian).+G. hausenblase, isinglass; from hausen, a kind of sturgeon (answering to MDu. huyzen); and blase (=Du. blas), a bladder, from blasen, to blow, allied to E. Blast.

ISLAM, the religious system of Mohammed. (Arab.) 'The revolt of Islam;' Shelley.—Arab. islām, lit. 'submission,' or 'resignation.'—Arab. root salama, he was resigned; whence also salaam, Moslem, Mussulman.

ISLAND, an isle, land surrounded by water. (E.) The s is ignorantly inserted, owing to confusion with isle, a word of F. origin; see below. In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 11, the word is spelt island in the Globe edition, but iland in the passage as quoted in Richardson. ME. iland, ilond, yland, yland; spelt yland in Octovian Imperator, l. 539 (Weber's Met. Romances, iii. 179); ilond, Layamon, l. 1133 (later text). AS. igland, Grein, ii. 136. β. The AS. ig-land is compounded of ig, an island, and land, land; prob. by association with ēa-land, an island, from ēa, water. Grein (ii. 136) gives ig, ieg as equivalent forms, with references; the word is also written ēg in Mercian (id. i. 233); and in Eng. local names appears as -ea or -ey, as in Batters-ea, Aldern-ey, Angles-ey. γ. Cognate words are: Du. eiland, an island, formerly written eyland (Sewel); Icel. eyland; Swed. öland, used as a proper name for an island in the Baltic Sea; G. eiland. δ. Dropping the syllable -land, we also find AS. ig, ieg, Mercian ēg (as above); Icel. ey, an island; Dan. and Swed. ö, an island; also G. aue, a meadow near water. All from Teut. **agwiū*, fem. of **agwioz*, adj., belonging to water; an adj. formed from Teut. **akwa*, water, represented by AS. ēa, OHG. aha, Goth. ahwa, a stream, cognate with L. aqua, water. See Aquatic. Thus the AS. ēa signifies 'water'; whence ieg, ig, 'a place near water,' lit. 'aqueous'; and ig-land, an island. Der. island-er, Temp. ii. 2. 37.

ISLE, an island. (F.—L.) Quite distinct from the E. island, in which the s was ignorantly inserted. It is singular that, in the word isle, the s was formerly dropped, thus tending still further to confound the two words. ME. ile, yle; Rob. of Glouc., p. 1, l. 3; Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxviii. 1.—OF. ille, ile; MF. isle, 'an isle;' Cot.; mod. F. île.—L. insula, an island. See Insular. Der. islet, in Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 24, note, from MF. islette, 'a little island' (Cot.), a dimin. form. And see isolate.

ISOCHRONOUS, performed in equal times. (Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706 (s. v. Isochrone). Imitated from Gk. ισόχρονος, consisting of an equal number of times (a grammatical term).—Gk. iso-, for isos, equal; and χρονος, time, whence also E. Chronicle. β. The Gk. isos or isos is perhaps allied to Gk. είδος, form; Brugmann, i. § 345 (c). Cf. Skt. vishu-, adv., equally. Der. isochronism.

ISOLATE, to insulate, place in a detached situation. (Ital.—L.) The word occurs in the Preface to Warburton's Divine Grace, but was censured in 1800 as being a novel and unnecessary word (Todd). And see note in Trench, Eng. Past and Present. Todd remarks, further, that isolated was properly a term in architecture, signifying detached. It was thus at first a translation of Ital. isolato, detached, separate, formed as an adj. (with pp. form) from isola, an island.—L. insula, an island; also, a detached house or pile of buildings, whence insulatus, insulated, answering to Ital. isolato. See Insular. ¶ The F. isolé is likewise borrowed from the Ital. isolato; the E. word was not taken from F., but directly from the Italian. Der. isolat-ion. Doublet, insulate.

ISOSCELES, having two sides equal, as a triangle. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706.—L. isoscelēs.—Gk. ισοσκελής, with equal legs or sides.—Gk. iso-, for isos, equal (see Isochronous); and σκελος, a leg, which see in Prellwitz.

ISOTHERMAL, having an equal degree of heat. (Gk.) Modern.—Gk. iso-, for isos, equal; and θερμη, heat; with adj. suffix -al. See Isochronous, Thermometer.

ISSUE, that which proceeds from something, progeny, produce, result. (F.—L.) ME. issue. 'To me and to myn issue;' P. Plowman, C. xix. 259. 'An issue large;' Chaucer, Troil. v. 205.—OF. issuē, 'the issue, end, success, event;' Cot. A fem. form of issu, 'issued, flown, sprung, proceeded from;' pp. of issir, 'to issue, to go, or depart out;' id.—L. exire, to go out of; from ex, out, and ire, to go; see Exit. The F. pp. issu answers to Folk-L. **exūtus*, for L. exitus. Der. issue, verb, borrowed from the sb.; 'we issued out' is in Surrey's tr. of Virgil, where the L. text has 'inuat ire,' Æneid, ii. 27; ME. isuen, Rich. Coer de Lion, 4432. [The ME. Northern verb was isch, common in Barbour's Bruce, and borrowed from the F. vb. issir.] Also issu-er; issue-less, Wint. Ta. v. i. 174.

ISTHMUS, a neck of land connecting a peninsula with the mainland. (L.—Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; spelt istmus in Cotgrave, to translate MF. isthme.—L. isthmus.—Gk. ισθμός, a narrow passage, neck of land; allied to ἵσμα, a step; from √EI, to go.

IT, the neuter of the third personal pronoun. (E.) Formerly also hit, P. Plowman, A. i. 85, C. ii. 83; but it in the same, B. i. 86.

AS. hit, neuter of hē; see He.+Icel. hit, neut. of hinn; Du. het, neut. of hij; Goth. hita. ¶ The gen. case its was just coming into use in Shakespeare's time, and occurs in Temp. i. 2. 95, &c., but the usual form in Shak. is his, as in AS. We also find it in Shak. (with the sense of its) in the first folio, in 13 passages, Temp. ii. 1. 163, &c. See the articles in The Bible Wordbook and in Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. Its does not once occur in the Bible, ed. 1611, which has it where mod. editions have its in Levit. xxv. 5; but first appears in Florio's Ital. Dict. (1598), s. v. Spontaneamente. The use of hit for his (= its) occurs early, viz. in the Anturs of Arthur, st. viii. l. 11, and in Allit. Poems, B. 264. The AS. neuter form is hit, nom.; his, gen.; him, dat.; hit, acc. Der. it-self; see Self.

ITALICS, the name given to letters printed thus—in sloping type. (L.) So called because invented by Aldo Manuzio (Aldus Manutius), of Venice, about A. D. 1500. Aldo was born in 1449, and died in 1515. Letters printed in this type were called by the Italians corsivi (cursive, or running hand), but were known to other nations as Italics; see Engl. Cyclop. s. v. Manuzio.—L. Italicus, Italian.—L. Italia, Italy (Gk. Ἰταλία). The initial I is long. Der. italic-ise.

ITCH, to have an irritating sensation in the skin. (E.) Like if (=ME. yif, zif=AS. gif) this word has lost an initial ME. y or z=AS. g. ME. iken, icchen, zichen, ziken; see Prompt. Parv. pp. 259, 538. The pp. occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 3684, where the Six-text (A 3682) has the various spellings icched, yched, and zechid. AS. giccan, for **gyccan*, to itch; in AS. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, vol. iii. p. 50, l. 13; whence AS. gyhða, an itching, in Ælfric's Hom. i. 86.+Du. jeuken, to itch; whence jeuking, jeukte (=AS. gyhpa), an itching; G. jucken, to itch; OHG. jucchan. Teut. type **jukkjan*- or **jukkjan*-. Der. itch, sb., itch-y.

ITEM, a separate article or particular. (L.) The mod. use of item as a sb. is due to the old use of it in enumerating particulars. Properly, it is an adv. meaning 'also' or 'likewise,' as in Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 265: 'as, item, two lips, indifferent red; item, two grey eyes;' &c.—L. item, in like manner, likewise, also; closely related to ita, so; cf. is, he. Cf. Skt. ittham, thus; itthā, thus; iti, thus.

ITERATE, to repeat often. (L.) Bacon has iterations and iterate in Essay 25 (Of Dispatch). Shak. has iterance, Oth. v. 2. 150 (folio edd.); iteration, 1 Hen. IV. i. 2. 101.—L. iterātus, pp. of iterāre, to repeat.—L. iterum, again; a comparative adverbial form (with suffix -ter-) from the pronom. base I of the third person; see Item. Cf. Skt. i-tara(s), other. Der. iterat-ion, iterat-ive.

ITINERANT, travelling. (L.) 'And glad to turn itinerant;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 92.—L. itinerant-, stem of pres. pt. of the verb itinerāri, to travel.—L. itiner-, stem of iter, a journey.—L. it-um, supine of ire, to go.—√EI, to go; cf. Skt. i, to go. Der. itinerant-ly, itineranc-y, itinerac-y. Also itinerary (Levins), from L. itinerārium, an account of a journey, neut. of itiner-ārius, belonging to a journey, from the base itiner- with suffix -ārius.

IVORY, a hard white substance chiefly obtained from the tusks of elephants. (F.—L.) ME. yuory, iuorie (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 7323 (D 1741); also spelt euery, Trevisa, i. 79.—AF. ivorie, Charlemagne, ed. Michel, l. 353; OF. iuurie, ivory, a 12th-century form, cited by Littré; later ivoire, 'ivory;' Cot. [Cf. Prov. evori, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale, 29. 20, whence perhaps the ME. form euery. Also Ital. avorio, avolio.]—L. eboreus, adj. made of ivory.—L. ebor-, stem of ebur, sb. ivory. β. Supposed by some to be connected with Skt. ibha-s, an elephant. Der. ivory, adj., ivory-black, ivory-nut.

IVY, the name of a creeping evergreen. (E.) 'He moot go pypen in an ivy-leef;' Chaucer, C. T. 1840 (A 1838). AS. ifig, ivy; see Gloss. to AS. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; also ifegn, an old form in the Corpus glossary, l. 718. [The AS. f between two vowels was sounded as v, and the change of AS. -ig to E. -y is regular, as in AS. stān-ig=E. ston-y.]+OHG. ebahewi, ivy (cited by Kluge); G. epheu. β. The AS. if-ig seems to be a compound word. The syllable if- is equivalent to Du. ei- in ei-loof, ivy (lit. ivy-leaf); and to OHG. eba(h)- in ebahewi; but the orig. sense is unknown. Der. ivy-mantled, ivi-ed.

IWIS, certainly. (E.) ME. ywis, iwis; Chaucer, C. T. 3277, 3705. Common in Shak., as in Merch. Ven. ii. 9. 68, Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 62, Rich. III. i. 3. 102. AS. gewis, adj. certain; gewislice, adv. certainly; Grein, i. 43.+Du. gewis, adj. and adv., certain, certainly; G. gewiss, certainly. Cf. Icel. viss, certain, sure. β. All from Teut. type **wissoz*, for **wittoz* (Idg. **wid-tos*), pp. from the base wit- in Teut. **wit-an-*, to know. See Wit (1). From √WEID, to know. ¶ It is to be particularly noted that the ME. prefix i- (=AS. ge-) was often written apart from the rest of the word, and with a capital letter. Hence, by the mistake of editors, it is sometimes printed I wis, and explained to mean 'I know.' Hence, further, the imaginary verb wis, to know, has found its way into many dictionaries.

IZARD, a kind of antelope. (F.) Modern. = F. isard; perhaps of Iberian origin (Hatzfeld).

IZZARD, the letter Z. (F.—Gk.) Written ezod in 1597 (N.E.D.); izzard in Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, A. iv. — F. ézed, a F. name for the letter (see my Notes on E. Etym., p. 146); Prov. izèdo, izèto (Mistral). — Gk. ζῆτα, the name of the 6th letter of the Gk. alphabet.

JABBER, to chatter, talk indistinctly. (F.?) Formerly jaber or jable. 'Whatsoever the Jewes would jaber or iangle agayn;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 665 c. 'To iabil, multum loqui;' Levins, ed. 1570. ME. iaberen, to chatter; see under Tateryn in Prompt. Parv. And cf. gibber, Hamlet, i. 1. 116. Jabber, Jabble are imitative words, similar to gabber, gabble, which are from the base gab, seen in Icel. gabba, to mock, scoff. More immediately, they may be referred to OF. jaber, given by Godefroy as a variant of gaber, to mock. Cf. also MF. javioler, 'to gabble, prate, or prattle;' Cot. Of imitative origin. See Gabble; and cf. Du. gabberen, 'to jabber' (Sewel). Der. jabber-er.

JABIRU, a large wading bird of tropical America. (Brazil.) From the Tupi-Guarani (Brazilian) jabiru; see Hist. Nat. Brasilæ, 1648; ii. 200.

JACAMAR, a bird of the family Galbulidæ. (F.—Brazil.) F. jacamar (with c as s), Brisson. — Tupi-Guarani (Brazilian) jacama-ciri; Hist. Nat. Brasilæ, 1648; ii. 202; Newton, Hist. Birds.

JACANA, a grallatorial aquatic bird. (Brazil.) From Tupi-Guarani (Brazilian) jasaná; written jacana (for jaçana); see Newton, Hist. Birds; and Hist. Nat. Brasilæ, 1648; ii. 190.

JACINTH, a precious stone. (F.—L.—Gk.) In the Bible, Rev. ix. 17; xxi. 20. 'In Rev. ix. 17, the hyacinthine, or dark purple, colour is referred to, and not the stone; as in Sidney's Arcadia (B. i. p. 59, l. 28), where mention is made of "Queen Helen, whose Jacynth haire curled by nature," &c.;" Bible Wordbook, ed. 1866. [But I should explain 'iacynth haire,' like 'hyacinthine locks' in Milton, P. L. iv. 301, to mean 'hair curling like the hyacinth,' without reference to colour.] ME. iacynthe, Wyclif, 2 Chron. ii. 7 (earlier version), iacynot (later version). Gower has jacinctus; C. A. iii. 112; bk. vii. 842. — OF. jacinthe, 'the precious stone called a jacint;' Cot. — Late L. iacintus, hiacintus, for hyacinthus, a jacinth, Rev. xxi. 20 (Vulgate). — Gk. ἵακινθος; Rev. xxi. 20. See Hyacinth. ¶ Thus jacynth is for hyacinth, like Jerome for Hierome or Hieronymus, and Jerusalem for Hierusalem.

JACK (1), a saucy fellow, sailor. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) The phrase 'thou Sire John' is in Chaucer, C. T. 14816 (B 4000); on which Tyrwhitt remarks: 'I know not how it has happened, that in the principal modern languages, John, or its equivalent, is a name of contempt, or at least of slight. So the Italians use Gianni, from whence Zani; the Spaniards Juan, as bobo Juan, a foolish John; the French Jean, with various additions; and in English, when we call a man a John, we do not mean it as a title of honour. Chaucer, in l. 3708, uses Jacke fool, as the Spaniards do bobo Juan; and I suppose jack-ass has the same etymology.' 'Go fro the window, Jacke fool, she said;' Chaucer, C. T. 3708. This ME. Jacke has been supposed to have been borrowed from the F. Jagues; but it is hard to believe that this common French name should have been regarded as an equivalent to the E. common name John, since it really answers to Jacob. Indeed, a strong case has been made out by Mr. E. B. Nicholson (in his Pedigree of Jack, 1892) for regarding it as short for Jacken (found in 1327) which is a variant of Jankin, the regular dimin. of John, and so used by Chaucer, C. T., B 1172. See further under Zany. B. It is difficult to tell to what extent the various senses of the word jack depend upon the name above. a. It is, however, clearly to be traced in the phrase 'Jack o' the clock', Rich. II, v. 5. 60, where it means a figure which, in old clocks, used to strike upon the bell. β. In a similar way, it was used to name various implements which supplied the place of a boy or attendant, as in boot-jack and in the jack which turns a spit in a kitchen. γ. Similarly, it denoted the key of a virginal; Shak. Sonnet 128. δ. Hence perhaps also a familiar name for the small bowl aimed at in the game of bowls; Shak. Cymb. ii. 1. 2. ε. And for a small pike (fish), as distinct from a full-grown one; and in many other instances (see N. E. D.). Der. Jack-o-lent = Jack of Lent, a puppet thrown at in Lent, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 27; Jack-a-lantern = Jack o' lantern, also called 'Jack-with-the-lantern', an ignis fatuus (see Todd's Johnson); Jack-pudding, Milton, Defence of the People of England, c. 1 (R.), compounded of Jack and pudding, just as a buffoon is called in French Jean-pottage (John-pottage) and in German Hans-wurst (Jack-sausage); Jack-an-apes (for which see below); Jack-by-the-hedge, 'an herb that grows by the hedge-side,' Kersey, ed. 1715, i. e. Sisymbrium Alliaria, see Lyte, tr. of Dodoens, bk. v. c. 72; jack-ass; jack-daw, Pliny, b. x. c. 29 (and not a corruption of chough-daw, as it has been desperately guessed to be): cf. MF. jaquette, 'a proper name for a woman, a piannat, or megatapy' [magpie], Cot. Also jack-screw, a screw for raising heavy weights, &c.

JACKANAPES, a tame ape, a man who displays tricks like an ape; used as a term of contempt. Tyndall has Iack an apes (Iacke a napes in ed. 1528); Works, 1572, p. 132, col. 1, l. 11. 'He grynnes and he gapis As it were iack napis;' Skelton, Why Come ye nat to Courte, l. 651. History shows that the orig. form was Iack Napes, and it is first known as a nick-name of Wm. de la Pole, duke of Suffolk (murdered in 1450), whose badge was an ape's clog and chain, such as was usually attached to a tame ape. It is possible that, at the same time, there was a covert meaning in Napes (which also then meant Naples), because he advocated the king's marriage with Margaret, daughter of René, titular king of Jerusalem, Sicily, and Naples; which made him unpopular.

JACK (2), a coat of mail, a military coat worn over the coat of mail. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) 'Iakke of defence, iak of fence, garment, Baltheus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 256, and note, showing that the word was in use as early as 1375. 'Iacke, harness, iacq, iacque;' Palsgrave. — OF. Jaque, 'James, also a Jack, or coat of mail, and thence, a Jack for the body of an Irish grey-hound . . . put on him when he is to coap' [with a wild boar]; Cot. Cf. Ital. giaco, a coat-of-mail, Span. jaco, a soldier's jacket; also Du. jak, G. jacke, Swed. jacka, a jacket, jerkin. β. Of obscure origin. Most likely Ducange is right in assigning the origin of it to the Jacquerie, or revolt of the peasantry nicknamed Jacques Bonhomme, A. D. 1358. That is, it is from the OF. name Jacques. — L. Iacobus. — Gk. Ἰάκωβος. — Heb. Ya'aqob, Jacob, lit. 'one who seizes by the heel.' — Heb. root 'aqab, to seize by the heel, to supplant. ¶ In some instances, jack (1) and jack (2) were doubtless confused; as, e.g. in black-jack. Der. jack-et, q. v.; also jack-boots, boots worn as armour for the legs, in the Spectator, no. 435; black-jack (Nares, s. v. jack).

JACKAL, a kind of wild animal. (Turk.—Pers.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 82, l. 327; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 115. Spelt Iacal in Sandys, Trav. p. 205. — Turk. chakāl. — Pers. shaghāl; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 383. Cf. Skt. çrgāla-s, a jackal, a fox.

JACKET, a short coat. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) 'In a blew jacket;' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 225. Palsgrave has Iacket. — OF. jaquette, 'a jacket, or short and sleevelesse country-coat;' Cot. Dimin. of OF. jaque, 'a jack, or coat of mail;' Cot. See Jack (2). Der. jacket-ed.

JACOBIN, a friar of the order of St. Dominick. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) 'Now frere menour, now Iacobyn;' Rom. of the Rose, l. 6338. — F. jacobin, 'a jacobin;' Cot. — Low L. Jacobinus, adj. formed from Jacobus; see Jack (2). B. Hence one of a faction in the French revolution, so called from the Jacobin club, which first met in the hall of the Jacobin friars in Paris, Oct. 1789; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. C. Also the name of a hooded (friar-like) pigeon; F. jacobine, fem. of jacobin. Der. Jacobin-ic-al, Jacobin-ism.

JACOBITE, an adherent of James II. (L.—Gk.—Heb.) Formed with suffix -ite (= L. -ita), from Jacob-us, James. See Jack (2). Der. Jacobit-ism.

JACONET, a cotton fabric. (Hind.—Skt.) At first imported from India; spelt jaconot in 1769. 'Corrupted from Urdū [Hind.] Jagannāthi, from Jagannāth (Juggernaut) or Jagannāthpuri in Cuttack, where it was originally manufactured;' N. E. D. See Juggernaut. (Hind. pūr = a town.)

JADE (1), a sorry nag, an old woman. (Scand.?) ME. jade (MS. Iade), Chaucer, C. T. 14818 (B 4002). Also found as jaud, jad (E. D. D.). Of unknown origin; unless it can be a variant of Lowl. Sc. yaud, yad, yade, which seems probable; see E. D. D. If so, it is from Icel. jalda, a mare; cf. prov. Swed. jäldä, a mare (Rietz). Der. jade, vb. to tire, spurn, Antony, iii. 1. 34.

JADE (2), a hard dark green stone. (F.—Span.—L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Cf. F. jade, Span. jade, jade. Florio's Ital. Dict. gives the form iada. The jade brought from America by the Spaniards was called piedra de ijada, because it was believed to cure pain in the side (see Pineda, s. v. piedra); for a similar reason it was called nephritis (from Gk. νεφρός, kidney). Hence F. jade is from Span. ijada, also ijar, the flank; cf. Port. ilhal, ilharga, the flank, side. — L. ilia, pl., the flanks. Körting, § 4708.

JAG, a notch, a pointed shred. (F.?) 'Jagge, or dagge of a garment;' Prompt. Parv. p. 255. 'I iagge or cutte a garment; Jagge, a cuttyng;' Palsgrave. Cf. iaggen, to pierce, strike through; Morte Arthure, 2087. Apparently coined as a parallel form to dag; and as dag may have been (in some of its senses) suggested by F. dague, a dagger (see Morte Arthure, 2102), so jag may have been suggested by an OF. **jagaye*, variant of zagaye or azagaye or archegaie, an assagai (Cot., Godefroy). Godefroy and Cotgrave quote the dimin. form jagayette; and archigaie occurs in Froissart; see Assagai. Der. jagg-ed, spelt iaggde in Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 1161; whence to-iaggde, Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, l. 124; jagg-ed-ness; jagg-y.

JAGGERY, a coarse brown sugar. (Port.—Canarese—Skt.) Spelt gagara, Hakluyt, Voy., ii. pt. 1. 252.—Port. jagara, jagra.—Canarese sharkare (H. H. Wilson).—Skt. çarkarā. See Sugar.

JAGUAR, a S. American beast of prey. (Brazilian.) In a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. The word is Brazilian; see Buffon, Quadruped. t. iii. pp. 289, 293 (Littre). 'Jagua in the Guarani [Brazilian] language is the common name for tygers and dogs. The generic name for tygers in the Guarani language is Jaquarete.' Clavigero, Hist. of Mexico, tr. by Cullen, ii. 318 (ed. 1787). Cavalcanti gives Brazil. yauara, a dog, yauara-eté, iaúara-eté, a jaguar; Granada, in his Vocab. Rioplatense, gives 'jaguar, tigre.' See my Notes on E. Etym., p. 338.

JAIL, another spelling of Gaol, q. v. (F.—L.)

JALAP, the root of a Mexican plant. (Mexican.) 'Jalap, the root of a kind of Indian night-shade;' Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. And in Coles, ed. 1684. Named from Jalapa or Xalapa, in Mexico. From Aztec Xalapan, lit. 'sand by the water;' from xal(li), sand, a(tl), water, and pan, on, near; where -li, -tl are suppressed in composition. See my Notes on E. Etym., p. 332.

JALOUSIE, a blind made with slats sloping upward from without. (F.—L.—Gk.) First in 1824.—F. jalousie, 'jealousie; also a lattice window, or grate to look through;' Cot. So called because it prevents strangers from seeing in.—F. jalous, jealous; see Jealous.

JAM (1), to press, squeeze tight. (E.) 'Jam, to squeeze;' Halliwell. 'Jammed in between the rocks;' Swinburne, Travels through Spain (1779), let. 3, p. 8. 'Jam, to render firm by treading, as cattle do land they are foddered on;' Marshall's Rural Economy of Norfolk (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 3). The same word as cham, or champ. 'I chamme a thyng small bytwene my tethe, or champe;' Palsgrave. 'Champ [with excrescent p], to tread heavily, Warwickshire; to bite or chew, Suffolk;' Halliwell. Whence also: 'Champ, hard, firm, Sussex;' id.; i.e. chammed or jammed down, as if by being trodden on; and see E. D. D. See Champ, which is of imitative origin. ¶ For the common and regular change from ch to j, see Jaw, Jowl.

JAM (2), a conserve of fruit boiled with sugar. (E.) In Johnson's Dict.; and in Ashe (1775). Apparently from Jam (1). The following quotation suggests that it may mean a soft substance, resembling what has been chewed. 'And if we haue anye stronger meate, it must be chammed afore by the nurse, and so putte into the babe's mouthe;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 241 h. See Champ.

JAMB, the side-post of a door. (F.—L.) 'Jaum of the door, the side-post. This word is also used in the South, where they say the jaum of the chimney;' Ray, Collection of North-Country Words, 1691. Spelt jaumbe in Cotgrave. 'Yea, the jambes, posts, principals, and standards, all of the same metall;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 3, § 7. And in Baret (1580).—F. jambe, 'the leg or shank, . . . the jaumbe or side-post of a door;' Cot. Cf. Ital. gamba, Span. gamba, the leg; Port. gambias, pl. the legs.—Late L. gamba, a hoof; Vegetius, i. 56, near the end; 3. 20. From an older form camba, which appears in the book of Cerne (see Gambol), and in O. Spanish (Diez, whom see). Closely allied to O. Celtic **kambos*, crooked (Stokes-Fick); so that the word was orig. used of the bent leg or the knee. Cf. W. cam, crooked. And see Ham. Der. giamb-eux, leggings, greaves, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 29; jambeaux, Chaucer, C. T., B 2065; pl. from an AF. **iambel*; from OF. jambe.

JANE, a twilled cotton cloth; see Jean.

JANGLE, to sound discordantly, to quarrel. (F.—Scand.) 'A jangling of the bells;' Shak. Per. ii. 1. 45. Hence jangle=to make discordant; 'like sweet bells jangled;' Hamlet. iii. 1. 166. ME. janglen, to quarrel, talk loudly. 'To jangle and to jape;' P. Plowman, B. ii. 94. Spelt gangle, Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 7413.—OF. jangler, 'to jangle, prattle, talk saucily or scurvily;' Cot. β. Of Scand. origin.—Swed. dial. and Norw. jangla, to quarrel; cf. Du. jangelen, to importune (Sewel), a frequentative form (with suffix -el) from Du. janken, to howl, yelp as a dog (Sewel). Cf. Low G. janken, to yelp as a dog; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 636; also Westphal. jänglen, to play out of tune. Of imitative origin; cf. L. gannire, to yelp as a dog, talk loudly. Der. jangl-er, jangl-ing; see jingle.

JANIZARY, JANISSARY, a soldier of the old Turkish footguard. (F.—Ital.—Turkish.) Bacon speaks of 'the Janizaries' in Essay 19, Of Empire, near the end. There is an earlier reference to them in Sir T. More, Works, p. 279 f. 'Janissaries, an order of infantry in the Turkish army: originally, young prisoners trained to arms; were first organised by Orcan, about 1330, and remodelled by his son Amurath I. 1360. . . . A firman was issued on 17 June, 1826, abolishing the Janizaries;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. And see Gibbon, Roman Empire, c. 64.—MF. Jannissaires, 'the Janizaries;' Cot.—M. Ital. ianizzeri, 'the Turkes gard;' Florio. Of Turkish origin; the word means 'new soldiery;' from Turk. yeñi, new, and cheri, soldiery (Devic). The ñ represents saghir noon, a nasal letter peculiar to Turkish. And cheri is from Pers. charik, auxiliary forces (Zenker); see Rich. Dict., p. 537.

JANUARY, the first month of the year. (L.) ME. January (MS. Ianuary), Chaucer, C. T. 9267 (E 1393). Englished from L. Iānuārius, January, named from the god Iānus. Iānus (for **Diānus*) is allied to Diūna (Bréal).

JAPAN, a name given to certain kinds of varnished work. (Japan.) Properly 'Japan work,' where Japan is used adjectivally. Named from the country; see Yule. Pope playfully alludes to 'shining altars of Japan;' Rape of the Lock, iii. 107. Der. Hence japan, verb, to varnish like Japan work, to polish; japann-er, a polisher of shoes, shoe-black, Pope, Imit. of Horace, Epist. i. 1. 156.

JAPE, to jest, mock, befool. (F.—Scand.) Obsolete. In Chaucer, C. T. 1731; P. Plowm. B. i. 67. Apparently suggested by OF. japer (Hatzfeld), F. japper, to bark as a dog, to yap, of imitative origin; but in sense answering rather to OF. jaber (Godefroy), variant of gaber, 'to mock, flout, gull, cheat,' Cot.; which has just the same sense as jape. Roquefort has gap=gab, mockery.—Icel. gabba, to mock; gabb, mockery. Puitspelu gives Lyons dial. japia, foolish stories. See Gabble, Jabber.

JAR (1), to make a discordant noise, creak, clash, quarrel. (E.) 'All out of ioynt ye iar;' Skelton, Duke of Albany, l. 378. And see Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 1. 39, 47; v. 2. 1. Jar stands for an older form char, only found in the prov. E. char, to chide, and in the derivative charken, to creak like a cart or barrow (Prompt. Parv.), also to creak like a door (Gower, C. A. ii. 102); cf. also AS. ceorian, cerian, to murmur, MDu. karren, kerren, 'to crake [creak] like a cart,' Hexham; OHG. kerran, to give a loud harsh sound; cf. Jargon and Gar-rulous. Der. jar, sb., spelt jarre, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 23.

JAR (2), an earthen pot. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'A great jar;' Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry; l. 28. And in Cotgrave. The Latinized form jarrus occurs in The Earl of Derby's Expeditions (Camden Soc.), p. 228, l. 18.—OF. jare, 'a jarre,' Cot.; mod. F. jarre. [Cf. Span. jarra, a jug, pitcher; Ital. giara, giarra, 'a iarre,' Florio.]—Span. jarra, jarro, a jar (Pineda); jarro (Minsheu).—Arab. jarrah, a jar (Devic); cf. Pers. jurrah, a little cruise, or jar; Rich. Dict. p. 504, col. 2. Probably borrowed by the Spanish from the Arabs.

JARGON, a confused talk. (F.—L.?) ME. jargon, jergon, chattering. 'And ful of jargon'=very talkative; Chaucer, C. T. 9722 (E 1848). Particularly used of the chattering of birds; Gower, C. A. ii. 264; bk. v. 4103; Rom. of the Rose, 716.—F. jargon, 'gibridge, fustian language,' Cot.; jargonner, 'to speak fustian, jangle, chatter,' id. The word is old, and appears also as OF. gergon, gargon (Godefroy). Cf. Span. gerigonza, jargon; gerigonzar, to speak a jargon; Ital. gergo, jargon. β. All perhaps from an imitative base garg- (cf. garg-le, gurg-le), prob. allied to L. garrire; see Jar (1). This extended form GARG, answering to a Teut. base KARK, is exactly represented in English by ME. charken, to creak as a cart, and the AS. cearcian, to gnash the teeth (Ælfric's Homilies, i. 132). An attenuated form of charken is the ME. chirken, to chirp, to make a harsh noise. 'Al ful of chirking [=jargon] was that sory place;' Chaucer, C. T. 2006 (A 2004).

JARGONELLE, a variety of pear. (F.—Ital.—Arab.—Pers.) In Johnson's Dict.—F. jargonelle, a variety of pear, very stony or gritty (Littre). Formed (according to Littre) as a dimin. from F. jargon, a yellow diamond, a small stone.—Ital. giargone, a sort of yellow diamond; E. zircon.—Arab. zargūn.—Pers. zargūn, gold-coloured, from zar, gold, and gūn, colour; see Devic, Supp. to Littre, and Yule.

JASEY, JAZY, a wig made of worsted or tow. (Jersey.) 'The old gentleman in the flaxen jazy;' Scott, Redgauntlet, ch. xxi [not xx]. For Jersey, because made of Jersey yarn; see Forby, Vocab. of E. Anglia. See Jersey.

JASMINE, JESSAMINE, a genus of plants. (F.—Pers.) Spelt jasmin, jessemin, jelsomine, jesse, in Cotgrave. Milton has jessamine, P. L. iv. 698; Lycidas, 143. The spelling jasmin agrees with MF. jasmin; Cot. Jessemín, jelsomine answer to the Ital. forms gesmíno, gelsomíno. The Span. form is jazmín. All are from Pers. yāsmīn, jasmine; of which another form is yāsmān, jessamine; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1703; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 715.

JASPER, a precious stone. (F.—L.—Gk.—Arab.) ME. Iaspre, Iasper. 'What is better than gold: Iaspre;' Chaucer, C. T., Tale of Melibeus, B 2297. Also spelt Iaspis, Gower, C. A. iii. 112; bk. vii. 841.—OF. jaspre (see Littré), an occasional spelling of OF. and F. jaspe, 'a jasper stone'; Cot. [Thus the r is an addition, and no real part of the word.]—L. iaspidem, acc. of iaspis, a jasper.—Gk. iaspis.—Arab. yashb, yashf, also spelt yashb, jasper; whence Pers. yashp, yashf, jasper; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1707; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 719. Cf. Heb. yāshpēh, a jasper.

JAUNDICE, a disease caused by bile. (F.—L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. i. 85. The d is purely excrescent, as commonly in E. words after n; cf. sound from F. son. ME. jaunys, Pricke of Conscience, l. 700; spelt iaundys, Trevisa, ii. 113; further corrupted to iaundres, in a 15th-cent. tr. of Higden, on the same page as the last reference.—OF. (and F.) jaunisse, so spelt in the 13th cent. (Littré); but Cot. gives it as jaulnisse, 'the jaundies.' Formed with suffix -isse (=L. -itia) from F. jaune, yellow; because the disease is characterized by yellowness of the skin and eyes. The oldest spelling of jaune is jalne (Littré).—L. galbinus, also galbineus, greenish yellow.—L. galbus, yellow. The likeness of L. galbus to G. gelb is so close as to suggest that it is of Teutonic origin; the true L. form being heluus. See Yellow. Der. jaundic-ed.

JAUNT, a tiring ramble, an excursion. (F.) It would seem from the ex. in Shak. that jaunt and jaunce are equivalent terms. Jaunt is a wild and fatiguing ramble, Romeo, ii. 5. 26; where another reading is jaunce; cf. geances, fatiguing journeys, in Ben Jonson, A Tale of a Tub, A. ii (Hilts). It also means to ramble, rove, id. ii. 5. 53, where another reading for jaunting is jaunsing. Again, Shak. has: 'Spurred, galled, and tired by jauncing Bolingbroke, i.e. hard-riding Bolingbroke. This jaunce is from ME. jancer, of which Cotgrave says: 'Jancer un cheval, to stirre a horse in the stable till he sweat with-all, or as our jaunt; an old word.' Not found in OF. Cf. E. dial. jankit, jaded; Swed. dial. jank, useless trouble, slow motion (Rietz); Norw. janka, to stagger. Der. jaunt, vb., to ramble. ¶ I suggest that jaunt arose from jaunts, a corrupt form of jaunce, taken as a plural form.

JAUNTY, JANTY, genteel, stylish, fantastical. (F.—L.) 'We owe most of our janty fashions now in vogue to some adept beau among them' [the French]; Guardian, no. 149; dated 1713. As if formed with suffix -y from the verb jaunt, to ramble idly about; but formerly janty or jantee, also jentee, variants of genteel, and used in the same sense. See therefore Genteel. β. Exx.: 'This jantee sleightness to the French we owe;' T. Shadwell, Timon, p. 71 (1688). 'A jaunty [genteel] part of the town;' Spectator, no. 503. 'Turn you about on your heel with a jantee air;' Farquhar, The Inconstant, Act i. Cf. also 'Sae jimpy lac'd her genty waist;' Burns, Bonnie Ann. Der. jaunt-i-ness, Spectator, no. 530.

JAVELIN, a kind of spear or dart. (F.—C?) Used in the sense of boar-spear, Shak., Venus, 616. 'Iavelyn, a speare, iauelot;' Palsgrave.—MF. javelin, m., javeline, f., 'a javeling, a weapon of a size between the pike and partizan'; Cot. Cf. MF. javelot, 'a gleave, dart, or small javelin'; Cot. Also Span. jabalina, Ital. giavellotto, a javelin. β. Perhaps of Celtic origin. The Breton gavlin and gavlod are merely borrowed from the French; but the origin is shown by the Irish gabhlá, a spear, lance; gabhlach, forked, divided, peaked, pointed; gabhlán, a branch, a fork of a tree; gabhlóg, any forked piece of timber; gabhal, OIrish gabul, a fork. Cf. Gael. gobhal, a fork; gobhlach, forked, pronged; gobhlóg, a small fork, two-pronged instrument; gobhlán, a prong, small fork, weeding-hook. Also W. gafl, a fork; gaflach, a fork, a dart. See Gaff. γ. Hence may also be explained the ME. gavelok, a javelin, dart, in King Alisaunder, l. 1620; AS. gafeluc, Voc. 143. 6; also MHG. gabilōt, a javelin (from F.). See Thurneysen, p. 63; Macbain, s. v. gobhal.

JAW, part of the mouth. (F.—L.) ME. jowe; 'Jowe or chekebone, Mandibula;' Prompt. Parv. '3it drow [drew] I him out of þe Iowes, scilicet faucibus, of hem þat gapeden;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 70. 'þe ouer iawe' = the upper jaw, Trevisa, iii. 109; with various readings, jawe, geowe.—AF. jowe, glossed 'cheke;' W. de Bibbesworth, in Wright's Voc. i. p. 145; Norm. dial. joe, Guernsey jaue (Moisy); F. joue, the cheek; OF. joe (with o for later ou), Chanson de Roland, l. 3921; corresponding to Ital. gota, 'a cheek, a iaw' (Florio), Prov. gauta; which Diez derives from Late L. gavata, L. gabata, a kind of platter, a bowl; from the rounding of the jaw. Körting, § 4103. ¶ Palsgrave has chawebone; this alteration to chaw is later, and due to association with the verb to chew. Somewhat similar is the MDu. kouwe, the cavity of the mouth, from MDu. kouwen (Du. kaauwen), to chew; Kilian. Der. jaw-bone, Bible, 1551, Judg. xv. 15; jaw-teeth; jaw-fallen, Fuller, Worthies, Essex (R.); lantern-jaw-ed.

JAY, a bird with gay plumage. (F.—OHG.) ME. jay, Iay; Chaucer, C. T. 644; King Alisaunder, l. 142.—MF. jay (older spellings gay, gai), a jay; Cot. Mod. F. geai; Gascon gai; Norm. dial. gai. So also Span. gayo, a jay, gaya, a magpie. β. Hardly from OHG. gāhi (MHG. gāhe, G. jäh), adj., quick, lively (Kluge). But rather allied to gay, OF. gai; and to be derived from OHG. wāhi, fine, beautiful. Körting, § 1718.

JEALOUS, suspicious of rivalry, tender of honour. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. jalous, Chaucer, C. T. 1331 (A 1329). Earlier gelus, Ancrén Riwlé, p. 90, where it occurs to translate L. zēlōtes.—OF. jalous, later jaloux, 'jealous'; Cot. Cf. Ital. geloso, Span. zeloso, jealous.—Late L. zēlōsus, full of zeal; related to L. zēlōtēs, one who is jealous.—L. zēlus, zeal.—Gk. ζῆλος, zeal; see Zeal. Der. jealous-ly; jealous-y, ME. jealousye, Chaucer, C. T. 12300 (C 366), from F. jalousie; also jalousie, q. v. Doublet, zealous.

JEAN, JANE, 'a twilled cotton cloth. (F.—Ital.) 'Gene fustian;' in 1589; H. Hall, Society in Eliz. Age, p. 210. Cf. ME. Gene, Genoa; spelt Geane in The Paston Letters, ii. 293.—MF. Genes, Genoa.—Ital. Genova, Genoa; whence it was brought.

JEER, to mock, scoff. (F.—L?) In Shak. Com. Errors, ii. 2. 22. 'He saw her toy, and gibe, and geare;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 21. 'There you named the famous jeerer, That ever jeered in Rome or Athens;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour, v. 1 (Song). It seems to have been regarded as a foreign word; see Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1. 5: 'Let's jeer a little. Jeer? what's that? Expect, sir,' i.e. wait a bit, and you will find out. Not found before 1553. β. The origin of the word is doubtful. If it were a slang term, it might be a corruption of Du. scheren, scheeren. From the Du. gek, a fool, and scheeren, to shear, was formed the phrase den gek scheeren (lit. to shear the fool), to mock, jeer, make a fool of one. Soon these words were run together, and the word gekscheeren was used in the sense of jeering. See Sewel's Du. Dict., which gives the above forms, as well as the sb. gekscheeren, 'a jeering, fooling; jesting: Ik laat my niet gekscheeren, I will not be trifled with.' This is still preserved in mod. Du. gekscheren, to jest, banter, and in the phrase het is geen gek-scheren, it is no laughing matter. The phrase was also used as scheeren den gek, to play the fool; whence simply scheeren, 'to gibe, or to jest' (Hexham). γ. But it accords better with phonetic laws to derive it from OF. (or AF.) giere, an occasional variant of OF. chiere, whence E. cheer. Godefroy has: 'S'aucuns hons te fait d'amere giere,' if any man makes you bitter cheer (jeers at you). Again, in his Supplement: 'Mas faites bale, giere, ioie, solas, et ris,' but dance, make cheer and joy, and pleasure, and laughter. From the phr. faire male chere, to make ill cheer, to frown upon. See Cheer. ¶ See my Note; Phil. Soc. Trans., 1902. Der. jeer, sb., Oth. iv. 1. 83.

JEHOVAH, the chief Hebrew name of the Deity. (Heb.) In Exod. vi. 3.—Heb. yahōvāh, or more correctly yhw̄h (not pronounced); see article on Jehovah in the Concise Dict. of the Bible.

JEJUNE, hungry, meagre, empty. (L.) 'We discourse jejunely, and falsely, and unprofitably;' Bp. Taylor, pref. to Great Exemplar.—L. iēiūnus, fasting, hungry, dry, barren, trifling, poor. Of uncertain origin. Der. jejunely, jejuneness.

JELLY, anything gelatinous, the juice of fruit boiled with sugar. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, i. 2. 205. ME. Iely; Lydgate, Hors. Shepe, and Goos; l. 70. Hence geli-cloth; Earl of Derby's Expeditions (Camd. Soc.), p. 234. Sometimes spelt gelly.—F. gelée, 'a frost, also gelly'; Cot. Properly the fem. form of gelé, frozen, pp. of geler, 'to freeze, to thicken or congeal with cold'; Cot.—L. gelāre, to congeal.—L. gelu, frost. See Gelatine, Gelid, Congel. Der. jelly-fish.

JEMADAR, a native officer in a sepoy regiment. (Hind.—Arab. and Pers.) See Yule.—Hind. jama'dār, a jemadar.—Arab. jama'at, a body of men (from Arab. root jama'a, he collected); and Pers. dār, a holder, master. See N. E. D.; and Rich. Dict., pp. 518, 646.

JENNET, GENNET, a small Spanish horse. (F.—Span.—Arab.) Jennets; Shak. Oth. i. 1. 113. 'A breeding jennet;' Shak. Venus, 260. 'We have xx. thousande of other mounted on genettes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 236. 'Jennettes of Spayne;' Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 749.—MF. genette, 'a genet, or Spanish horse'; Cot.—Span. ginete, a nag; but the orig. sense was a horse-soldier, esp. a light-armed horse-soldier. Minshew (1623) has: 'ginete, a light horseman that rideth a la gineta;' also 'cavalgar a la Gineta, to ride with the legs trussed up in short stirrups, with a target and a ginnet lance.' Of Moorish origin. The word is traced by Dozy (Glos. p. 276) to Arab. zenāta, a tribe of Barbary celebrated for its cavalry; see Devic, Supp. to Littré.

JENNETING, an early apple. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) 'In July come . . . plumes in fruit, ginnittings, quadlins;' Bacon, Essay 46, Of Gardens. 'Contrariwise, pomgranat-trees, fig-trees, and apple-trees, liue a very short time; and of these, the hastie kind or ienittings, continue nothing so large as those that bear and ripen later;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 44. So called because they were ripe about St. John's day (June 24) in France and Italy; but in England sometimes later. See Hogg's Fruit Annual, pp. 361, 522. Cf. pere-

Ionettes [Jeannot pears] in P. Plowman, C. xiii. 221, and the note. Sometimes spelt geniton (N. E. D.).—F. Jeannoton, Jeannot; from Jean, John. Cotgrave has: 'Pomme de S. Jean, or Hastivel, a soon ripe apple called the St. John's apple.' Cf. G. Johannisapfel, 'John apple, geniting'; Flügel. See JACK (1). ¶ Commonly said to be a corruption of June-eating apples!

JEOPARDY, hazard, peril, danger. (F.—L.) ME. jupartie, later ieopardy or jeopardy. 'Hath lost his owen good thurgh jupartye;' Chaucer, C. T. 16211 (G 743). The various readings in this line are Iupartie, Iopardy, Iopardye, and Iepardye. Spelt Iupartye, Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 465. The original sense was a game in which the chances are even, a game of hazard, hence hazard or chance; as in: 'To putte that sikernes in jupartye=to put in hazard that which is secure; Troil. iv. 1512.—OF. jeu parti, lit. a divided game. 'A jeu parti is properly a game, in which the chances are exactly even. See Froissart, v. i. c. 234; Ils n'estoient pas à jeu parti contre les François (= for they were unequal in numbers to the French) (Johnes' translation)]: and vol. ii. c. 9, si nous les voyons à jeu parti. From hence it signifies anything uncertain or hazardous. In the old French poetry, the discussion of a problem, where much might be said on both sides, was called a jeu parti. See Poesies du Roy de Navarre, chanson xlviii.—Tyrwhitt's note to Chaucer, C. T. 16211.—Late L. iocus partitus, an alternative, a phrase used when a choice was given, of choosing one side or the other; see Ducange.—L. iocus, a joke, jest, sport, play, game; and partitus, divided, pp. of partiri, to part, from part-, stem of pars, a part. See JOKE and PART. Der. jeopard, to hazard (coined by dropping -y), Judges, v. 18, ME. Iuparten, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1566; jeopardise, vb.; also jeopard-ous, spelt ieopardeous in Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 25, § 10; jeopardous-ly. ¶ Observe the AF. diphthong eo, representing the F. eu.

JERBOA, a small rodent quadruped. (Arabic.) Mentioned in an E. translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. The animal takes its name from the strong muscles in its hind legs.—Arab. yarbū, '(1) the flesh of the back or loins, an oblique descending muscle; (2) the jerboa, an animal much resembling the dormouse, which makes prodigious bounds by means of its long hind legs; see Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, by Russell; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1705, col. 2.

JEREED, JERID, a wooden javelin, used in a game. (Arab.) 'The hurl'd on high jereed;' Byron, Giaour, ix.—Arab. jarid, a palm-branch stripped of its leaves, a lance. Rich. Dict., p. 505.

JERK, to give a sudden movement, throw with a quick action. (E.) Cotgrave has: 'Fouetter, to scourge, lash, yerke, or jerke.' In Shak. as a sb., L. L. L. iv. 2. 129. 'A ierk, verber;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'With that which jerks [lashes] the hams of every jade;' Bp. Hall, Satires, b. iii. sat. 5, l. 26. Lowland Sc. yerke, to beat, strike smartly; a smart blow. 'To jerke or gerke;' Minshew, ed. 1627. 'A girke or yerke of a rod or whip;' Minshew's Span. Dict. (E. index). Halliwell also gives: 'Girk, a rod; also, to beat.'

β. Another form is jert. Cotgrave has: 'Attainte, a reach, hit, blow, stroke, . . . a gentle nip, quip, or jert, a sleight gird, or taxation.'

γ. Moreover, the words jert and gird were regarded as equivalent; thus Sherwood has, in his index to Cotgrave: 'A jert or gird, Attainte.' The words jerke, jert, and gird are probably all connected, and all had once the same meaning, viz. to strike, esp. with a whip or rod. δ. The only one of these three forms found in ME. is gurden, girden, to strike; see gurden in Stratmann. See GIRD (2). ¶ It may be added that the usual meaning of jerke in old authors is to whip, to lash; as partly shown above. Der. jerke, sb.

JERKED BEEF, dried beef. (Peruvian.) The beef thus called is cut into thin slices and dried in the sun to preserve it. The process is explained in Capt. Basil Hall's Extracts from a Journal written on the coasts of Chili, Peru, and Mexico, vol. i. c. 4. The name is a singular corruption of ccharqui, the S. American name for it, which is a Peruvian word. 'The male deer and some of the coarser kind of the Peruvian sheep were slaughtered; . . . and their flesh, cut into thin slices, was distributed among the people, who converted it into charqui, the dried meat of the country;' Prescott, Conquest of Peru, c. v. β. An earlier form is jerkin beef. 'Their fish and flesh they boyle . . . or broyle . . .; or else . . . putting it on a spit, they turne first the one side, then the other, till it be as drie as their ierkin beefe in the West Indies;' Capt. J. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 63.—Peruv. ccharquini, to make jerked (or hung) beef. Cf. Peruv. ccharqui, sb., a slice of flesh or hung beef or dried beef. Still common in the form charqui, sb., dried flesh, unsalted, in long strips; Granada, Vocabulario Rioplatense. See my Notes on Eng. Etym., p. 343.

JERKIN, a jacket, short coat. (Low G.) 'With Dutchkin dublets, and with Ierkins iaggde;' Gascoigne, Steel Glass, l. 1161 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat). Similar forms are Westphal. jürken, a kind of overcoat; EFries. jürken, a child's frock. The origin is unknown; but perhaps it is from some name. Thus under EFries. Djüre, Koolman notes that EFries. Djurko, Diurko is their form of Du. Dirk (G. Dietrich, Theodoric), whence also the surnames Djurken and Jurken. Jerkin may represent Djurken, whilst the forms jürken, jürken (above) may come from Jurken; so also may the late Du. jurk, a frock (Sewel). β. I prefer the solution suggested by Berg-haus; that Low G. Juri is a pet name for George, and that it also takes the dimin. form Jürgen, and in Hamburg Jürken; cf. OF. Georget, a sort of casaque (Godfrey). And cf. E. jacket (Athenæum, Jan. 10, 1903); Phil. Soc. Trans., 1903, p. 153.

JERSEY, fine wool, a woollen jacket. (Jersey.) 'Jersey, the finest wooll taken from other sorts of wooll, by combing it;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Lit. 'Jersey wool,' and named from Jersey, one of the Channel islands. On the termination -ey, meaning 'island,' see ISLAND. Of Scand. origin.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE, a kind of sunflower. (Ital.—L.) 'There is a soup called Palestine soup. It is made, I believe, of artichokes called Jerusalem artichokes, but the Jerusalem artichoke is so called from a mere misunderstanding. The artichoke, being a kind of sun-flower, was called in Italian girasole, from the Latin gyrus, circle, and sol, sun. Hence Jerusalem artichokes and Palestine soups!' Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th ed. ii. 404.—Ital. girasole, a sun-flower.—Ital. girare, to turn; and sole, sun.—L. gýrāre, to turn round, from gýrus (= Gk. γῦρος), a circle; and sōlem, acc. of sōl, sun. See GYRE and SOLAR.

JESSAMINE, the same as JASMINE, q. v.

JESSES, straps of leather or silk, with which hawks were tied by the legs. (F.—L.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 261. 'That like an hauke, which feeling herselfe freed From bels and jesses which did let her flight;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 4. 19. 'Jesses for a hauke, get;' Palsgrave. ME. ges, both s. and pl. 'Me ofhalt thane uogel be the ges,' one restrains the bird by the jess; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 254. 'Gesse made of leder' [leather]; Book of St. Albans, fol. b 5, back.—OF. ges, gies, nom., get, giet, acc.; pl. ges, gies (Godefroy, s. v. giet); MF. jects, pl. 'Gect, a cast or throw, as at dice; les jects d'un oyseau, a hawkes Jesses;' Cot. So called from their use in letting the hawk fly.—L. iactus, nom., a cast, throw (acc. iactum).—L. iactus, pp. of iacere, to throw. Cf. also OF. jeter, MF. jecter, 'to cast, hurl'; id. —L. iactāre, to hurl, throw, frequentative of iacere, to throw. See JET (1).

JEST, a joke, fun. (F.—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 241. Orig. a story, tale. ME. geste, a story, a form of composition in which tales were recited. 'Lat see wher [whether] thou canst tellen aught in geste;' Chaucer, C. T. 13861 (B 212). 'I cannot geste'=I cannot tell tales like a gestour, or professed tale-teller; id. 17354 (I 43). Geste=a tale, a saying; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 277.—OF. geste, an exploit, a history of exploits, romance, tale; chansons de geste, heroic poems; see Burguy.—L. gesta, used for rēs gesta, a deed, exploit, lit. 'a thing performed'; or from L. gesta, neut. pl.—L. gestus, pp. of gerere, to carry on, do, perform. See GESTURE. Der. jest, vb., jest-ing-ly; also jest-er=ME. gestour, a reciter of tales, as in: 'And gestours for to tellen tales,' Chaucer, C. T. 13775 (B 2036). From L. gerere are also formed gest-ure, gest-i-cu-late, con-gest-ion, di-gest, in-di-gest-ion, sug-gest, re-gist-er; also belli-ger-ent, con-ger-ies, ex-ag-ger-ate.

JESUIT, one of the Society of Jesus. (F.—Span.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) In Cotgrave. The order was founded in 1534 by Ignatius Loyola; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates.—MF. jesuite, 'a Jesuite'; Cot.—Span. Jesuita (the order being of Spanish foundation). Formed with suffix -ita (=L. ita as in L. erēm-ita=Gk. -ιτης as in ἐρημίτης, a hermit) from L. Iēsū-, for Iēsūs, q. v. Der. jesuit-ic, jesuit-ic-al, jesuit-ic-al-ly, jesuit-ism; all words with a sinister meaning, craft being commonly attributed to the Jesuits.

JESUS, the Saviour of mankind. (L.—Gk.—Heb.) In Wyclif's Bible.—L. Iēsūs (Vulgate).—Gk. Ἰησοῦς.—Heb. Yēshū'a (Jeshua, Nehem. viii. 17, a later form of Joshua); contracted form of Yehō-shū'a (Jehoshua, Numb. xiii. 16), signifying 'Jehovah is salvation' or 'Saviour.'—Heb. root yāsha', to be large; in the Hiphil conjugation, to save. Der. Jesuit, q. v. Doublets, Joshua, Jeshua, Jehoshua. In ME. commonly written in a contracted form (Ihs), which by editors is often printed Jhesus. This is really an error, the h standing for the Gk. H (long ē), so that 'Ihs'=Iēsus. So also 'Ihū'=Iēsu. In Gk. capitals, it is IHC, where H=long ē and C=s, being a form of the Gk. sigma; the mark above signifying that the form is contracted. In later times IHC became IHS. Lastly (the H being misunderstood) the ingenious fiction arose that IHS meant Iesus Hominum Salvator=Jesus Saviour of Men. The mark, being then unmeaning, was turned into a little cross, as on modern altar-cloths.

JET (1), to throw out, fling about, spout. (F.—L.) In Tudor-English it commonly means to fling about the body, to strut about, to stalk about proudly. 'How he jets under his advanced plumes;' Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 36. 'Then must ye stately goe, ietting vp and downe;'

Ralph Roister Doister, A. iii. sc. 3. l. 121 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat). ME. getten, ietten; see Prompt. Parv. pp. 192, 258, and Way's notes; also Hoccleve, De Regimine Principum, 428. 'I iette, I make a countenance with my legges, ie me iamboye; I iette with facyon and countenance to sette forth the myselfe, ie braggue;' Palsgrave. — OF. jetter, also getter, 'to cast, hurl, throw, fling, dart or send out violently, put or push forth'; Cot. — L. iactare, to fling, frequent. of iacere, to throw; whence iactare sē, to boast. Der. jet, sb., ME. get, in early use in the sense of 'fashion'; cf. 'Get, or maner of custome, Modus, consuetudo,' Prompt. Parv.; 'al of the newe Iet' = all in the new fashion, Chaucer, C. T. 684 (A 682); this answers to OF. iet or get (mod. F. jet), which Cot. explains by 'a cast or throw, as at dice.' [The mod. sense of jet is a spout of water, as in Pope, Dunciad, ii. 177.] Hence also jetteau, Spectator, no. 412, for Ital. getto, a jet, by confusion with F. jet d'eau = a spout of water, a fountain (where F. eau = L. agua, water). Also jet-sam, q. v., jett-y, q. v. From L. iacere (pp. iactus) are numerous derivatives; as, ab-ject, ad-ject-ive, con-ject-ure, de-ject, e-ject, in-ject, inter-ject-ion, ob-ject, pro-ject, re-ject, sub-ject; also ad-jac-ent, circum-jac-ent, sub-jac-ent, e-jac-ula-tie; also amice (1), agistment, gist, joist, jesses.

JET (2), a black mineral, used for ornaments. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'His bille was blak, and as the Iet it shoon'; Chaucer, C. T. 14867 (B 4051). — OF. iaiet (Hatzfeld, s. v. jais), iaiet (Godefroy); MF. jet, jaet, 'jet'; Cot. — L. gagātem, acc. of gagātēs, jet (whence the forms gayet, jaet, jet in successive order of development); see Trevisa, ii. 17, where the L. has gagates, Trevisa has gagates, and the later E. version has iette. Described in Pliny, xxxvi. 19. — Gk. γαγάρης, jet; so called from Γάγας, a town in Lycia, in the S. of Asia Minor. Der. jet-black; jett-y, Chapman, tr. of Homer, II. ii. 629; jett-i-ness.

JETSAM, JETSON, JETTISON, things thrown overboard from a ship. (F. — L.) 'Jetson is a thing cast out of the ship, being in danger of wreck, and beaten to the shore by the waters, or cast on the shore by mariners; Coke, vol. vi. fol. 106. a'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674 (s. v. flotson); jetson, in Minshew. — AF. getesone, Black Book of the Admiralty, i. 96, 170; OF. getaison (Godefroy). — L. iactationem, acc., a casting. — L. iactare, to cast out. Cf. F. faire le iet, to throw the lading of a ship overboard; Cot. See Jet (1).

JETTY, a projection, a kind of pier. (F. — L.) Lit. 'thrown out.' ME. gettey; Lydgate, Troy-book, fol. N 1, back, col. 2, l. 2 (bk. ii. c. 21). The same as Jutty, q. v. — OF. getee, MF. jettée, 'a cast, hurle, throw, fling, also a jetty or jutty; also, the bank of a ditch, or the earth cast out of it when it is made'; Cot. Properly the fem. of the pp. of OF. geter, F. jeter, to throw. See Jet (1).

JEW, a Hebrew. (F. — L. — Gk. — Heb.) ME. Iewes, pl. Jews; Chaucer, C. T. 12409 (C 475); earlier, Giwes, Giws, Ancren Riwele, p. 106. — AF. Ieu, Geu, a Jew; F. juif; Cotgrave. — Late L. Iūdæum, acc. of Iūdæus. — Gk. Ἰουδαῖος, an inhabitant of Judæa. — Gk. Ἰουδαία, Judæa. — Heb. Yehūdāh, Judah, son of Jacob; lit. 'celebrated' or 'illustrious.' — Heb. root yādāh, to throw; in the Hithpiel conjugation, to praise, celebrate. Der. Jew-ess (with F. suffix); Jew-ish; Jew-ry, ME. Iewerie, Chaucer, C. T. 13419 (B 1679), earlier Giwerie, Ancren Riwele, p. 394, signifying 'a Jew's district,' from OF. juerie (Littré) = mod. F. juiverie. Also Jews-harp, Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 665, l. 21, sometimes called Jews-trump, as in Beaum. and Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, A. v. sc. 2. l. 10; a name given in derision, prob. with reference to the harp of David.

JEWEL, a precious stone, valuable ornament. (F. — L.) ME. iowel, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 112, l. 6; iuel, id. p. 77, l. 1. — AF. iuel, iouel; OF. joiel, joel, jouel (Godefroy); later joyau, 'a jewel'; Cot. Origin disputed; either (1) from Late L. iocāle, usually in pl. iocālia, jewels (lit. trinkets), from L. iocāri, to play (OF. joer, jouer). — L. iocus, play; see Joke. Or (2) a dimin. (with suffix -el) of OF. and F. joie, joy, pleasure; so that the sense is 'a little joy,' i. e. a toy, trinket. Cf. Span. joyel, a jewel, trinket, dimin. of joya, a jewel, present (answering in form to F. joie, though not used in same sense). Also Ital. giojello, a jewel, dimin. of gioja, (1) joy, (2) a jewel. See further under Joy. The use of Span. joya and Ital. gioja in the sense of 'jewel' supports the latter etymology; hence some think that the word was misunderstood in the middle ages, so that 'jewel' was translated into Late L. in the form iocāle, preserving the sense of 'toy,' but missing the etymology, which was thought to be from L. iocus instead of from gaudium, the sense of the two words being not very different. See Toynbee, §§ 76, 143; Körting, §§ 4188, 5182. Der. jewell-er, with which cf. MF. joyallier, a 'jeweller'; Cot.; jewell-er-y or jewel-ry, with which cf. MF. joyaulerie, 'jewelling, the trade or mystery of jewelling,' Cot.

JIB (1), the foremost sail of a ship. (Du.) 'Jib, the foremost sail of a ship'; Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. First, spelt gibb, in 1661. Perhaps so called because readily shifted from side to side; the sb. being derived from the verb. See Jib (2). Der. jib-boom (Ash).

JIB (2), to shift a sail from side to side. (Du.) 'Jib, to shift the boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other'; Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'To jib round the sail'; Cook, Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 3 (R.). Also spelt jibe. 'Jibing, shifting the boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other (Falconer)'; id. Also spelt gybe. 'Gybing, the act of shifting the boom-sail, &c.; id.; cf. Dan. gibbe, 'to gybe, a naut. term'; Ferrall (from E. or Du.). — Du. gijpen (of sails), to turn suddenly; Calisch. Sewel gives: 'Gypen, 't overslaan der zeylen [the overturning of a sail] a sail's being turned over by an eddy wind.' Cf. Jutland gippe, to shift the sails; Swed. dial. gippa, verb, used of a sudden movement or jerk; thus, if a man stands on the lower end of a slanting plank, and a sudden weight falls on the upper end and tips it up, he is gippad, i. e. jerked up; Reitz. Cf. Swed. guppa, to move up and down, to rock. And see Gibbet.

JIB (3), to move restively, as a horse. (F. — Scand.) 'Jib, said of a draught-horse that goes backwards instead of forwards'; Halliwell. A very early use of a compound from this verb occurs in ME. regibben, to kick. 'Hit regibbeth anon, ase uet kelf and idel' = it kicks back again, like a fat and idle calf; Ancren Riwele, p. 138. Cf. 'Wynsyng of an horse, regibement'; Palsgrave. — OF. giber, 'se débattre des pieds et des mains, s'agiter, lutter,' i. e. to struggle with the hands and feet, Roquefort; giber, to shake (Godefroy). Whence OF. regiber (Roquefort), mod. F. regimber, to kick; accounting for the ME. regibben. Cf. also OF. giper, to kick (as a horse); Godefroy; Burgundy gipai, to gambol (Mignard). β. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. gippa, to jerk. See Jib (2).

JIBBAH, the same as Jubbah. (Arab.) See Jupon.

JIBE, the same as Gibe, q. v. (Scand.)

JIG, a lively tune or dance. (F. — MHG.) As sb. in Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 77; Hamlet, ii. 2. 522. As vb., Hamlet, iii. 1. 150. — OF. gige, gigue, a sort of wind instrument, a kind of dance (Roquefort); but it was rather a stringed instrument, as noted by Littré and Burguy; which may be verified by consulting Dante's use of the Ital. giga in Paradiso, xiv. 118. Cf. Norm. dial. giguer, to dance (Moisy); Span. giga, a jig, lively tune or dance; Port. giga, a jig; Ital. giga, 'a fiddle, a croud, a kit, a violin' (Florio). — MHG. gige, mod. G. geige, a fiddle. Der. jig, verb, jig-maker, Hamlet, iii. 2. 131. Doublet, gig, q. v.

JILT, a flirt, inconstant woman. (L.) 'Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt'; Otway, The Orphan, i. 1. 66. 'And who is jilted for another's sake'; Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 530. A contraction of jillet. 'A jillet brak his heart at last'; Burns, On a Scotch Bard, Gone to the W. Indies, st. 6. A diminutive (with suffix -et) of jill, a personal name, but used in the same sense as jilt or flirt. Hence the compounds flirt-gill, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; and flirt-Gillian, Beaum. and Fletcher, The Chances, iii. 1 (Landlady). Cf. 'Bagasse, a baggage, queane, jyll, punke, flirt'; Cot. Gill is short for Gillian, i. e. Juliana; see Gill (4). See Gillott, Gillett, in Bardsley, Dict. of Surnames. Der. jilt, verb.

JINGLE, to make a clinking sound. (E.) ME. gingelen, ginglen; Chaucer, C. T. 170. A frequentative verb from the base jing, by-form of prov. E. jink, to chink, to jingle, allied to and probably the same word as chink, a word of imitative origin; see Chink (2). A fuller form appears in jangle; hence Palsgrave has gyngle-geangle; see Jangle. Der. jingle, sb.

JINN, a demon. (Arab.) Formed from the Arab. pl. jinna(t), demons; so that the form is properly a plural. The Arab. sing. is jinnī, jinniy, which is Englished as jinnee or (more frequently) as genie (as if connected with L. genius).

JINRIKSHA, a light two-wheeled vehicle drawn by one or more men. (Japan.) See Jennyrickshaw in Yule. — Japan. jinrikisha; from jin, a man; riki, strength; and sha, a car. 'A car drawn by strength of man.'

JOB (1), to peck with the beak, as a bird. (E.?) 'Becquade, a pecke, job, or bob with a beake'; Cot. 'Iobbyn wythe the bylle' = to job with the beak; Prompt. Parv. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. chop, dab, bob. Cf. Irish and Gael. gob, the beak or bill of a bird.

JOB (2), a small piece of work. (F. — C.?) In Pope, Epilogue to Satires, i. 104; ii. 40; Donne versified, Sat. iv. 142. He also has the verb: 'And judges job,' Moral Essays, to Bathurst, 141. Spelt jobb in Kersey, ed. 1715. First in 1627. It seems to be equivalent to gob. 'Gob, a portion, a lump; hence the phrase, to work by the gob.' Halliwell. Dimin. forms are seen in: 'Gobbet, a morsel, a bit; a large block of stone is still called a gobbet by workmen'; Halliwell. 'Jobbel, Jobbet, a small load, generally of hay or straw, Oxfordshire'; id. And see E. D. D. β. In earlier authors, only gobbet is found; ME. gobet, Chaucer, C. T. 698. — OF. gob, lit. a mouthful. 'L'avalla tout de gob, at one gulpe, or as one gobbet, he swallowed it'; Cot. Cf. gober, 'to ravine, devoure, swallow great morsels, let downe whole gobbets'; Cot. Of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. and Irish gob, the bill or beak of a bird, also, ludicrously, the mouth. See Gobbet, and Job (1). Der. job, verb; jobb-er, jobb-er-y.

JOCKEY, a man who rides a race-horse. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) 'As jockies use;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. i. l. 6 from end. 'Whose jockey-rider is all spurs;' id. pt. iii. c. ii. last line. A Northern E. pronunciation of Jackey, dimin. of Jack as a personal name; see Jack (1). A name given to the lads who act as grooms and riders. Jocky, for Jack, occurs in Skelton, Works, ed. Dyce, i. 185, l. 91. Der. jockey, verb; jockey-ism, jockey-ship.

JOCOSE, merry. (L.) Jocose is in Kersey, ed. 1715. Jocosity, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. —L. iocōsus, sportive. —L. iocus, a joke, sport. See Joke. Der. jocose-ly, jocos-i-ty.

JOCULAR, droll. (L.) 'My name is Johphiel, . . . An airy jocular spirit;' Ben Jonson, Masques, The Fortunate Isles. —L. iocularis, jocular. —L. ioculus, a little jest; dimin. of iocus, a jest; see Joke. And see Juggle. Der. jocular-ly, jocular-i-ty.

JOCUND, merry, pleasant. (F.—L.) ME. ioconde, Iocunde; Chaucer, C. T. 16064 (G 596). —OF. jocond, pleasant, agreeable (Godefroy); Roquefort gives the derived adj. jocondeux, and the derived sb. jocondité. —L. iūcundus, pleasant, agreeable; from L. iūuāre (pt. t. iū-ūi), to help, aid; so that the orig. sense was 'helpful.' See Adjutant. Der. jocund-ly, jocund-i-ty.

JOG, to push slightly, jolt. (E.?) Prob. imitative. Cf. Kentish jock, to jolt, shake; E. D. D. Cooper's Thesaurus (1565) has: 'Succutio, To shake a thyng, to iogge vp.' Not found earlier. De Bo gives the WFlem. djokken, to jolt, to jog, as equivalent to F. choquer, to knock; cf. also Low G. jukkeln, jukkern, to jog on, to ride badly (Berghaus); Norw. and Swed. dial. jukka, to jog up and down in riding. Cf. also E. shog, as used in Hen. V, ii. 1. 47. And see Shock. Der. Hence jog as a neuter verb, to move by jolts, ride roughly, trot, Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 132, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 213; jog-trot; jogg-le, frequentative form.

JOHN DORY, the name of a fish. (F.—L.) John Dory is the vulgar name of the fish also called the dory. It occurs in Todd's Johnson, spelt John Dory, dory, and doree. L. Dory or doree is merely borrowed from the F. dorée, the vulgar F. name of the fish, signifying 'golden' or 'gilded,' from its yellow colour. Dorée is the fem. of the pp. of the verb dorer, to gild. —L. deaurāre, to gild, lit. 'cover with gold.' —L. dē, prep. of, with; and aurum, gold. See Aureate. 2. The prefix John is nothing but the ordinary name; cf. jack-ass. It is usually explained as a corruption of F. jaune, yellow; but there is no reason why Englishmen should have prefixed this F. epithet, nor why Frenchmen should use such a tautological expression as jaune dorée. This suggested corruption is not a 'well-known fact,' but given as a mere guess in Todd's Johnson. 3. In fact, the prefixing of the name John was due to the popularity of an extremely well-known ballad, entitled John Dory, pr. in 1609; see Ritson's Anc. Songs. It is alluded to in Beaum. and Fletcher, The Chances, A. iii. sc. 2. See Nares.

JOIN, to connect, unite, annex. (F.—L.) ME. ioynen, ioignen; P. Plowman, B. ii. 136; A. ii. 106. —OF. joign-, pr. pl. stem of joindre, to join. —L. iungere, pp. iunctus, to join (base iug-). —✓YEUQ, to join; cf. Skt. yuj, to join, connect; also Gk. ζεύωμαι, to join, yoke. From the same root is E. yoke; see Yoke. Der. join-er, Sir T. More, Works, p. 345 d; join-e-ry; joind-er (from F. joindre), Tw. Nt. v. 160; and see joint, junct-ure, junct-ion, junia. From F. joindre we also have ad-join, con-join, dis-join, en-join, re-join, sub-join. From L. iungere (pp. iunct-us) we have ad-junct, con-junct-ure, con-junct-ion, dis-junct-ion, in-junct-ion, sub-junct-ive; whilst the L. base iug- appears in con-jug-al, con-jug-ate, sub-jug-ate, jug-ul-ar.

JOINT, a place where things are joined, a hinge, seam. (F.—L.) ME. ioynt, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 175, C. xx. 142; 'out of ioynthe;' id. C. x. 215. —F. joint, 'a joint, joining;' Cot. —OF. joint, pp. of joindre, to join; see Join. Der. joint, adj. (from the pp.); joint-ly, joint-stock; joint, verb, Ant. and Cleop. i. 2. 96; joint-ure, Merry Wives, iii. 4. 50, from MF. joincture, 'a joining, coupling, yoking together' (Cot.), from L. iunctūra, from the pp. stem of iungere, to join; joint-ress (short for joint-ur-ess), Hamlet, i. 2. 9.

JOIST, one of a set of timbers which support the boards of a floor. (F.—L.) Sometimes called jist (with i as in Christ); and vulgarly jice, riming with mice. 'They were fayne to lay pavesses [large shields] and targes on the joystes of the bridle to passe over;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 415 (R.). ME. giste, gyste. 'Gyste, balke, Trabes;' Prompt. Parv. p. 196. 'The gistes;' Wright's Vocab. i. 170 (Walter de Bibbesworth). 'Gyst that gothe over the florthe, solue, giste;' Palsgrave. —OF. giste, 'a bed, couch, lodging, place to lie on' (Cot.); also a joist, as in Palsgrave; mod. F. gîte. So called because these timbers form a support for the floor to lie on. —OF. gesir, to lie, lie on. See Gist, which is related. Der. joist, verb.

JOKE, a jest, something mirthful. (L.) 'Joking decides great things;' Milton, tr. of Horace (in Minor Poems). —L. iocus, 'a joke, jest.' Cf. OF. joquer; in Ducange, s. v. Iocare. Brugmann, i. § 302.

Der. joke, vb.; and see joc-ose, joc-ul-ar. The Du. jok, a joke, is merely borrowed (like the E. word) from Latin.

JOLE, another form of Jowl, q. v. (E.)

JOLLY, merry, plump. (F.—Scand. or L.) ME. Ioly, ioly, iolli, Chaucer, C. T. 3263. He also has iolily, id. 4368 (A 4370); iolinesse, id. 10603 (F 289); iolitee, id. 10592 (F 278). The older form is Iolif or iolif; King Alisaunder, l. 155. —OF. jolif, later joli, 'jolly, gay, trim, fine, gallant, neat;' Cot. β. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'festive.' —Icel. jöl, Yule, a great feast in the heathen time; see jöl in Icel. Dict. See Yule. γ. But this solution is by no means certain. Perhaps from Late L. **gaudivus*, joyful; from gaudium, joy, gaudere, to rejoice (P. Meyer). Der. jolli-ly, jolli-ty, jolli-ness.

JOLLY-BOAT, a small boat belonging to a ship. (Scand.) In Todd's Johnson. Apparently, the element jolly is the adj. above, but this may have been substituted for Dan. jolle, a yawl, jolly-boat; Swed. julle, a yawl; cf. Du. jol, a yawl, skiff. See Yawl. Boat is then a needless addition, due to the corruption into the E. adj. jolly. β. Perhaps suggested by jolywat, which seems to have been a sort of boat. 'Grete boat and jolywat;' Naval Accts. of Hen. VII (1896), p. 181. And this is (doubtfully) derived from Port. galeota, a galliot; see Gallevat in Yule; and see Galliot.

JOLT, to shake violently, to jerk. (E.) Formerly also joult. Cotgrave explains F. heurtade as 'a shock, knock, jur [jar], jolt, push;' and heurter as 'to knock, push, jur, jolt, strike.' Also found in the comp. jolt-head, a thick-headed fellow, Two Gent. iii. 1. 290; Tam. Shrew, iv. 1. 169. 'Teste de bæuf, a joult-head, jobernoll, loger-head, one whose wit is as little as his head is great;' Cot. In North's Plutarch, p. 133 (R.), or p. 158, ed. 1631, we find some verses containing the word jolt-head, as well as the expression 'this heavy jolting pate,' said of Jupiter, when regarded as a stupid tyrant. β. The frequent association of jolt with head or pate suggests a connexion with joll or jowl in the sense of 'head.' 'Iol, or heed, iolle, Caput;' Prompt. Parv. 'Iolle of a fysshe, teste;' Palsgrave. 'Ther they jollade [beat on the head] Jewes thorowe;' MS. Calig. A. ii. f. 117; cited in Halliwell. 'They may joll horns [knock heads] together;' As You Like It, i. 3. 59. 'How the knave jowls it [viz. a skull] to the ground;' Hamlet, v. 1. 84. 'I jolle one aboute the eares, Ie soufflette;' Palsgrave. Cf. prov. E. jow, jowl, to knock (the head); jollock, to jolt. We may also compare prov. E. jot, to jerk, spelt jotte in Palsgrave. γ. It may be added that jolt seems to have acquired a frequentative sense, 'to knock often,' and was soon used generally of various kinds of jerky knocks. 'He whipped his horses, the coach jolted again;' Rambler, no. 34 (R.). See further under Jowl. Der. jolt, sb.

JONQUIL, a kind of narcissus. (F.—Span.—L.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Accented jonquil, Thomson's Seasons, Spring, 548. —Mod. F. jonquille, a jonquil. So named from its rush-like leaves; whence it is sometimes called Narcissus juncifolius. —Span. junquillo, jonquil. —Span. junco, a rush. —L. iuncus, a rush. See Junket. ¶ So also Ital. giunchiglia, a jonquil; from giuncò, a rush.

JORDAN, a pot, chamber-pot. (L.?—Gk.?—Heb.?) ME. Iordan, Chaucer, C. T. 12239 (C 305); see Tyrwhitt's note. Also Iurdon, Iordeyne; see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note; p. 267. Halliwell explains it as 'a kind of pot or vessel formerly used by physicians and alchemists. It was very much in the form of a soda-water bottle, only the neck was larger, not much smaller than the body of the vessel; &c.' —Late L. iurdānus; as in Prompt. Parv. β. Origin uncertain; but it may very well have been named from the river Jordan (L. Iordānēs, Gk. Ἰορδάνης, Heb. Yardēn, i. e. flowing down). 'We must remember this was the time of the Crusades. It was the custom of all pilgrims who visited the Holy Land to bring back a bottle of water from the Jordan for baptismal purposes. . . . It was thus that Jordan as a surname has arisen. I need not remind students of early records how common is Jordan as a Christian name, such cognomens as 'Jordan de Abingdon' or 'Jordan le Clerc' being of the most familiar occurrence;' Bardsley, Our English Surnames, p. 53. Thus Jordan may be short for 'Jordan-bottle.' Halliwell further explains how the later sense (as in Shakespeare) came about; the bottle being, in course of time, occasionally used for baser purposes. ¶ Not from Dan. or Swed. jord, earth; the adj. from which is jordisk, and means 'terrestrial.'

JOSS, a Chinese figure of a deity. (Port.—L.) 'Critic in jars and josses;' Epilogue to A Jealous Wife, by Colman (1761). Not Chinese; but a corruption of Port. deos, God. Cognate with Span. dios, OF. deus. —L. Deus, God; nom. case. See Deity.

JOSTLE, JUSTLE, to strike or push against. (F.—L.; with E. suffix.) [Not in P. Plowman, as said in R.] 'Thou jostlest nowe too nigh;' Roister Doister, iii. 3. 129 (in Spec. of Eng., ed. Skeat). Formed, with E. frequentative suffix -le, from just or joust; see Joust.

JOT, a tittle. (L.—Gk.—Heb.) In Spenser, Sonnet 57. Spelt

iote in Udall, Prol. to Ephesians, and Phaer's Virgill, Æn. b. xi; see Richardson. Englished from L. iōta, Matt. v. 18 (Vulgate).—Gk. iōta, the name of the Gk. letter ι.—Heb. yōd (י), the smallest letter of the Heb. alphabet. β. Hence also Du. jot, Span. and Ital. jota, a jot, tittle. See the Bible Word-book. Der. jot, verb, in the phr. 'to jot down'=to make a brief note of. ¶ Not the same word as prov. E. jot, to jolt, jog, nudge; which appears as jotte in Palsgrave.

JOURNAL, a day-book, daily newspaper, magazine. (F.—L.) Jurnall, a boke, journal; Palsgrave. Properly an adj., signifying 'daily.' 'His journal greeting;' Meas. for Meas. iv. 3. 92. 'Their journal labours;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 31.—F. journal, adj. 'journal, daily;' Cot.—L. diurnālis, daily; from diēs, a day. See Diurnal, Diary. Der. journal-ism, journal-ist, journal-ist-ic. And see journey, ad-journ. Doublet, diurnal.

JOURNEY, a day's travel, travel, tour. (F.—L.) ME. Iornee, Iournee. It means 'a day's travel' in Chaucer, C. T. 2740 (A 2738). Spelt jurnee, Ancrén Riwlé, p. 352, l. 29.—F. journée, 'a day, or whole day; also . . . a daies worke or labour; a daies journey, or travell;' Cot. β. F. journée answers to Span. jornada, Ital. giornata, Late L. jornāta, a day's work; all formed with the fem. ending of a pp. as if from a verb **jornāre*, from the stem jorn- (<diurn-), which appears in Late L. jorn-āle (=E. journal).—L. diurn-us, daily. See Journal. Der. journey, verb, Rich. III, ii. 2. 146; journeyman, Rich. II, i. 3. 274.

JOUST, JUST, to tilt, encounter on horseback. (F.—L.) ME. Iusten, Iousten; Chaucer, C. T. 96; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 82.—OF. jouster, 'to just, tilt, or tourney;' Cot. (mod. F. jouter). [Cf. Ital. giostrare, Span. justar, to tilt.] β. The orig. sense is merely 'to meet' or 'to approach,' a sense better preserved in OF. adjouster, to set near, to annex; (not E. adjust). [The hostile sense was easily added as in other cases; cf. E. to meet (often in a hostile sense), to encounter, and ME. assemblen, to fight, contend, so common in Barbour's Bruce. So also F. rencontre.]—Late L. iuxiāre, to approach, cause to approach, join; see Ducange.—L. iuxiā, near, close, hard by; whence OF. jouste, 'neer to, hard by;' Cot. γ. The form iuxiā=iug-is-iā, fem. abl. of the superl. form of adj. iug-is, continual; from base iug- of iungere, to join.—✓YEUG, to join; see Join. Brugmann, i. § 760 (1), note 1. Der. joust, sb., ME. Iuste, Iouste, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 74. Also jost-le, q.v.

JOVIAL, mirthful. (F.—L.) In the old astrology, Jupiter was 'the joyfulest star, and of the happiest augury of all;' Trench, Study of Words. 'The heavens, always joyiall,' i.e. propitious, kindly; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 51.—OF. foval, 'joyiall, sanguine, born under the planet Jupiter;' Cot.—L. Iovialis, pertaining to Jupiter.—L. Ioui-, for OLat. Iouis, Jove, only used in later Lat. in the form Iū-piter (cf. Jove-father), Jupiter. β. Again Iouis stands for an older Diouis (cf. Oscan dat. Diuv-ei), allied to diēs, day, and to deus, God; cf. Gk. Διός, gen. case of Ζεύς. See Deity, Tuesday. Brugmann, i. §§ 120, 223. Cf. Skt. div, to shine, whence deva-, a deity, daiva-, divine; also Skt. dyu-, inflectional base of Dyaus. See Max Müller, Lect. on Lang. vol. ii. Der. joyial-ly, joyial-ness, joyial-i-ty.

JOWL, JOLE, the jaw or cheek. (E.) 'Cheek by jowl;' Mids. Nt. Dream, iii. 2. 338. β. A corruption of chowl; cf. cheek and chowl, and cheek for chowl in E. D. D. [We also find chowl in a somewhat different sense. 'The chowl or crop adhering unto the lower side of the bill [of the pelican], and so descending by the throat; a bag or sachel very observable;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 1. § 5. 'His chyn with a chol lollde'=his chin wagged with the hanging flesh beneath it; Piers Ploughman's Crede, l. 224 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat).] γ. There is also a form chaul, meaning (apparently) 'jaw.' 'Bothe his chaul [jowl] and his chynne;' Alisaunder, fragment A, ed. Skeat, 1119 (in App. to Wm. of Palerne). This chaul is a corruption of an older form chavel=chavel. Thus in the Cursor Mundi, l. 7510, when David describes how he slew the lion and the bear, he says: 'I scok þam be þe berdes sua þat I þair chafftes raue in twa'=I shook them by the beards so that I reft their chaps in twain; where other MSS. read chavelis, chaulis, and chawles. So also: 'Chavylbone, or chaul-bone or chawle-bone, Mandibula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 70; and see Way's note, who cites: 'A chafte, a chawylle, a chekebone, maxilla;' and: 'Brancus, a gole, or a chawle.' And again: 'And þat deor to-dede his chafles' (later text, choules)=and the beast opened (?) his jaws; Layamon, 6507.—AS. ceafst, the jaw; pl. ceafstas, jaws, chaps; Grein, i. 157. 'David . . . his ceafstas tō-tær'=David tare asunder the chaps (of the bear); Ælfric on the Old Test.; Liber Regum.—OSax. kaftōs, pl. the jaws. Allied to Icel. kjaptr, the mouth, jaw, esp. of a beast; for **kjaf-tr*; cf. Swed. käft, jaw, Dan. kjæft. The l in AS. ceafst is a mere suffix, and the word must have originated from a Teutonic base **kaf-*. See Chafer. δ. But the connexion of chowl with chaul is doubtful, and the word cannot be said to be satisfactorily solved; see N. E. D.

¶ The change from ch to j is well illustrated by the Norfolk jig-by-jole=cheek by jowl=Ayrshire cheek for chow, cheek by chowl; see E. D. D.

JOY, gladness, happiness. (F.—L.) ME. Ioyè, ioyè (dissyllable), Chaucer, C. T. 1873 (A 1871); earlier, in Ancrén Riwlé, p. 218.—OF. joye, joie, 'joy, mirth;' Cot. Cf. Ital. gioja, joy; Gascon goy.—L. neut. pl. gaudia, which was turned into a fem. sing. as in other cases (see Antiphon); from sing. gaudium, joy.—L. gaudēre, to rejoice. See Gaud. Der. joy, verb, 2 Cor. vii. 13 (A. V.); joy-ful, ME. joiefull, Gower, C. A. i. 191, bk. ii. 931; joy-ful-ly, joy-ful-ness; joy-less, joy-less-ly, joy-less-ness; joy-ous, ME. joy-ous, Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 120, l. 14; joy-ous-ly, joy-ous-ness.

JUBBAH, a kind of tunic. (Arab.) See Jupon.

JUBILATION, a shouting for joy. (L.) In Cotgrave; ME. Iubilacioun, Wyclif, Ps. cl. 5.—F. jubilation, 'a jubilation, exultation;' Cot.—L. iubilatiōem, acc. of iubilatio, a shouting for joy; cf. L. iubilātus, pp. of iubilāre, to shout for joy.—L. iubilum, a shout of joy. β. There is nothing to connect this with the following word; the resemblance is accidental. Nevertheless, the words were confused at an early date. Der. jubil-ant, from pres. pt. of iubilāre.

JUBILEE, a season of great joy. (F.—L.—Heb.) ME. Iubilee, Chaucer, C. T. 7444 (D 1862).—OF. jubilé, 'a jubilee, a year of releasing, liberty, rejoicing;' Cot.—L. iubilaeus, the jubilee, Levit. xxv. 11; masc. of adj. iubilaeus, belonging to the jubilee; Levit. xxv. 28. An alteration of L. **iōbēlaeus* (due to the influence of L. iubilum, a shout of triumph), which is the true rendering of Late Gk. ἰωβηλαῖος, adj. formed from ἰωβηλος, jubilee (Josephus, Antiq. iii. 12. 3).—Heb. yōbēl, a blast of a trumpet, a shout of joy; orig. a blast on a ram's horn. Distinct from the word above.

JUDGE, an arbitrator, one who decides a cause. (F.—L.) ME. Iuge, iuge, Chaucer, C. T. 15931 (G 463).—F. juge, 'a judge;' Cot.—L. iudicem, acc. of iudex, a judge. β. The stem is iū-dic-, and signifies 'one who points out what is law;' from iū-s, law, and dic-āre, to point out, make known. For iūs, see Just. For dicāre, see Indicate. Der. judge, verb, ME. Iugen, iuggen, Rob. of Glouc., p. 345, l. 7082; judge-ship; judg-ment, ME. iugement (three syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 807 (A 805); judgment-day, judgment-seat; and see judicature, judicial, judicious. Also ad-judge, pre-judge.

JUDICATURE, judgment. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave and Palsgrave.—F. judicature, 'judicature;' Cot.—L. iudicātūra, office of a judge; cf. iudicāt-us, pp. of iudicāre, to judge.—L. iudic-, stem of iudex, a judge. See Judge. Der. (from L. iudicāre) judic-able; (like pp. iudicātus), judicat-ive (L. iudicātivus), judicat-or-y (L. iudicātōrius).

JUDICIAL, pertaining to courts of law. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave; and in Wyclif, Nehem. iii. 30.—OF. judiciel, 'judicial;' Cot.—L. iudiciālis, pertaining to courts of law.—L. iudici-, a trial, suit, judgment.—L. iudici-, decl. stem of iudex, a judge. See Judge. Der. judicial-ly; judiciar-y (L. iudiciārius); and see below.

JUDICIOUS, full of judgment, discreet. (F.—L.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 2. 16.—F. judicieux, 'judicious;' Cot.—L. **iudiciōsus*, not found, but regularly formed with suffix -ōsus from L. iudici-, decl. stem of iudex, a judge. Der. judicious-ly, judicious-ness.

JUG, a kind of pitcher. (Heb.) 'A iugge, poculum;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'A iugge to drink in;' Minshew, ed. 1637. Of uncertain origin. Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion is probably right; he connects it with 'Jug or Judge, formerly a familiar equivalent of Joan or Jenny.' In this case, the word is of jocular origin; which is rendered probable by the fact that a drinking-vessel was also called a jack, and that another vessel was called a jill. 'A jacke of leather to drink in;' Minshew. Jack seems to have been the earlier word, and Jill was used in a similar way to go with it. 'Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without;' Tam. of Shrew, iv. 1. 51; on which Steevens remarks that it is 'a play upon the words, which signify two drinking-measures as well as men and maid-servants.' β. The use of Jug or Joan appears in Cotgrave, who gives: 'Jehannette, Jug, or Junny;' and again: 'Jannette, Judge, Jenny, a woman's name.' [How Jug came to be used for Joanna is not very obvious; but pet names are liable to strange confusion. The forms Jug and Judge are more like the Heb. Judith (Gen. xxvi. 34).] Similarly, Wedgwood cites 'Susan, a brown earthenware pitcher,' used in the district of Gower (Philol. Proceedings, iv. 223). Cf. also 'a jack of beer,' Dodsley's O. Plays, ed. Hazlitt, vii. 218, ix. 441. As Jug was a female name, we also find Jug, a mistress, as a term of endearment; id. iv. 183, vi. 511, viii. 400, xii. 115. ¶ The curious word jubbe, in the sense of bottle, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 13000 (B 1260); but Jug can hardly be a corruption of it.

JUGGERNAUT, the name of an Indian idol. (Hindī—Skt.) See Southey, Curse of Kehama, c. xiv; and see Yule.—Hindī Jagan-nātha, vernacularly jagannāth, a name esp. applied to Kṛṣṇa, as worshipped at Puri in Orissa (H. H. Wilson).—Skt. jagannātha, lord of the world.—Skt. jagat, world; nātha, protector, lord.

JUGGLER, one who exercises sleight of hand. (F.—L.) ME. Iogelour, iogelour, Chaucer, C. T. 7049, 10533 (D 1467, F 219). 'Ther saugh I pleyen iogelours, Magiciens, and tregetoures,' Chaucer, Ho. Fame, iii. 169. Spelt juglur, with the sense of 'buffoon,' Ancren Riwe, p. 210, l. 30.—OF. jogleor, jugleor, jougleor (Burguy); later jongleur, with inserted n; hence 'jongleur, a juggler,' Cot.—L. ioculātorem, acc. of ioculātor, a jester.—L. ioculārī, to jest.—L. ioculus, a little jest, dimin. of iocus, a joke; see JOKE. Der. juggler-y, ME. Iogelrie, Chaucer, C. T. 11577 (F 1265). Hence also was developed the verb juggle, formerly iuglen, used by Tyndall, Works, p. 101, col. 2, l. 7 from bottom (see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 169, l. 70, p. 170, l. 101); juggl-ing, juggle, sb.

JUGULAR, pertaining to the side of the neck. (L.) Also jugulary. 'Jugularie, of or belonging to the throat,' Minsheu, ed. 1627. Formed with suffix -ar or -ary (=L. -ārius) from iugul-um or iugul-us, the collar-bone (so called from its joining together the shoulders and neck); also, the hollow part of the neck above the collar-bone; also the throat. Dimin. of iugum, that which joins, a yoke.—✓YEUG, to join. See YOKE.

JUICE, sap, fluid part of animal bodies. (F.—L.) ME. Iuse, iuce; Gower, C. A. ii. 265; bk. v. 4120; spelt Iuys, S. E. Legendary, St. Cuthbert, l. 52.—OF. jus, 'juice, liquor, sap, pottage, broth,' Cot.—L. iūs, broth, soup, sauce, pickle; lit. 'mixture.' + Skt. yūsha-, soup.—✓YEU, to bind, mix; cf. Skt. yu, to bind, join, mix; Gk. ζύν, leaven. Der. juic-y, juice-less, juic-i-ness.

JUJUBE, the fruit of a certain tree. (F.—L.—Gk.—Pers.) The tree is the Rhamnus zizyphus or Rhamnus jujuba. 'Juiubes, or iubeb-fruit,' Minsheu, ed. 1627. See Lanfranc, Cirurgie, p. 74, l. 14.—OF. jujubes, 'the fruit or plum called jujubes,' Cot. A pl. form.—Late L. jujuba (Ital. giugiuiba, Florio); altered form of the pl. of L. zizyphum, the jujube; fruit of the tree zizyphus.—Gk. ζίζυφον, fruit of the tree ζίζυφος.—Pers. zayzafūn, zīzfūn, zīzafūn, the jujube-tree; Rich. Dict. p. 793.

JULEP, a sweet drink, demulcent mixture. (F.—Span.—Arab.—Pers.) 'This cordial julep here,' Milton, Comus, 672. 'Good wine . . . made in a julep with suger,' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 18. See Lanfranc, Cirurgie, p. 76, l. 9.—F. julep, 'a julep, or juleb, a drink made either of distilled waters and syrups mixed together; or of a decoction sweetened with honey and sugar, or else mingled with syrups,' Cot.—Span. julepe, julep.—Arab. julāb, julep; from Pers. gulāb, rose-water, also, julep; Rich. Dict. pp. 512, 1239.—Pers. gul, a rose; and āb, water; id. pp. 1238, 1.

JULY, the name of the seventh month. (F.—L.) Chaucer, Treat. on the Astrolabe, calls the month Iulius, Iuyl, Iuylle; pt. i. § 10. July is from AF. Julie, L. Iūlius, a name given to this month (formerly called Quinctilis) in honour of Caius Julius Cæsar, who was born in this month. Hence the E. form was accented as Jūly (rhyming with newly) as late as in Dr. Johnson's time; cf. 'Then came hot Jūly, boyling like to fire,' Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 36. Now Ju-ly, prob. to distinguish it more clearly from Jūne (N. and Q., 9 S. x. 426). ¶ Quinctilis is from quintus, fifth, because this was formerly the fifth month, when the year began in March. Quintus is from quinque, five; see FIVE.

JUMBLE, to mix together confusedly. (E.) 'I jumbyll, I make a noyse by removynge of heavy thynges. I jumble, as one dothe that can [not] play upon an instrument, je brouille,' Palsgrave. Here it means to make a confused noise. Cf. prov. E. jum, a jolt; whence jumple, jumble, to jolt (frequentative). Of imitative origin. ¶ Chaucer uses the equivalent form jompren. 'Ne jompren eek no discordaunt thing yfere' = do not jumble discordant things together; Troilus, ii. 1037. But Sir T. More uses the word in the sense of 'to mingle harmoniously,' as in: 'Let vs . . . see how diffinicion of the churche and hys heresies will jumper and agree together among themselfe,' Works, p. 612 a. Compare this with the phr. 'to jump together' (=to agree with). Der. jumble, sb.; jumbl-ing-ly.

JUMP (1), to leap, spring, skip. (Scand.?) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 53, and in Palsgrave; but not found earlier. The frequentative form jumper occurs in Sir T. More, and jompren in Chaucer; see quotations s. v. Fumble. Hence the word jump may have been known to our dialects at an earlier date. Cf. Sc. jump (pt. t. jump) in E. D. D. Perhaps it is of Scand. origin. Cf. Jutland jumpe, to be in oscillating motion, also, to jump, spring (Feilberg); allied to Swed. dial. jōmpa, to jog up and down, as in riding (Rietz). Note also Swed. dial. gumpā, to spring, jump, or wag about heavily and clumsily (Rietz); Swed. guppa, to move up and down; Dan. gumpe, to jolt; gimpa, to wriggle (Rietz); Norw. gimpa, to swing oneself about (Ross); Norw. gimpe, to see-saw, gamp, a nag (Larsen). As Rietz remarks, there must have been a strong verb **gimpa*, pt. t.

**gamp*, pp. gumpiun. + MHG. gumpen, to jump; gumpeln, to play the buffoon; gempeln, to jump, dimin. form of prov. G. gampen, to jump, spring, hop, sport; see Schmeller's Bavarian Dict.; cf. MHG. gampelmann, a buffoon, jester, one who plays antics; mod. G. gimpel, a simpleton. But the history of the verb is very obscure. Der. jump, sb., used in the sense of 'lot' or 'hazard,' Anthony, iii. 8. 6. Also jump (2).

JUMP (2), exactly, just, pat. (Scand.?) 'Jump at this dead hour,' Hamlet, i. 1. 65; cf. v. 2. 386; Oth. ii. 3. 392. From the verb above, in the sense to agree or tally, commonly followed by with, but also used without it. 'Both our inventions meet and jump in one,' Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 195. 'They jump not on a just account,' Oth. i. 3. 5. See JUMP (1).

JUNCTION, a joining. (L.) Used by Addison, Spectator, no. 165, § 5: 'Upon the junction of the French and Bavarian armies.' Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from L. iunctionem, acc. of iunctio, a joining; cf. L. iunctus, pp. of iungere, to join. See JOIN.

JUNCTURE, a union, critical moment. (L.) 'Signes workings, planets iunctures, and the eleuated poule' [pole]; Warner, Albion's England, b. v. c. 27. 'Juncture, a joyning or coupling together,' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. iunctūra, a joining; cf. iuncti, stem of pp. of iungere, to join. See JOIN. ¶ The sense of 'critical moment' is probably of astrological origin; cf. the quotation from Warner.

JUNE, the sixth month. (L.) Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10, has Iunius and Iuyn; the latter answering to F. Juin. Englished from L. Iūnius, the name of the sixth month and of a Roman gens or clan.

JUNGLE, country covered with trees and brushwood. (Hind.—Skt.) Not in Johnson; first in 1776 (N. E. D.).—Hind. jangal, wood, jungle (Forbes).—Skt. jañgala-, adj. dry, desert. Hence jungle = waste land. ¶ The Skt. short a is sounded like u in mud; hence the E. spelling. Der. jungl-y.

JUNIOR, younger. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570.—L. iūnior, comparative of iuuenis, young; so that iunior stands for iuuenior. Cf. Skt. yuvan, young. See JUVENILE. Der. junior-ship, junior-i-ty.

JUNIPER, an evergreen shrub. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. Spelt junipere; Spenser, Sonnet 26; ieniper, Palladius on Husbandry, bk. i. l. 397.—L. iūniperus, a juniper-tree. Of doubtful origin. Der. gin (3), q. v.

JUNK (1), a Chinese three-masted vessel. (Port.—Malay.) 'China also, and the great Atlantis, . . . which have now but junks and canoas' [canoes]; Bacon, New Atlantis, ed. 1639, p. 12. Also in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 42, 384.—Port. (and Span.) junko, a junk.—Malay jōng, also ajōng, a junk; Javanese jong. ¶ Not allied, as often said, to Chinese chū'an, 'a ship, boat, bark, junk, or whatever carries people on the water,' Williams, Chinese Dict., 1874, p. 120; unless the Chinese word is borrowed from Malay.

JUNK (2), pieces of old cordage, used for mats and oakum. (Port.—L.) 'Junk, pieces of old rope,' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'Junk, a sea-word for any piece of old cable,' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Port. junko, a rush; (in a ship) the junk; Vieyra's Dict. [As if so called from rush-made ropes; but there is no obvious connexion.]—L. iuncus, a rush. B. Salt meat is also facetiously termed junk by the sailors, because it is as tough as old rope. ¶ Junk, a lump (Halliwell), is a different word, being for chunk, a log of wood; see CHUMP.

JUNKET, a kind of sweetmeat. (F.—Ital.—L.) Also spelt juncate; Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 49. In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 250; Milton, L'Allegro, 102. The orig. sense was a kind of cream-cheese, served up on rushes, whence its name. Also used as a name for various delicacies made of cream. Cf. Iuncade; Voc. 590. 44. 'Milke, crayne, and cruddes, and eke the Ioncate,' I. Russell, Boke of Nurture, l. 93; in Babees Book, p. 124.—MF. joncade, 'a certain spoon-meat, made of cream, rose-water, and sugar,' Cot.—Ital. giuncata, 'a kind of fresh cheese and creame, so called because it is brought to market upon rushes; also a iunket,' Florio. [Cf. MF. jonchée, 'a bundle of rushes; also, a green cheese or fresh cheese made of milk thats curdled without any runnet, and served in a fraile [basket] of green rushes,' Cot.; Norm. dial. jonquette, a junket (Moisy).] Formed as a pp. from Ital. giuncare, 'to strew with rushes,' Florio.—Ital. giunco, a rush.—L. iuncum, acc. of iuncus, a rush. Der. junket, vb., junket-ing, Spectator, no. 466. From the same source, jonquil, q. v., junk (2).

JUNTO, a knot of men, combination, confederacy, faction. (Span.—L.) 'And these to be set on by plot and consultation with a junto of clergymen and licensers,' Milton, Colasterion (R.).

Erroneously used for junta (above); as if from Span. junto, united, conjoined. — L. iunctus, pp. of iungere, to join.

JUPON, a tight-fitting tunic, a skirt. (F.—Arab.) ME. gipoun, Chaucer, C. T. 75; Iupon, Allit. Morte Arthure, 905. — OF. Iupon, gippon, 'a short cassock'; Cot.; also Iuppon. KAFTAN, a Turkish robe. See Caftan.

KAIL, KALE, a cabbage. (North. E.—L.) Kail or kale is the North E. form of cole or cole-wort. Spelt keal in Milton, Apology for Smectymnus (R.). 'Cale, olus'; Cath. Anglicum (1483). ME. caul; AS. cāul, cawel. — L. caulis, a stalk, a cabbage; whence were also borrowed Icel. kāl, Dan. kaal, Swed. kål; see Cole.

KAILS, nine-pins. (O. Low G.) Perhaps obsolete. Formerly also keyles. 'A game call'd nine-pins, or keils'; Ben Jonson, Chloridia. 'Quille, the keel of a ship, also a keyle, a big peg, or pin of wood, used at nine-pins or keyles'; Cotgrave. Spelt kayles; Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 292; caylys, id. ii. 224. Of O. Low Ger. origin; Du. kegel, 'a pin, kail; mid kegels spelen, to play at nine-pins'; Sewel. (It may be observed that kails were shaped like a cone.) Cf. Dan. kegle, a cone; kegler, nine-pins; Swed. kegla, a pin, cone; both borrowed from Low G. + OHG. chegil, G. kegel, a cone, nine-pin, bobbin (whence F. quille). β. Evidently a dimin. form; from a Teut. base **kagil-*. Related to Du. keg, kegge, a wedge; Swed. dial. kage, stubs, stumps.

KALEIDOSCOPE, an optical toy. (Gk.) Modern. Invented by Sir D. Brewster, and named by him in 1817. Coined from Gk. καλ-ός, beautiful, εἶδος, for εἶδος, appearance, and σκοπ-εῖν, to behold, survey. Thus the sense is an instrument for 'beholding beautiful forms.'

KALENDAR, KALENDS; see Calendar, Calends.

KALI, soda-ash; see Alkali.

KANGAROO, the name of a quadruped. (Australian.) 'The kangaroo is one of the latest discoveries in the history of quadrupeds'; tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. 'The animals called by the natives kangooroo or kanguru'; Cook, Journal, Aug. 4, 1770. But the name is no longer in use in the Australian dialects, which change rapidly. See Austral English, by E. E. Morris. Der. kangaroo-rat.

KAVASS, an armed constable. (Turk.—Arab.) Modern. From Turk.-Arabic qawwās, lit. a bowmaker; from Arab. qaws, a bow; Rich. Dict. pp. 1152, 1153.

KAYAK, a light Greenland canoe. (Eskimo.) An Eskimo word; common in all the dialects (N. E. D.).

KAYLES, ninepins; see Kails.

KEDGE (1), to warp a ship. (F.—L.) 'Kedge, to set up the foresail, and to let a ship drive with the tide, lifting up and letting fall the kedge-anchor, as often as occasion serves'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1714. And see the longer description in Todd's Johnson. 'A caggeyng cable'; Naval Accounts, Henry VII, 1485, ed. 1896, p. 12. Allied to cadge, to fasten, to tie, which seems to be a variant of catch. Cf. catch-anchor, under catch, sb. (3), in N. E. D. See Catch. Cf. also: 'let fall a cadge anker'; Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 107 (last line). Der. kedg-er, kedge-anchor. 'Kedge-anchors, or Kedgers, small anchors used in calm weather, and in a slow stream'; Kersey. So called because used to assist in kedging; see Todd's Johnson.

KEDGE (2), KIDGE, cheerful, lively. (E.) 'Kedge, brisk, lively'; Ray's Gloss., ed. 1691; see reprint, ed. Skeat (Eng. Dial. Soc.), pref. p. xviii. Also called kidge (Forby). An East Anglian word. 'Kygge, or ioly, kydge, kyde, jocundus, hillaris, vernosus'; Prompt Parv. Cf. prov. E. cadgy, cheerful; and perhaps Swed. dial. kägg, wanton, kägas, to be eager.

KEEL (1), the bottom of a ship. (Scand.) ME. kele (rare). 'The schippe [Noah's ark] was . . . thrifty cubite high from the cule to the hatches vnder the cabans;' i. e. from the bottom to the hatches; where [instead of cule = bottom, from F. cul] another reading is kele = keel; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 233. Of Scand. origin; answering to Icel. kjöl, Dan. kjøl, Swed. köl, the keel of a ship; Teut. type **keluz*. ¶ Distinct from AS. cēol, a ship, OHG. kiol, MHG. kiel, a ship. But Du. and G. kiel, a keel, are borrowed from Scand. Der. keel-ed, keel-age; also keel-son, q. v. Also keel-haul, q. v.

KEEL (2), to cool. (E.) 'While greasy Joan doth keel the pot;' L. L. L. v. 2. 930. The proper sense is not to scum the pot (though it may sometimes be so used) but to keep it from boiling over by stirring it round and round; orig. merely to cool it or keep it cool. 'Keel, to keep the pot from boiling over;' A Tour to the Caves, 1781; see Eng. Dial. Soc. Gloss. B. 1. 'Faith, Doricus, thy brain boils; keel it, keel it, or all the fat's in the fire;' Marston, [Induction to] What You Will, 1607; in Anc. Drama, ii. 199 (Nares). ME. kelen, to cool, once a common word; see Ormulum, 19584; OEng. Homilies, i. 141; Prompt. Parv., p. 270; Court of Love, 775; Gower, C. A. ii. 360; bk. v. 6908. AS. cēlan, to cool. = AS. cōl, cool; see COOL. ¶ Note the regular change from ō to ē, as in fōt, foot, pl. fēt, feet; so also feed from food, &c.

KEELHAUL. (Du.) Also keelhale, 'to punish in the seaman's way, by dragging the criminal under water on one side of the ship and up again on the other;' Johnson. 'Hawling vnder the keele;' Capt. Smith, Works, p. 790. Formerly called keel-raking (Phillips). A less severe punishment was ducking at the main-yard (Phillips). From keel (1) and hale (2); like Du. kielhalen, G. kielholen. The E. word was imitated from Dutch. See N. E. D.

KEELSON, KELSON, a piece of timber in a ship next to the keel. (Scand.) 'Keelson, the second piece of timber, which lies right over the keel;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Spelt kelsine, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, i. 426. = Swed. kölsvin, the keelson; Dan. kjölsviin; Norweg. kjölsvill (Aasen); whence G. kielschwein, a keelson. β. For the former syllable, see KEEL. The latter syllable wholly agrees, in appearance, with Swed. svin, Dan. sviin, G. schwein, which = E. swine (see SWINE). And such may have been the original sense; for animal names are strangely applied. Perhaps a better sense is given by Norweg. kjölsvill, where svill answers to G. schwelle, E. sill; see SILL. It is not known in which direction the alteration was made.

KEEN, sharp, eager, acute. (E.) ME. kene, Chaucer, C. T. 1968 (A 1966); Havelok, 1832. AS. cēne; Grein, i. 157. Here ē comes from an older ō; the orig. sense is 'knowing' or 'skilful.' + Du. koen, bold, stout, daring; Icel. kænn (for kænn), wise; OHG. chuoni, kuani, MHG. kuene, G. kühn, bold. Teut. type **könjoz*, able, wise; from kōn-, ō-grade of the Teut. root **ken* (✓GEN), to know; see Ken, Can (1). Der. keen-ly, keen-ness, Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 125.

KEEP, to regard, have the care of, guard, maintain, hold, preserve. (E.) ME. kepen, pt. t. kepte, pp. kept; Chaucer, C. T. 514 (or 512). AS. cēpan (weak verb), to keep, guard, observe, heed; also to seize, lay hold of, &c. Teut. **kōpjan*; root unknown; prob. allied to AS. gecōp, fit, suitable. [Distinct from AS. cēpan, variant of cýpan, to buy (see Cheap).] In Ælfric's Homilies, i. 412, we find 'gif he dysigra manna herunga cēpð on arfæstum weorcum' = if he seek after the praises of men in pious works. 'Georne ðaes andagan cēpton' = they earnestly awaited the appointed day; Ælf. Hom. ii. 172. 'Cēpað heora timan' = they observe (or keep) their times; id. ii. 324. Der. keep, sb., keep-er, keep-er-ship; keep-ing, As You Like It, i. 1. 9; also keep-sake, i. e. something which we keep for another's sake, first known in 1790, and added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.

KEG, a small cask or barrel. (Scand.) Formerly also spelt cag. 'Cacque, Caque, a cag;' Cot. And in Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave, we find: 'A kegge, caque; voyez a Cag.' = Icel. kaggi, a keg, cask; Swed. kagge, 'a cag, rundlet, runlet,' Tauchnitz, Swed. Dict.; Norwegian kagge, a keg, a round mass or heap, a big-bellied animal or man (whence prov. E. kedge-bellied, pot-bellied). And see Kails, which is probably related.

KELP, a kind of large sea-weed; hence, the calcined ashes of sea-weed. (E.) Formerly kilp or kilpe. 'As for the reits [sea-weeds] kilpe, tangle, and such like sea-weeds, Nicander saith they are as good as treacle. Sundry sorts there be of these reits, going under the name of Alga;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 6. ME. culp; 'as culpes of the see waggeth with the water;' Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 181. Not found in AS.

KELPIE, in Scotland, a fabulous demon assuming various shapes, usually that of a horse. (C.) 'Be thou a kelpie;' Burns, Let. to Mr. Cunningham, Sept. 10, 1792. And see Brand, Antiq., ed. Ellis, ii. 513; the kelpie is a kind of horse, that makes a bellowing or neighing sound, and browses beside a lake. Prob. from Gael. calpach, colpach, a heifer, bullock, colt; colpa, a cow, a horse; Irish colpach, colpa, a cow, a colt. And perhaps the Gael. word is from Icel. kälfr, a calf (Macbain). See my Notes on E. Etym. p. 150.

KELSON, the same as Keelson, q. v. (Scand.)

KELT, the same as Celt, q. v.

KEMB, to comb. (E.) See Unkempt.

KEN, to know. (Scand.) Not E., but Scand. ME. kennen, to know, discern. 'That kenne myght alle,' that all might know; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 357. = Icel. kenna, to know; Swed. känna; Dan. kjende. + Du. kennen; G. kennen. β. The sense 'to know' is Scand.; but it is not the original sense. The verb is, etymologically, a causal one, signifying to make to know, to teach, show; a sense frequently found in ME. 'Kenne me on Crist to bileue' = teach me to believe in Christ; P. Plowman, B. i. 81. Such is also the sense of AS. cennan, Grein, i. 156; and of Goth. kannjan, to make known, John, xvii. 26. Teut. type **kannjan-*, to make known, causal of the verb which appears as cunnan in AS. and kunnan in Gothic, with the sense 'to know.' For further remarks, see Can (1). Der. ken, sb., Cymb. iii. 6. 6; a coined word, not in early use; kenn-ing, the range of sight, as far as one can see.

KENNEL (1), a house for dogs, pack of hounds. (F.—L.) Properly 'a place for dogs;' hence, the set of dogs themselves. ME. kenel (with one n), Prompt. Parv.; Sir Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1140. = Norm. French **kenil*, answering to OF. chenil, a kennel. β. The Norman form is proved by the k being still preserved in English, and by the Norman F. kenet, a little dog, occurring in a Norman poem cited in Way's note in Prompt. Parv., p. 271, where the ME. kenet also occurs. This kenet is dimin. of a Norman F. ken, answering to Picard kien, OF. chen (Littré), mod. F. chien, a dog. So also in OF. chen-il, the former syllable = the same OF. chen. γ. From Late L. canile, 'domus canis;' Voc. 198. 29. = L. can-, base of canis, a dog; with the termination -ile, occurring in ou-ile, a house or place for sheep, a sheepfold, from ou-is, a sheep; cf. Ital. canile, a kennel. See Canine. Der. kennel, vb.; kennell'd, Shak. Venus, 913.

KENNEL (2), a gutter. (F.—L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 98. A later form of the ME. canel or canell, of which ME. chanell (= mod. E. channel) is a variant with palatalisation. = AF. canel, a channel; in Charlemagne, ed. Michel, l. 556. = L. canālem, acc. of canālis, a canal; hence, a channel or kennel. See Channel, of which kennel is a doublet; also Canal.

KERAMIC, the same as Ceramic, q. v.

KERBSTONE, CURBSTONE, a stone laid so as to form part of the edging of stone or brick-work. (Hybrid; F.—L.; and E.) 'Kerbstone, a stone laid round the brim of a well;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. A phonetic spelling of curbstone; so called from its curbing the stone-work, which it retains in its place. See Curb and Stone.

KERCHIEF, a square piece of cloth used to cover the head; and later, for other purposes. (F.—L.) Better spelt curchief. Spelt kerchiefe in Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 3. 62, iv. 2. 74. ME. couerchef (= coverchef), Chaucer, C. T. 6172 (D 590); also spelt couerchief (= coverchief), id. 455 (A 453). Also kerchef, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 272. = OF. covre-chef, later couvre-chef; cf. 'Couvre-chef, a kerchief;' Cot. = OF. covrir, later couvrir, to cover; and chef, chief, the head, which is from L. caput, the head. See Cover and Chief. ¶ A word of similar formation is curfew, q. v. Der. hand-kerchief, pocket-hand-kerchief.

KERMES, the dried bodies of insects used in dyeing crimson. (Arab.—Skt.) See Crimson.

KERN (1), KERNE, an Irish soldier. (Irish.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 13, 30; v. 7. 17. 'The kearne . . . whom only I tooke to be the proper Irish souldiour;' Spenser, View of the State of Ireland; in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. 640, col. 1. = Irish ceatharn, a troop, but used in the sense of ceatharnach, a (single) soldier; from OIrish ceithern, a troop (Macbain). Cp. L. caterua, a troop. See Cateran. (Stokes-Fick, p. 76).

KERN (2), another spelling of Quern, q. v.

KERNEL, a grain, the substance in the shell of a nut. (E.) ME. kirnel (badly kirnelle), P. Plowman, B. xi. 253; curnel, id. C. xiii. 146. AS. cyrnel, to translate L. grānum; Voc. 138. 22. Formed (with dimin. suffix and vowel-change from Teut. u to y) from AS. corn, grain. Teut. stem. **kurnilo-*. See Corn.

KEROSENE, a lamp-oil made from petroleum. (Gk.) Ill coined from Gk. κηρός, wax; with suffix -ene.

KERSEY, coarse woollen cloth. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 413. 'Carsey cloth, cre-sey;' Palsgrave. 'Pro tribus ulnis de kersey;' Earl of Derby's Expedition, 1390 (Camd. Soc.), p. 89, l. 3. The word is certainly English, and the same word as the personal name Kersey; named from Kersey, 3 miles from Hadleigh, in the S. of Suffolk, where a woollen trade was once carried on. A little weaving still goes on at Hadleigh. The place of the manufacture of kersey is now the North of England, but it was once made in the South (Phillips' Dict.). AS. Cæres-ig, 'Cær's island'; Birch, Cart. Saxon. iii. 603. ¶ The F. carizé, 'kersie' (Cot.), Du. karsaat, Swed. kersing, are all from the E. word.

KERSEYMERE, a twilled cloth of fine wool. (Cashmere.) A modern corrupt spelling of cassimere, an old name for the cloth also called Cashmere. See Cassimere, Cashmere. The corruption is clearly due to confusion with kersey, a coarse cloth of a very different texture.

KESTREL, a base kind of hawk. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 3. 4; spelt castrel, Beaum. and Fletcher, Pilgrim, i. 1; kastril, Ben Jonson, Epicene, iv. 4; see Nares. The t is excrement (as after s in whils-t, amongs-t); it stands for kas'rel, kes'rel, short for casserel, kerserel.—OF. quercerelle, 'a kastrell'; Cot. Also cresserelle, crecerelle, 'a kestrel,' id. Probably for **quercelelle*, the regular dimin. of quercelle, 'a kastrell,' Cot.—L. querquedula, a kind of teal; see Diez and Scheler. Prob. of imitative origin. β. See also, in Cotgrave, the forms cercelle, a teal; cercerelle, a kestrel, teal; crecerelle, a kestrel; mod. F. crécérille. The form cercelle is mod. F. sarcelle; see Littré, under crécelle, crécérille, sarcelle; Diez, under cerceta, the Spanish form. The Ital. tristarello, a kestrel (Florio), represents a form **cristarello*; cf. Burgundian cristel, a kestrel, a form cited by Wedgwood. (See my letter to The Academy, Oct. 7, 1882, p. 262.)

KETCH, a small yacht or hoy. (F.—L.) 'Ketch, a vessel like a hoy, but of a lesser size;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'We stood in for the channel: about noon we saw a sail having but one mast; judged it to be a ketch; but, drawing nearer, found it was a ship in distress, having lost her main and mizen masts;' Randolph's Islands in the Archipelago, 1687, p. 103 (Todd). Formerly also catch; Capt. J. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 51. Supposed to be a particular use of catch, from the verb to catch. See Catch; and see Catch, sb. (2) in N. E. D.

KETCHUP, a sauce. (Malay.) 'Shall I use ketch-up?' W. King, Art of Cookery, let. 8; in Eng. Poets (1810); ix. 252. Spelt ketchup in 1711 (N. E. D.).—Malay kěchup, kichup, a sauce; soy. (In Du. spelling ketjap.) See C. P. G. Scott; Malayan Words in English. Perhaps ult. of Chinese origin; see N. E. D.

KETTLE, a metal vessel for boiling liquids. (Scand.—L.) ME. ketel (with one t). Prompt. Parv.; Wyclif, Levit. xi. 35. As the k is hard, it is prob. from Icel. ketill, a kettle; we find also AS. cetel, AS. Leechdoms, ii. 86; spelt cetil in the Epinal Glossary, 168. Cf. also Du. ketel, G. kessel. The Mæso-Goth. form is katils, occurring in the gen. pl. katilē in Mark, vii. 4 (Gk. χαλκίον, Lat. æramentorum, A. V. 'brazen vessels'). β. Borrowed from L. catillus, a small bowl, also found in the form catinulus; dimin. form of L. catinus, a bowl, a deep vessel for cooking food. The L. catinus is a kindred word to Gk. κότυλος, a cup, κοτύλη, a small cup; see Cotyledon. ¶ From the L. catillus were also borrowed Icel. ketill, Swed. kittel, Dan. kedel, Du. ketel, G. kessel, and even Russ. kotel. Der. kettle-drum, Hamlet, i. 4. 11.

KEX, hemlock; orig. a hollow stem. (C.?) 'Bundles of these empty kexes,' Beaum. and Fletcher, Elder Brother, iii. 5. 13. ME. kex, kix; P. Plowman, B. xvii. 219; Prompt. Parv. In Walter de Bibbesworth, the kex seems to mean 'dry stalks,' and translates OF. le frenole; Wright, Vocab., vol. i. p. 157. Cf. prov. E. keggas, tall umbelliferous plants; answering to Corn. cegas, hemlock. Prob. of Celtic or Latin origin; cf. Welsh cegid, hemlock; L. ciūta, hemlock. ¶ Hence also prov. E. kecksies=kexes, in Shak. Hen. V, v. 2. 52; a pl. sb. of which the proper singular form is not kecksy, but kex. See Way's note in Prompt. Parv., s.v. kex. Note also that kex really=kecks, and is itself a plural; kexes being a double plural. W. ceys, pl., is merely the E. word borrowed.

KEY, that which opens or shuts a lock. (E.) Formerly called kay, riming with may, Merch. of Ven. ii. 7. 59; and with survey, Shak. Sonnet 52. ME. keye (riming with pleye, to play), Chaucer, C. T. 9918 (E 2044). AS. cæg, cæge, Grein, i. 156; whence ME. keye by the usual change of g into y, as in day from AS. dæg; OFries. kai, kei, a key. Der. key-board, key-hole, key-note, key-stone.

KHALIF, KHALIFA, the same as Calif, q.v.

KHAN, a prince, chief, emperor. (Pers.—Tatar.) Common in Mandeville's Travels, spelt Cham, Cane, Chane, Can, Chan; pp. 42, 215, 216, 224, 225.—Pers. khān, lord, prince (a title); Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 212. But the word is of Tatar origin; the well-known title Chingis Khan signifies 'great khan' or 'great lord,' a title assumed by the celebrated conqueror Temugin, who was proclaimed Great Khan of the Moguls and Tatars, A.D. 1205. He is always known by the sole title, often also spelt Gengis Khan, corrupted (in Chaucer) to Cambuscan. See Introd. to Chaucer's Prioresses Tale, &c., ed. Skeat, p. xlii. Der. khan-ate, where the suffix is of L. origin.

KHEDIVE, a prince. (F.—Pers.) A Turkish title given to the governor of Egypt; the word itself is, however, not Turkish, but borrowed from Persian.—F. Khédive.—Pers. khadiw, khidiw, khudiw, a king, a great prince, a sovereign, Rich. Dict. p. 601; spelt khidiw, a king, Palmer's Dict. col. 216, where the name for the viceroy of Egypt is given as khidēwī. Cf. Pers. khodā, God (Vullers, p. 663).

KHIDMUTGAR, KITMUTGAR, a male servant who waits at table; in India. (Hind.—Pers.—Arab.) First in 1765.—Hind. khidmatgār, a male domestic who waits at table (Forbes).—Pers. khidmat-gār, the same; lit. 'rendering service'; Rich. Dict., p. 601. Formed with Pers. -gār, agential suffix, from Arab. khidmat, service, employment, from Arab. root khadama, he served; ib. (See Yule.)

KIBE, a chilblain. (C.) In Hamlet, v. i. 153. 'She halted of [owing to] a kybe.' Skelton, Elynour Rummyng, l. 493. 'He haltith often that hath a kyby hele;' id. Garland of Laurell, l. 502. 'Gibbus, kybe,' Voc. 586. 25. 'Kybis on the fete;' Lanfranc, Chirurgie, p. 5 (ab. 1400).—W. cibi, a kibe (D. Silvan Evans); also cibwst, 'chilblains, kibes'; Spurrell. β. Explained in Pughe's Welsh Dict. as standing for cib-gwst, from cib, a cup, seed-vessel, husk, and gwst, a humour, malady, disease. Thus the sense would appear to be 'a malady in the shape of a cup,' from the swelling or rounded form.

KICK, to strike or thrust with the foot. (Scand.) ME. kiken, Chaucer, C. T. 6523 (D 941); P. Plowman, C. v. 22. [W. cicio, to kick, given in the Eng.-Welsh portion of Spurrell's Dict., and Gael. ceig, to kick, are both from E.] We find also prov. E. kink, to kick, also to jerk, twist the body, to sprain.—Norw. kikka, for kinka, to over-drive a horse, so as to sprain him; kikla, to jerk, to go jerkily, like a capricious horse; kikk, a spraining or straining of a sinew (Ross). Evidently related to Kink. Cf. Swed. kik-hosta, Low G. kinkhoost, the chincough, hooping-cough. A kink is a twist in a rope; hence, a hitch, jerk, kick, sprain. See kick, kink, in E. D. D.

KICKSHAWS, a delicacy, fantastical dish. (F.—L.) 'Any pretty little tiny kickshaws;' 2 Hen. IV, v. 1. 29. The pl. is kickshawses. 'Art thou good at these kickshawses?' Twelfth Nt. i. 3. 122. At a later time, kickshaws was incorrectly regarded as being a pl. form. Kickshaws is a curious corruption of F. quelque chose, lit. something, hence, a trifle, small delicacy. This can be abundantly proved by quotations. 'Fricandeaux, short, skinlesse, and dainty puddings, or quelkchoses, made of good flesh and herbs chopped together, then rolled up into the form of liverings, &c., and so boiled;' Cotgrave's F. Dict. 'I made bold to set on the board kickshoses, and variety of strange fruits;' Featley, Dippers Dipt, ed. 1645, p. 199 (Todd). 'Fresh salmon, and French kickshose;' Milton, Animadversions upon Remonstrant's Defence (R.). 'Nor shall we then need the monsieurs of Paris . . . to send [our youth] over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kicshoes;' Milton, Treatise on Education (Todd). 'As for French kickshaws, Cellery, and Champagne, Ragous, and Fricasees, in truth we've none;' Rochester, Works, 1777, p. 143. 'Some foolish French quelquechose! I warrant you. Quelquechose! oh! ignorance in supreme perfection! He means a kek shoe!' Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. iii. sc. 1.—F. quelque chose, something.—L. quāl-is, of what kind, with suffix -quam; and caussa, a cause, thing. Quāl-is answers to E. which; quam is fem. acc. of quī, answering to E. who. See Which, Who, and Cause.

KID, a young goat. (Scand.) ME. kid, Chaucer, C. T. 3260, 9238 (E 1364); Ormulum, 7804.—Norw. and Dan. kid, a kid; Swed. kid, in Widegren's Swed. Dict., also kidling; Icel. kið, kiðlingr, a kid. + OHG. kizzi, MHG. and G. kitze, a kid. Der. kid, verb; kid-ling, with double suffix -ling; kid-fox, a young fox, Much Ado, ii. 3. 44; also kid-nap, q.v.

KIDDLE, a kind of weir formed of basket-work, placed in a river to catch fish. (AF.) AF. kidel, pl. kideux, Statutes of the Realm, i. 316 (1351); MF. guideau, 'a wicker engine whereby fish is caught'; Cot. F. guideau; which cannot be derived from F. guider (Hatzfeld), though it may have been modified by it. Cf. E. kit, a tub, basket for fish; prov. E. kid, a tub, basket. See Kit (1).

KIDNAP, to steal children. (Scand.) 'People that lye in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law;' Spectator, no. 311 (Richardson, Johnson). 'Thou practisest the craft of a kidnapper;' said by Giant Maul, in Bunyan, Pilg. Prog. pt. 2. Compounded of kid, a child, in thieves' slang; and nap, more commonly nab, to steal. Kid is of Scand. origin; see Kid. Nap is also of Scand. origin; from Dan. nappe, to snatch, Swed. nappa, to catch, to snatch, lay hold on; see Nab. Der. kid-napp-er.

KIDNEY, a gland which secretes the urine. (E.) 'And the two kydneers;' Wyclif, Exod. xxix. 13 (earlier version); 'and twey kidneris;' (later version). But the ending -eris, -eers seems to be a substitution for -eren, -eiren (see N. E. D.); and, in the same passage, three MSS. have kideneiren. In W. de Bibbesworth, we find the sing. form kidenei; Wright's Voc. vol. i. p. 149. Comparing kiden-ei, pl. kiden-eiren, with ME. ei, ey, an egg, pl. eiren, eggs, we see the probability that ME. ei (pl. eiren) constitutes the second element in kid(e)n-ey. β. This ME. ei is from AS. æg (pl. ægru, whence ME. eire, later eire-n, a double pl. form), meaning 'egg'; from the shape. Cf. Du. ei, an egg, pl. eijeren. The former element is unknown; perhaps it represents an AS. adj. form **cydden*, or an AS. **cyddan*, formed from AS. codd, a bag, husk, which in ME. also meant 'belly.' Cf. prov. E. kid, a pod, husk; kiddon, a kidney; Swed. dial. kudde, a pod. ¶ The ME. nere, a kidney, seems to be a different word; from Icel. nýra, Dan. nyre, cognate with G. niere, a kidney. Der. kidney-bean. The phrase 'of his kidney' means 'of his size or kind'; see Merry Wives, iii. 5. 116.

KILDERKIN, a liquid measure of 18 gallons. (Du.—F.—Span.—Arab.—L.) In Levins, ed. 1570; spelt kylderkin. 'Take a kilderkin . . . of 4 gallons of beer;' Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 46. The size of the measure appears to have varied. A corruption (by change of the liquid n to l) of MDu. kindeken. Spelt kylderken in Palsgrave; kilderkyn in 1390; see Riley, Memorials of London, p. 517; but kinderkin in 1598 and 1691, kynterky in 1530 (N. E. D.). Kilian gives: 'Kindeken, kinneken, the eighth part of a vat.' In mod. Du., kinnetje means 'a firkin,' which in English measure is only half a kilderkin. β. The form resembles that of Du. kindekin, 'a little child,' Sewel; formed, with dimin. suffix -ken (= E. -kin = G. -chen), from Du. kind, a child; but the real origin is very different. It is ascertained to be a derivative, with the same suffix -ken, from a Du. spelling of OF. quintal, 'a quintal, or hundredweight;' Cot. See further under Quintal. 'See Grimm, Wört., s.v. Kindlein (2); Verwijs and Verdam, s.v. Kindekijn (2);' N. E. D.

KILL, to slay, deaden. (E.) ME. killen, more commonly cullen; a weak verb. Spelt cullen, P. Plowman, A. i. 64; kullen (various reading, killen), id. B. i. 66. The old sense appears to be simply 'to hit' or 'strike.' 'We kylle of thin heued' = we strike off thy head; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 876. 'pauh a word culle þe ful herde up o þine herte' = though a word strike thee full hard upon the heart; Ancrén Riwe, p. 126, l. 13; with which compare: 'þe cul of þer eax' = the stroke of the axe; id. p. 128, l. 1. 'Ofte me hine culde,' often people struck him; Layamon, l. 20319. If a native word, it answers to an AS. type **cyllan*, from the weak grade, c(w)ul, of cwel-an, to die; of which E. quell is the causal form. The sense 'to strike' is somewhat against this; but there is a parallel form in EFries. küllen, to vex, strike, beat; which suits very well; cf. also OHG. chollen, to vex, kill, martyr, allied to quellan, with the same sense. For the loss of w, cf. dull, which is related to dwell. See Quell. ¶ It bears some resemblance to Icel. kolla, to hit on the head, to harm; from kollr, top, summit, head, crown, shaven crown, pate; cf. Norweg. kylia, to poll, to cut the shoots off trees; from Norweg. koll, the top, head, crown; Aasen. But this hardly seems the right solution. Der. kill-er.

KILN, a large oven for drying corn, bricks, &c.; bricks piled for burning. (L.) 'Kylne, Kyll, for malt dryyng, Ustrina;' Prompt. Parv., p. 274; kulne, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ii. 81. AS. cyln, a drying-house; 'Siccatorium, cyln, vel ast;' Wright's Vocab. i. 58 (where ast = ast = E. oast in oast-house, a drying-house). Also spelt cylina in the Corpus glossary, l. 906. β. Merely borrowed from L. culina, a kitchen; whence the sense was easily transferred to that of 'drying-house.' The Icel. kylna, Swed. kölna, a kiln, are from the same source; so also W. cylin, cyl, a kiln. See Culinary.

KILOGRAMME, KILOGRAM, a weight containing 1000 grammes; about 2.205 lb. avoirdupois. (F.—Gk.) F. kilogramme (1795).—F. kilo-, for Gk. χίλιοι, a thousand; and F. gramme, for Gk. γράμμα, a letter, also taken to mean a small weight.

KILOMETRE, a length of 1000 metres; nearly five furlongs. (F.—Gk.) F. kilomètre (1795).—F. kilo-, for Gk. χίλιοι, a thousand; and F. mètre, a metre. See Metre.

KILT, a very short petticoat worn by the Highlanders of Scotland. (Scand.) The sb. is merely derived from the verb kilt, to tuck up, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; he makes no mention of the sb. 'Her tartan petticoat she'll kilt,' i.e. tuck up; Burns, Author's Earnest Cry, st. 17. 'Kilt, to tuck up the clothes;' Brockett's North-Country Words. G. Douglas translates Virgil's Nuda genu (Æn. i. 320) by kiltit. 'To kylte, succingere;' Cath. Anglicum (1483).—Dan. kilte, to truss, tuck up; Swed. dial. kilta, to swathe or swaddle a child (Rietz); MSwed. upkilta, to tuck up (Ihre). Cf. Icel. kilting, a skirt. β. There is an allied sb., signifying 'lap,' occurring in Swed. dial. kilta, the lap; cf. Icel. kjalta, the lap, kjöltu-barn, a baby in the lap, kjöltu-rakki, a lap-dog.

KIMBO; see this discussed under Akimbo.

KIN, relationship, affinity, genus, race. (E.) ME. kun, kyn, kin. 'I haue no kun þere' = I have no kindred there; P. Plowman, A. vi. 118, where some MSS. have kyn; spelt kynne, id. B. v. 639. AS. cynn; Grein, i. 177. + OSax. kunni; Icel. kyn, kin, kindred, tribe; cf. kynni, acquaintance; Du. kunne, sex; Goth. kuni, kin, race, tribe. β. Teut. type **kunjom*, neut. From Teut. **kun*, weak grade of the root KEN, equivalent to Idg. **GEN*, to generate; whence L. genus. See Genus, Generate. Der. from the same source are kind, q. v., kindred, q. v., king, q. v. Also kins-man = kin's man = man of the same kin or tribe, Much Ado, v. 4. 112; kins-woman, id. iv. 1. 305; kins-folk, Luke, ii. 44.

KIND (1), sb., nature, sort, character. (E.) ME. kund, kunde, kind, kinde; Chaucer, C. T. 2453 (A 2451); spelt kunde, Ancrén Riwe, p. 14, l. 10. AS. cynd, generally gecynd, Grein, i. 387, 388; the prefix ge- making no difference to the meaning; the most usual sense is 'nature.' Teut. type **kundiz*, fem.; from **kun-*, base of **kun-jom*, kin, with suffix -di- = Idg. -ti-. See Kin. Der. kind-ly, adj., ME. kyndli = natural, Wyclif, Wisdom, xii. 10, and so used in the Litany in the phr. 'kindly fruits;' whence also kindli-ness. Also kind (2) below.

KIND (2), adj., natural, loving. (E.) ME. kunde, kinde; Chaucer, C. T. 8478 (E 602). 'For þe kunde folk of þe lond' = for the native people of the land; Rob. of Glouc. p. 40, l. 937. A common meaning is 'natural' or 'native.' AS. cynde, natural, native, in-born; more usually gecynde, where the common prefix ge- does not alter the sense; Grein, i. 178, 388. Teut. type **kund-* oz, from the sb. **kundiz*; see the sb. above. Der. kind-ness, ME. kindenesse (four syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 5533 (B 1113); kind-ly, adv.; kind-hearted, Shak. Sonnet 10.

KINDLE (1), to set fire to, inflame. (Scand.) ME. kindlen; Chaucer, C. T. 12415 (C 481); Havelok, 915; Ormulum, 13442. Formed from Icel. kynda, to light a fire, kindle; Swed. dial. kinda, kynda, kvända, to kindle. β. But Icel. kyndill, Swed. dial. kyndel, a torch, has evidently been affected by AS. candel, a candle (from L. candēla); as shown by Icel. kyndill-messa, Candlemas; adapted from AS. candel-mæsse, Candlemas, at the time of the introduction of Christianity into Iceland. Der. kindl-er.

KINDLE (2), to bring forth young. (E.) 'The cony that you see dwell where she is kindled;' As You Like It, iii. 2. 358. ME. kindlen, kundlen. 'Thet is the uttre uondunge thet kundled wredde' = it is the outward temptation that produces wrath, Ancrén Riwe, p. 194, l. 20: where we also find, immediately below, the sentence: 'thus beoð theu inre uondunges the seouen heaued-sunnen' and here fule kundles = thus the inward temptations are the seven chief sins and their foul progeny. Cf. also: 'Kyndlyn, or bryng forthe yonge kyndelyngis, Feto, effeto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 275. And in Wyclif, Luke, iii. 7, we find 'kyndlis of eddris' in the earlier, and 'kyndlyngis of eddris' in the later version, where the A. V. has 'generation of vipers.' β. The verb kindlen, to produce, and the sb. kindel, a generation, are due to the sb. kind; see Kind (1). We may probably regard the sb. kindel as a derivative of kind, and the verb as formed from it. Both words refer, in general, to a numerous progeny, a litter, esp. with regard to rabbits, &c.

KINDRED, relatives, relationship. (E.) The former d is ex-crescent, the true form being kinred, which occurs occasionally in Shakespeare; as, e.g. in Much Ado, ii. i. 68 (first folio). 'All the kinred of Marius;' Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 47, l. 27. ME. kinrede, Chaucer, C. T. 2792 (A 2790); spelt cunreden, St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 60, l. 13. Composed of AS. cyn, kin (see Kin), and the suffix -ræden, signifying 'condition,' or more literally 'rule.' The AS. cynræden does not appear, but we find the parallel word hiwræden, a household, Matt. x. 6; and the same suffix is preserved in E. hat-red. Ræden is connected with the Goth. garaideins, rule, and the adj. Ready, q. v. Der. kindred, adj., K. John, iii. 4. 14.

KINE, cows. (E.) Not merely the plural, but the double plural form; it is impossible to regard it as a contraction of cowen, as some have absurdly supposed. α. The AS. cū, a cow, made the pl. cȳ, with the usual vowel-change of ū to ȳ; cf. mūs (E. mouse), pl. mȳs (E. mice). Hence the ME. ky (= cows), Barbour, Bruce, vi. 405, and still common in Lowland Scotch. 'The kye stood rowtin i' the loan;' Burns, The Two Dogs, l. 5 from end. β. By the addition of -en, a weakened form of the AS. plural-ending -an, was formed the double plural ky-en, so spelt in the Trinity-College MS. of P. Plowman, B. vi. 142, where other MSS. have kyene, kyne, kijn, ken. Hence kine in Gen. xxxii. 15; &c. See Cow. Cf. ey-ne for ey-en (AS. ēag-an), old pl. of eye (AS. ēage). Also MDu. koeyen, pl. of koe, a cow. γ. Or kine may represent the AS. gen. pl. cȳna, used with numerals; the evidence is insufficient.

KINEMATIC, relating to motion. (Gk.) From Gk. κίνημα-, stem of κίνημα, movement; from κινεῖν, to move; with adj. suffix -ic.

KINETIC, causing motion. (Gk.) From κίνητικός, moving; from κινεῖν, to move.

KING, a chief ruler, monarch. (E.) ME. king, a contraction of an older form kining or kyning. Spelt king, Ancrén Riwe, p. 138, last line; kining, Mark, xv. 2 (Hatton MS.). AS. cyning, also cynincg, cyninc, cynung, Mark, xv. 2; Grein, i. 179.—AS. cyn, a tribe, race, kin; with suffix -ing. The suffix -ing means 'belonging to,'

and is frequently used with the sense 'son of,' as in 'Ælfred Æþelwulfing' = Ælfred son of Æthelwulf; A. S. Chronicle, an. 871. Thus cyn-ing = son of the tribe, i. e. chosen of the tribe, or man of rank. + OSax. kuning, a king, from kuni, kunni, a tribe; OFriesic kinig, kening, from ken, a tribe; Icel. konungr, a king, with which cf. OIcel. konr, a noble, Icel. kyn, a kind, kin, tribe; Swed. konung; Dan. konge; Du. koning; G. könig, MHG. künig, OHG. chuning, kunninc; from MHG. künne, OHG. chunni, a race, kind. See Kin. β. Or else cyn-ing is 'son of a noble,' from AS. cyn-e, royal; the ultimate result is the same. See below. Der. king-crab, king-craft, king-cup, Spenser, Shepherd's Kalendar, April, l. 141; king-fisher (so called from the splendour of its plumage), Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 10; king-less, Rob. of Glouc. p. 105 (l. 2289); king-let, a double diminutive, with suffixes -l- and -et; king-like, king-ly, ME. kingly, Lydgate's Minor Poems, p. 20; king-li-ness. Also king's bench, so called because the king used to sit in court; king's evil, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xx. c. 4 (end), and in Palsgrave, so called because it was supposed that a king's touch could cure it. And see kingdom.

KINGDOM, the realm of a king. (E.) ME. kingdom, kyngdom; P. Plowman, B. vii. 155. Evidently regarded as a compound of king with suffix -dom; and AS. cýningdōm occurs thrice in the poem of Daniel. But, as a fact, the commoner form was kinedom; 'þene kinedom of heouene' = the kingdom of heaven, Ancrén Riwele, p. 148, l. 3. AS. cýnedōm, a kingdom; Grein, i. 179. β. The former is cognate with OSax. kuningdōm, ONorse konungdōmr. The latter was formed (with suffix -dōm) from the adj. cyne, royal, very common in composition, but hardly used otherwise. This adj. answers nearly to Icel. konr, a man of royal or noble birth; and is related to Kin and King. Thus the alteration from ME. kine- to E. king- makes little practical difference. ¶ So also, for king-ly, there is an AS. cyneleic, royal; Grein, i. 179.

KINK, a twist in a rope. (Du.) 'Kink, a twist or short convolution in a rope;' Brockett, Gloss. of North Country Words, ed. 1846. — Du. kink, a twist in a rope; but prob. of Scand. origin. Cf. Norw. and Swed. kink, a twist in a rope; also Low G. kinke, a twist in a thread. β. From a Teut. base KEIK, to bend; appearing in Icel. kikna, to sink at the knees through a heavy burden, keikr, bent backwards, keikja, to bend backwards. The base is well preserved in Norw. kika, to twist, keika, to bend back or aside, kinke, to writhe, twist, kink, a twist (Aasen). ¶ There is an ultimate relation to Chincough, q. v. And see Kick.

KIOSK, a Turkish open summer-house, small pavilion. (F. — Turk. — Pers.) In Byron, Corsair, iii. 1. Spelt kiosque in French. — Turk. kushk, kōshk (with k pronounced as ki), a kiosk; Zenker's Dict., p. 774. — Pers. kūshk, a palace, a villa; a portico, or similar projection in a palace, Rich. Dict. p. 1217; a palace, kiosk, Palmer's Dict. col. 496. Devis remarks that the i is due to the Turkish practice of inserting a slight i after k.

KIPPER, to cure or preserve salmon. (E.) This meaning is quite an accidental one, arising from a practice of curing kipper-salmon, i. e. salmon during the spawning season. Such fish, being inferior in kind, were cured instead of being eaten fresh. 'Kipper-time, a space of time between May 3 and Twelfth-day, during which salmon-fishing in the river Thames was forbidden;' Kersey, ed. 1715. But some explain kipper to mean a salmon before spawning. It answers exactly, in form, to AS. cypera, a kind of salmon; though the precise sense is not known. 'Eow fōn lysteð leax oððe cyperan,' You wish to catch a salmon or a kipper; Metres of Boethius, xix. 12.

KIRK, a church. (North. E. — Gk.) The North. E. form; see Burns, The Two Dogs, l. 19. ME. kirke, P. Plowman, B. v. 1; Ormulum, 3531. Cf. Icel. kirkja; Dan. kirke; Swed. kyrka; borrowed from AS. cirice, circe, a church. Of Gk. origin. See Church.

KIRTLE, a sort of gown or petticoat. (L.; with E. suffix.) Used rather vaguely. ME. kirtel, Chaucer, C. T. 3321; kurtel, Ancrén Riwele, p. 10. AS. cyrtel, to translate L. palla; Ælfric's Gloss., in Voc. 107. 26. Also ONorthumbrian cyrtel, to translate L. tunica; Matt. v. 40 (Lindisfarne MS.) + Icel. kyrtill, a kirtle, tunic, gown; Dan. kjortel, a tunic; Swed. kjortel, a petticoat. β. Evidently a diminutive, with suffixed -el, for -il. From L. curtus, short; which also appears in Du. kort, G. kurz, short. See Curt.

KISMET, fate, destiny. (Turk. — Pers. — Arab.) First in 1849. — Turk. qismet, fate. — Pers. qismet, fate. — Arab. qisma(t), a portion; fate, destiny. — Arab. root qasama, he divided.

KISS, a salute with the lips, osculation. (E.) ME. cos, kos, cus, kus; later kisse, kiss. The vowel i is really proper only to the verb, which is formed from the sb. by vowel-change. 'And he cam to Jhesu, to kisse him; And Jhesu seide to him, Judas, with a coss thou bytrayest mannys sone;' Wyclif, Luke, xxii. 47, 48. The form kusse is as late as Skelton, Phylip Sparowe, 361. In the Ancrén Riwele, p. 102, we find cos, nom. sing., cosses, pl., cosse, dat. sing.;

as well as cus, verb in the imperative mood. AS. coss, sb., a kiss, Luke, xxii. 48; whence cyssan, to kiss, id. xxii. 47. + Du. kus, sb., whence kussen, vb.; Icel. koss, sb., whence kyssa, vb.; Dan. kys, sb., kyss, vb.; Swed. kyss, sb., kyssa, vb.; G. kuss, MHG. kus, sb., whence küssen, vb. β. All from a Teut. type **kussuz*, sb. Cf. Goth. kukjan, to kiss; EFries. kük, a kiss. Der. kiss, verb; as shown above.

KISTVAEN, the same as Cistvaen, q. v.

KIT (1), a vessel of various kinds, a milk-pail, tub; hence, an outfit. (Du.) 'A kit, a little vessel, Cantharus;' Levins. 'Hoc mul[c]trum, a kyit;' Voc. 696. 14. In Barbour's Bruce, b. xviii. l. 168, we are told that Gib Harper's head was cut off, salted, put into 'a kyt,' and sent to London. — MDu. kitte, 'a great woden bowl, or tanner,' Hexham; Du. kit, 'a wooden can;' Sewel. Cf. Norweg. kitte, a large corn-bin in the wall of a house (Aasen). Kit, an outfit, a collection, set, lot, is the same word (N. E. D.).

KIT (2), a small violin. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'I'll have his little gut to string a kit with;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, Act v. sc. 4 (4th Citizen). Abbreviated from MF. quiterne, a cittern, or cithern, Cot.; OF. quitterne (Roquefort); which is borrowed from L. cithara. See Cithern, Gittern. Godefroy, s. v. quiterneur, a player on a cittern, quotes the by-form quiterneur. The form is North. F.; Norm. dial. quiterne, Moisy, ed. 1895.

KIT-CAT, KIT-KAT, the name given to portraits of a particular size. (Personal name.) α. A portrait of about 28 by 36 in. in size is thus called, because it was the size adopted by Sir Godfrey Kneller (died 1723) for painting portraits of the members of the Kit-kat club. β. This club, founded in 1703, was so named because the members used to dine at the house of Christopher Kat, a pastry-cook in King's Street, Westminster [or in Shire Lane, near Temple Bar; see Spectator, no. 9, and note in Morley's edition;] Haydn, Dict. of Dates. 'Immortal made, as Kit Kat by his pies;' W. King, Art of Poetry, letter viii; pr. in 1708. γ. Kit is a familiar abbreviation of Christopher, a name of Gk. origin, from Gk. Χριστο-φόρος, lit. 'Christ-bearing.'

KITCHEN, a room where food is cooked. (L.) The t is inserted. ME. kichen, kychene, kechene, Will. of Palerne, 1681, 1707, 2171; kychyne, P. Plowman, B. v. 261. Spelt kuchene, Ancrén Riwele, p. 214. AS. 'cycene, coquina;' Voc. 283. 12. — Late L. cucina, for L. coquina, a kitchen. — L. coquere, to cook; see Cook. Der. kitchen-maid, kitchen-stuff, kitchen-garden.

KITE, a voracious bird; a toy for flying in the air. (E.) ME. kitē, kytē (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1181 (A 1179). AS. cýta, we find the entry 'Butio (sic), cýta' in Ælfric's Gloss. (Nomina Auium); and in the Corpus Glossary, 333. The L. butio is properly a bittern; but doubtless buteo is meant, signifying a kind of falcon or hawk. The y was long, as shown by the modern sound; cf. E. mice with AS. mys. β. Teut. type **kūt-jon*, an agential form. Prob. from its swift flight; cf. Norw. kuta (pt. t. kaut), to run, go swiftly (Aasen). γ. The toy called a kite is mentioned in Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 414; and is named from its hovering in the air.

KITH, kindred, acquaintance, sort. (E.) Usual in the phrase 'kith and kin.' ME. cūððe, kippe, kith; see Gower, C. A. ii. 267, bk. v. 4180; P. Plowman, B. xv. 497. AS. cýððu, native land, cýð, relationship; Grein, i. 181, 182. — AS. cūð, known; pp. of cunnan, to know; see Can (1) and Kythe.

KITLING, a kitten. (Scand.) Palsgrave has kytlyng (1530). — Icel. kellingr, a kitten; dimin. of köttr (stem kattu-), a cat. Cognate with E. cat; see Cat. ¶ The ME. killing, kelling, also meant a whelp, or young of any animal; perhaps it was influenced by L. catulus, a whelp. It first appears in 'the kitelinges of lions;' E. Eng. Psalter, lvi. 5; where the Vulgate has catulorum leonum.

KITTEN, a young cat. (F. — L.) ME. kyton, P. Plowman, C. i. 204, 207; kitoun, id., B. prol. 190, 202. From an AF. **kitoun*, variant of OF. chitoun, a kitten, used by Gower, Mirour de l'Omme, l. 8221. Again, AF. **kitoun* is a variant of Norm. F. caton, Northern form of F. chaton, a kitten, formed from F. chat, a cat, with suffix -on (< L. -ōnem). — Folk-L. cattum, acc. of cattus, for L. cātus, a cat. See Cat. Cf. MF. chatton. 'Chatton, a kitling or young cat;' Cot. For the i-sound, cf. Low G. kette, kitte, ketlin, kittin, f., a female cat; kitten, a kitten (Schambach). ¶ The true E. form is kit-ling; see above. Note also the old verb to kittle, to produce young as a cat does. Cf. Norw. kjeilling, a kitling or kitten, kjeilla, to kittle or kitten; Aasen. 'I kyttell, as a catte dothe, je chatonne. Gossyppe, whan your catte kytelleth, I praye you let me have a kytlynge (chatton),' Palsgrave; cf. Way's note in Prompt. Parv. p. 277.

KIWI, the apteryx, a wingless bird. (Maori.) First in 1835. The native name in New Zealand; so called from the note of the bird. See Austral English; by E. E. Morris.

KLEPTOMANIA, an irresistible propensity to theft. (Gk.)

Spelt cleptomania in 1830.—Gk. κλεπτο-, for κλεπτής, a thief; and mania, frenzy; see Mania.

KNACK, a snap, quick motion, dexterity, trick. (E.) 'The more quaint knakkēs that they make' = the more clever tricks they practise; Chaucer, C. T., A 4051 (Harl. MS.). On which Tyrwhitt remarks: 'The word seems to have been formed from the knacking or snapping of the fingers made by jugglers.' For this explanation, he refers us to Cotgrave. 'Matassiner des mains, to move, knack, or waggle the fingers, like a jugler, plaier, jeaster, &c.;' Cot. 'Niquet, a knick, tlick, snap with the teeth or fingers, a trifle, nifle, bable [bauble], matter of small value;' id. 'Faire la nique, to threaten or defie, by putting the thumb naile into the mouth, and with a jerke (from the upper teeth) make it to knack;' id. The word is clearly (like crack, click) of imitative origin; cf. EFries. knakken (base **knakan*), pt. t. knuok, knōk, to snap, make a snapping noise. + Du. knakken; Norw. knaka, Swed. knaka, Dan. knage, to crack. [Gael. cnac, a crack, is from E. crack.] The senses are (1) a snap, crack, (2) a snap with the finger or nail, (3) a jester's trick, piece of dexterity, (4) a joke, trifle, toy. See Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 34; Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 67; Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 360, 439. ¶ A similar succession of ideas is seen in Du. knap, a crack; knappen, to crack, snap; knep, clever, nimble; knaphandig, nimble-handed, dexterous. See Knap. Der. knick-knack, q. v. The F. nique (above) is from Du. knikken, to crack slightly, an attenuated form of knakken. And see Knock.

KNACKER, a dealer in old horses. (E.) Now applied to a dealer in old horses and dogs' meat. Prob. it meant at first a dealer in knacks, i. e. trifles or worthless articles. See Knack, above. 2. We also find: 'Knacker, one that makes collars and other furniture for cart-horses;' Ray, South and East Country Words, 1691 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 16). Perhaps from Icel. hnakkr, a man's saddle; cf. hnakkmarr, a saddle-horse.

KNAG, a knot in wood, a peg, branch of a deer's horn. (E.) 'I schall hyt hyng on a knagg' = I shall hang it on a peg; Le Bone Florence, l. 1795; in Ritson, Metrical Romances, v. iii. 'A knagge in wood, Bosse;' Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave. We read also of the 'sharp and branching knags' of a stag's horn; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1039. Not found in AS. EFries. knagge, a knot in wood, a stump. Cf. also Low G. knagge, knot, peg (Lübben); Norw. knagg, a knag, short branch; Swed. knagg, a knag, knot; Dan. knag, a peg, cog. We also find Irish cnag, a knob, peg, cnag, a knot in wood; Gael. cnag, a pin, peg, knob; borrowed from E. Der. knagg-y.

KNAP, to snap, break with a noise. (E.) 'He hath knapped the speare in sonder;' Ps. xlv. 9, in the Bible of 1535, also of 1551; still preserved in the Prayer-book version. 'As lying a gossip as ever knapped ginger;' Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 10. 'Thow can knapp down [knock down] caponis;' Henryson, Wolf and Fox. Not in AS.; EFries. knappen. Of imitative origin; cf. EFries. knapp, a cracking, a snap. + Du. knappen, to crack, snap, catch, crush, eat; whence knapper, (1) hard gingerbread, (2) a lie, untruth [this brings out the force of Shakespeare's phrase]; Dan. kneppe, to snap, crack with the fingers; knep, a snap, crack, fillip. Cf. Swed. knep, a trick, artifice; bruka knep, to play tricks; which illustrates the use of the parallel word knack, q. v. Der. knapp-sack.

KNAPSACK, a provision-bag, case for necessities used by travellers. (Du.) 'And each one fills his knapsack or his scrip;' Drayton, The Battle of Agincourt, 6th st. from end.—Du. knapsak, a knapsack; orig. a provision-bag.—Du. knapp, eating, knappen, to crack, crush, eat; and zak, a bag, sack, pocket. Cf. Westphalian knapp, a piece of bread (Frank). See Knap and Sack.

KNAP, a hill-top; KNAPWEED, knopweed; see Knop.

KNAR, a knot in wood. (E.) See Gnarled and Knurr.

KNAVE, a boy, servant, sly fellow, villain. (E.) The older senses are 'boy' and 'servant.' ME. knaue (with u for v). 'A knaue child' = a male child, boy; Chaucer, C. T. 8320, 8323 (E 444, 447). 'The kokes knaue, thet wassheð the disshes;' = the cook's boy, that washes the dishes; Ancren Riwele, p. 380, l. 8. AS. cnafa, a boy, another form of cnafa, a boy; cnafa occurs in Matt. xii. 18, and in Ps. lxxxv. 15, ed. Spelman, where another reading (in the latter passage) is cnafa. + Du. knaap, a lad, servant, fellow; Icel. knapi, a servant-boy; Swed. knävel, a rogue (a dimin. form); G. knabe, a boy; OHG. knappo, also knabo, as to which see Streitberg, § 131 (5). β. The origin of the word is doubtful; but it is generally supposed that the initial kn- corresponds to the weak grade of the ✓GEN, to beget. Cp. Genus. And see Knight. Der. knau-ish, Chaucer, C. T. 17154 (H 205); knau-ish-ly; knau-er-y, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 3. 9.

KNEAD, to work flour into dough, mould by pressure. (E.) ME. knedan, Chaucer, C. T. 4092 (A 4094); Ormulum, 1486. AS. cnedan, to knead, very rare; in the ONorthumbrian versions of Luke, xiii. 21, the L. fermentaretur is glossed by sie gedærstet vel gecnoeden in the Lindisfarne MS., and by sie gedærstad vel cneden in the Rushworth MS.; hence we infer the strong verb cnedan, with pt. t. cnæd, and pp. cneden. We also find the form gecnedan, Gen. xviii. 6; where the prefix ge- does not affect the force of the verb. The verb has become a weak one, the pp. passing from knoden to kneded in the 15th century, as shown by the entry: 'Knodon, knedid, Pistus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 280. + Du. knedan; Icel. knóða, Swed. knäda (both from the weak grade); G. kneten, OHG. chnetan. Teut. type **knedan-*, pt. t. **knad*, pp. **knedanoz*. Further allied to Russ. gnelat, gnesti, to press, squeeze, from an Idg. base **gnel-*, to press. Der. knead-ing-trough, ME. kneading-trough, Chaucer, C. T. 3548.

KNEE, the joint of the lower leg with the thigh. (E.) ME. kne, knee; pl. knees, Chaucer, C. T. 5573 (B 1153); also cneo, pl. cneon (= kneen), Ancren Riwele, p. 16, last line but one. AS. cneō, cneow, a knee; Grein, i. 164. + Du. knē; Icel. knē; Dan. knæ; Swed. knä; G. knie, OHG. chniu; Goth. kniu. Teut. type **knewom*, neut. Allied to L. genu; Gk. γόνυ; Skt. jānu, knee. β. The Idg. related bases are **genu-* (as in L.), **gonu-* (as in Gk.), and **gneu-* (answering to Teut. **kneu-*). The loss of vowel in the weak grade is well illustrated by the Gk. γνύ-περος, fallen upon the knees. Der. knee-d, knee-pan; also kneel, q. v. And see geni-culate, genu-flection, penta-gon, hexa-gon, &c.

KNEEL, to fall on the knees. (E.) ME. knelen, Havelok, 1320; Ormulum, 6138. AS. cneowlian, to kneel, various reading for gecneowigan in Canons under k. Edgar; see N. E. D., and Thorpe, Anc. Laws, ii. 282, § xvi. + Du. knien; Low G. knelen (Lübben); whence Dan. knæle, to kneel. Formed from knee (AS. cneow) by adding -l-, to denote the action.

KNELL, KNOLL, to sound as a bell, toll. (E.) 'Where bells have knolled to church;' As You Like It, ii. 7. 114; 'I knolle a belle, Je frappe du batant;' Palsgrave. ME. knillen; 'And lete also the belles knille;' Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 779. 'Knyllunge of a belle, Tintillacio;' Prompt. Parv., p. 279. The orig. sense is to beat so as to produce a sound. AS. cnyllan, to beat noisily; in the ONorthumb. version of Luke, xi. 9, we find: 'cnyllað and ontyned bið iow' = knock and it shall be opened to you (Rushworth MS.). We find also AS. cnyl, a knell, the sound of a bell (Bosworth). The AS. verb = Teut. **knul-jan*, whence ME. knillen, of which knell and knoll are later variants (prob. of imitative origin). From a Teut. base **knel-* (whence **knal*, **knul-* by gradation); as in the OHG. strong verb er-knellan, to resound. Cp. Du. knallen, to give a loud report; knal, a clap, a report; Dan. knalde (= knalle), to explode; knalde med en pidsk, to crack a whip; knald (= knall), a crack; Swed. knalla, to make a noise, to thunder; knall, a report, loud noise; G. knallen, to make a loud noise; knall, a report, explosion; Icel. gnella, to scream. β. All words of imitative origin, like knack, knap, knock. ¶ We find also W. cnill, a passing-bell, cnul, a knell; borrowed from E. Der. knell, sb., Temp. i. 2. 402.

KNICKERBOCKERS, loose knee-breeches. (Du.) First in 1859. 'The name is said to have been given to them because of their resemblance to the knee-breeches of the Dutchmen in Cruikshank's illustrations to W. Irving's Hist. of New York;' N. E. D. This book came out under the pseudonym of Diedrich Knickerbocker.

KNICK-KNACK, a trick, trifle, toy. (E.) A reduplication of knack in the sense of 'trick,' as formerly used; or in the sense of 'toy,' as generally used now. 'But if you use these knick-knacks,' i. e. these tricks; Beaum. and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. 1 (Theodore). The reduplication is effected in the usual manner, by the attenuation of the radical vowel a to i; cf. click-clack, ding-dong, pit-a-pat. Cf. Du. knikken, to crack, snap, weakened form of knakken, to crack. See further under Knack.

KNIFE, an instrument for cutting. (E.) ME. knif, cnif; pl. knives (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 233. The sing. knif is in the Ancren Riwele, p. 282, last line but one. AS. cnif, a knife (late), Voc. 329. 17. EFries. knif, also knīp. + Du. knijf; Icel. knifr, knīfr; Dan. kniv; Swed. knif; G. (provincial) knief, a hedging-bill, clasp-knife (Flügel); Low G. knīf, knīp (Lübben). β. The root is uncertain; if we may take **knīp-* as the Teut. base, we may perhaps connect it with the verb which appears in Du. knippen, to pinch, nip; G. kneipen, to pinch, kneifen, to nip, squeeze. See Nip. ¶ The F. canif is of Teut. origin. Der. knife-edge.

KNIGHT, a youth, servant, man at arms. (E.) ME. knight; see Chaucer's Knights Tale. AS. cniht, a boy, servant; Grein, i. 165; OMerc. cneht (O. E. Texts). + Du. knecht, a servant, waiter, whence Dan. knegt, a servant, knave (at cards); Swed. knekt, a soldier, knave (at cards); G. knecht, a man-servant. β. Origin uncertain; the AS. suffix -eht, -iht is adjectival, as in stān-iht = stony. Probably cn-eh is from cn-, weak grade of cen-, Idg. gen-, as in Gk. γένος, kin; cf. Gk. γνύ-σιος, legitimate, allied to γένος. Thus cn-eh may = **cyn-eh*, i. e. belonging to the 'kin' or tribe; it would thus signify one of age to be admitted among the men of the tribe. Der. knight, verb, knight-ly, Wyclif, 2 Macc. viii. 9, with which cf. AS. cnihtlic, boyish (Bosworth); knight-hood, ME. knythod, P. Plowman, B. prol. 112, from AS. cnihtād, lit. boyhood, youth (Bosworth); knight-errant, 2 Hen. IV, v. 4. 24; knight-errant-r-y.

KNIT, to form into a knot. (E.) ME. knitten, Chaucer, C. T. 1130 (A 1128); P. Plowman, B. prol. 169. AS. cnyttan, cnitian; 'Necto, ic cnytte,' Ælfrie, Gram., ed. Zupitza, p. 214; the comp. be-cnitian is used in Ælfrie's Homilies, i. 476, l. 5. Formed by vowel-change from Teut. **knut-*; base of AS. cnotta, a knot. + Icel. knýta, knýtja, to knit; cf. knútr, a knot; Dan. knytte, to tie in a knot, knit; Swed. knýta, to knit, tie; knut, knot. See Knot. Der. knitt-er, knitt-ing.

KNOB, allied to Knop, q.v. (E.) In Levins; and Chaucer, C. T. 635 (A 633). Cf. Low G. knobbe, a knob; Du. knobbel. Der. knobb-ed, knobb-y, knobb-i-ness.

KNOCK, to strike, rap, thump. (E.) ME. knokken; Chaucer, C. T. 3432. AS. cnucian, later cnokien, Matt. vii. 7; Luke, xi. 10. Also ge-cnucian, ge-cnucian, AS. Leechdoms, i. 168, note 8. + Icel. knoka, to knock. An imitative word; from Teut. **knuk-*, weak grade allied to **knak-*. See Knack. Cf. Low G. knuk, a knock. Der. knock, sb., knock-kneed, knock-er.

KNOLL (1), the top of a hill, a hillock, mound. (E.) ME. knol, a hill, mound; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 4129. AS. cnoll; 'þæra munta cnollas' = the tops of the hills; Gen. viii. 5. + Du. knol, a turnip; from its roundness; Dan. knold (for **knoll*), a knoll; Swed. knöl, a bump, knob, bunch, knot; G. knollen, a knoll, clod, lump, knot, knob, bulb (provincially, a potato); MHG. knolle. And cf. Swed. dial. knall, a knoll. We also find W. cnol, a knoll, hillock; from E.

KNOLL (2), the same as Knell, q.v. (E.)

KNOP, KNOB, a protuberance, bump, round projection. (E.) Knob is a derivative, yet occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 635 (A 633), where we find the pl. knobbess, from a singular knobbē (disyllabic). Knop is in Exod. xxv. 31, 33, 36 (A. V.). The pl. knoppis is in Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 11; spelt knoppes, Rom. of the Rose, 1683, 1685, where it means 'rose-buds.' It also occurs in the sense of a hill-top (N. E. D.; E. D. D.). [It is perhaps allied to knap, in the sense of 'hill-top,' as in: 'some high knap or tuft of a mountaine;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 11.] + Du. knop, a knob, pummel, button, bud; allied to knopp, a knob, button, knot, tie; Dan. knop, a knob, bud; Swed. knopp, a knob; allied to knop, a knot; G. knopff, a knob, button, pummel, bud. Teut. stem **knuþpo-*; and Du. knopp is from Teut. stem **knaupo-*; both from a Teut. base **kneup-* (Frank). β. With a different vowel, we find E. knop (as above), from AS. cnæpp, a hill-top, Luke, iv. 29; Numb. xiv. 44; allied to Icel. knapp, a knot, stud, button; MSwed. knapp, a button; Dan. knap, a knob, button; Low G. knap, a hill (Schambach). And this may be allied to knap, to strike; cf. bump. See Knap. Knop, in the sense of 'to beat,' occurs in King Lear, ii. 4. 125. Der. knop-weed or knap-weed.

KNOT, a tight fastening, bond, cluster. (E.) ME. knottē (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 10715 (F 401). AS. cnotta, a knot; Ælfrie's Hom. ii. 386, l. 22. + Du. knot, Low G. knutte. Teut. type **knuiton-* (whence E. knit); from a base **knuþ-*. β. We also find OHG. knodo, a knob, from a Teut. type **knúþon-*, Idg. type **gnúton-*; as well as OHG. knoto, G. knoten, a knob, a knot, from a Teut. type **knudōn-*, Idg. type **gnudōn-*. γ. Also (with a long vowel), Icel. knútr, a knot, Swed. knut, Dan. knude. δ. Also (with original a) Icel. knötttr, a ball; Teut. type **knattuz*. For this change, cf. knop, knap; see Knop. ¶ Not connected with L. nōdus, a knot. Der. knot, verb; knit, q.v.; knott-y, knot-less, knot-grass.

KNOUT, a whip used as an instrument of punishment in Russia. (Russian—Scand.) Not in Todd's Johnson. — Russ. knute, a whip, scourge; but spelt as in French. Not a Slavonic word. — Swed. knut (Icel. knútr), a knot. See Knot (γ). Der. knout, verb.

KNOW, to be assured of, recognise. (E.) ME. knownen; pt. t. knew, Chaucer, C. T. 5474 (B 1054); pp. knownen, id. 5310 (B 890). AS. cnāwan, pt. t. cnēow, pp. cnāwen; gen. used with prefix ge-, which does not affect the sense; Grein, i. 386. + Icel. knā, I know how to, defective verb; OHG. chnāan, to know, only in the compounds bi-chnāan, ir-chnāan, int-chnāan; cited by Fick, iii. 41. + Russ. znate, to know, Oslavon. zna-ti; L. nōscere (for gnōscere), to know; Gk. γινώσκειν (fut. γνώσεται), a reduplicated form; Skt. jnā, to know. Cf. also Pers. far-zān, knowledge; OIrish gnāth, known, accustomed; W. gnawd, a custom. β. All from **gnē*, **gnō-*, to know, secondary forms from **GEN*, to know; whence Can (1), Ken, Keen, &c. Brugmann, i. § 394. Der. know-ing, know-ing-ly; also know-ledge, q.v.

KNOWLEDGE, assured belief, information, skill. (E.) ME. knowlege, Chaucer, C. T. 12960; spelt knoweliche, knowleche in Six-text ed., B 1220. In the Cursor Mundi, 12162, the spellings are knawlage, knawlage, knawleche. The d is a late insertion; and -lege is for older -leche. For know-, see above. As to the suffix, it is of verbal origin; the ch is a palatalised form of c as usual; and the ME. suffix -lechen represents the AS. suffix -lēcan, as in nēah-lēcan, to draw nigh. β. The origin of this -lēcan is not quite certain; I regard it as representing \-lācian*, from the substantival suffix -lāc, preserved in E. Wedlock, q.v. γ. The AS. -lāc corresponds to Icel. -leikr; and we find a related word in Icel. kunnleikr, knowledge. Der. acknowledge, a bad spelling of a-knowledge; see Acknowledge.

KNUCKLE, the projecting joint of the fingers. (E.) ME. knokil. 'Knokyl of an honde, knokil-bone, Condilus;' Prompt. Parv. 'Knokylle-bone of a legge, Coxa;' id. 'The knokelys of the fete;' Rel. Antiq. i. 190 (ab. 1375). Not found in AS.; the alleged form cnuc, due to Somner, appears to be a fiction. Yet some such form probably existed, though not recorded; it occurs in OFriesic as knokkele, knokkele. + Du. knokkel, a knuckle (Sewel); dimin. of knokke, knake, a bone, or a knuckle (Hexham); Low G. knukkel; Dan. knokkel; Swed. knoge, a knuckle (in which the dimin. suffix is not added); G. knöchel, a knuckle, joint; connected with knochen, a bone. Note MDu. knokke; Hexham has: 'De knokke, knokke, ofte Weere van een boom, the knob or knot of a tree.' All from a Teut. base **knuk-*; perhaps allied to Knock. And cf. Knop.

KNURR, KNUR, a knot in wood, wooden ball. (E.) 'A knurre, bruscum, gibbus;' Levins, 190. 16. 'Bosse, a knob, knot, or knur in a tree;' Cot. ME. knor. 'Without knot or knor, or eny signe of goute;' Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 2514. Not found in AS., but prob. a native word. EFries. knure. Cf. also MDu. knorre, a hard swelling, knot in wood (Kilian, Oudemans); Dan. knort, a knot, gnarl, knag; Swed. dial. knurr, knurra, a round knob on a tree; G. knorren, a hunch, lump, protuberance, knot in reed or straw; prov. G. knorz, a knob, knot (Flügel). β. It is evidently allied to ME. knarre, a knot in wood; see Wyclif, Wisd. xiii. 13; see Gnarled.

KOPJE, a small hill. (Du.) Common in S. Africa. — Du. kopje, lit. 'little head;' dimin. of kop, head. Cf. E. cop, AS. cop, top, esp. of a hill; G. kopf, head.

KORAN, the sacred book of the Mohammedans. (Arab.) Also Alcoran, where al is the Arabic def. article. Bacon has Alcoran, Essay 16 (Of Atheism). — Arab. qurān, Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 469; explained by 'reading, a legible book, the kurān,' Rich. Pers. and Arab. Dict. p. 1122. — Arab. root qara'a, he read; Rich. Dict. p. 1121. ¶ The a is long, and bears the stress; but Byron has kórans, Corsair, ii. 2.

KOUMISS, a fermented liquor prepared from mare's milk. (F. — Russ. — Tatar.) Spelt chumis in 1607; Topsell, Fourfooted Beasts, p. 332. — F. koumis. — Russ. kymuis; Reiff. — Tatar kumiz (N. E. D.).

KRAAL, a Kaffir village. (Du. — Port. — L.) ## L

LAAGER, a camp, a temporary lodgement surrounded by waggon. (Du.) SAfrican Du. lager; Du. leger; cf. G. lager, a camp, MHG. leger. See Leaguer, Lair.

LABEL, a small slip of paper, &c. (F.) Various used. In heraldry, it denotes a small horizontal strip with (usually) three pendants or tassels. Also, a strip or slip of silk, parchment, or paper. ME. label; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 22; where it denotes a movable slip or thin rule of metal, used on the front of the astrolabe, revolving on a central pin, and used as a sort of pointer. — OF. label, also lambel (F. lambeau), in the heraldic sense; see Hatzfeld. Cotgrave has: 'Lambel, a label of three points; Lambeau, a shread, rag, or small piece of stuffe or of a garment.' Of uncertain origin; perhaps allied to OLat. lamberāre, to tear in pieces (Ascoli). Körting, § 5399. β. But the OF. label may be of Teut. origin; from OHG. lappa (G. lappen), a flap, rag, shred; see Lap (1). Der. label, verb; Twelfth Night, i. 5. 265.

LABELLUM, a pendulous petal. (L.) A botanical term. — L. labellum, a little lip. For **labrellum*, dimin. of labrum, a lip, akin to labium, a lip; see Labial.

LABIAL, pertaining to the lips. (L.) 'Which letters are labial?' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 198. [The labial letters are p, b, f, v, w; closely allied to which is the nasal m.]—Late L. labiālis, belonging to the lips; coined from L. labium, the lip. See Lip.

LABIATE, having lips or lobes. (L.) A botanical term. Coined, as if from a L. pp. **labiātus*, from L. labium, the lip. See Labial.

LABORATORY, a chemist's workroom. (L.) 'Laboratory, a chymists workhouse;' Kersey, ed. 1715. And in Ben Jonson, Mercury Vindicated. Shortened from elaboratory, by loss of e. 'Elaboratory, a work-house;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Cf. MF. elaboratoire, 'an elaboratory, or workhouse;' Cot. Formed, as if from a L. **elabōrātōrium*, from elabōrāre, to take pains, compounded of L. ē, out, extremely, and labōrāre, to work. See Elaborate, Labour.

LABORIOUS, toilsome. (F.—L.) ME. laborious; Gower, Conf. Amant. ii. 90; bk. iv. 2636.—F. laborieux, 'laborious;' Cot.—L. labōriōsus, toilsome; formed with suffix -ōsus from labōri-, decl. stem of labor. See Labour. Der. laborious-ly, -ness.

LABOUR, toil, work. (F.—L.) ME. labour (accented on -our); Chaucer, C. T. 2195 (A 2193).—OF. labour, later labeur.—L. labōrem, acc. of labor (oldest form labōs), labour, toil. β. Perhaps allied to labāre, to totter, to sink, from the idea of struggling with a heavy weight (Bréal). Der. labour, verb, ME. labouren, Chaucer, C. T. 186; labour-ed; labour-er, ME. laborer, Chaucer, C. T. 1411 (A 1409); and see labor-i-ous, labor-at-or-y. The spelling with final -our, answering to OF. -our, shows that the derivation is not from L. nom. labor, but from the acc. labōrem.

LABURNUM, the name of a tree. (L.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 18.—L. laburnum; Pliny, xvi. 18. 31.

LABYRINTH, a place full of winding passages, a maze. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 2.—F. labyrinthe; Cot.—L. labyrinthus.—Gk. λαβύρινθος, a maze, place full of lanes or alleys. Prob. of Egypt. origin. ¶ Cotgrave spells the E. word 'labyrinth;' so also Late L. laborintus, Trevisa, i. 9; by confusion with L. labor. Der. labyrinth-ine, labyrinth-i-an.

LAC (1), a resinous substance. (Hind.—Skt.) A resinous substance produced mainly upon the banyan-tree by an insect called the Coccus lacca. 'Lacca, a kind of red gum;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Hind. lākh, the same as Pers. lak, luk, 'the substance commonly called gum-lac, being the nidus of an insect found deposited on certain trees in India, and from which a beautiful red lake is extracted, used in dyeing;' Richardson's Pers. Dict. p. 1272.—Skt. lākshā, lac, the animal dye; also laktaka-, lac; raktā, lac, from rakta-, pp. of the verb rañj, to dye, to colour, to redden; cf. Skt. rañga-, colour, paint (Benfey). Doublet, lake (2). Der. lacqu-er, gum-lac, shel-lac.

LAC (2), a hundred thousand. (Hind.—Skt.) Imported from India in modern times; we speak of 'a lac of rupees' = 100,000 rupees.—Hind. lākh, a hundred thousand.—Skt. lakshā, a lac, a hundred thousand; orig. 'a mark;' cf. Skt. laksh, to mark. According to H. H. Wilson, the reference is to the great number of lacca insects in a nest. See Lack in Yule. See Lac (1).

LACE, a cord, tie, plaited string. (F.—L.) ME. las, laas, King Alisaunder, 7698; Chaucer, C. T. 394 (A 392).—OF. las, a snare; MF. lags (F. lacs); cf. lags courant, a noose, running knot; Cot.—L. laqueum, acc. of laqueus, a noose, snare, knot. β. Perhaps allied to L. lacere, to allure, used in the comp. allicere, to allure, ēlicere, to draw out, delicere, to entice, delight. See Delight. Der. lace, verb, Spenser, F. Q. v. 5. 3. Doublet, lasso. The use of lace in the orig. sense of 'snare' occurs in Spenser, Muirpotmos, 427.

LACERATE, to tear. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. lacerer; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627.—L. lacerātus, pp. of lacerāre, to tear, rend.—L. lacer, mangled, torn.—Gk. λακερός, torn; cf. lakis, a rent. Der. lacerat-ion, lacerat-ive.

LACHRYMAL, LACRIMAL, pertaining to tears. (L.) The usual spelling lachrymal is false; it should be lacrimal. In anatomy, we speak of 'the lachrymal gland.' Spelt lachrymall in Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xxix. c. 6; p. 367 e; we find 'lachrymable, lamentable,' 'lachrymate, to weep,' and 'lachrymatory, a tear-bottle' in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. All formed from L. lacryma, a tear, better spelt lacruma or lacrima. β. The oldest form is dacrima (Festus); cognate with Gk. δάκρυ, a tear, and with E. tear. See Tear, sb. Der. from the same L. lacrima are lachrym-ose, lachrymat-or-y.

LACK (1), want. (E.) The old sense is often 'failing,' 'failure,' or 'fault.' ME. lak, spelt lac, Havelok, l. 191; the pl. lakkes is in P. Plowman, B. x. 262. Not found in AS., but cf. EFries. lak, defect, blame; OFries. lek, damage, harm, lakia, to attack.—Du. lak, blemish, stain; whence laken, to blame; Low G. lak, defect, blame; MSwed. lack, defect, blame. We also find Icel. lacr, defective, lacking. Der. lack, verb; see below.

LACK (2), to want, be destitute of. (E.) ME. lakken, Chaucer, C. T. 758, 11498 (A 756, F 1186); P. Plowman, B. v. 132. The verb is formed from the sb.; hence the verb is a weak one; and the pt. t. is lakkede, as in Chaucer. See therefore Lack (1) above.

LACKER, another form of Lacquer, q. v.

LACKEY, LACQUEY, a footman, menial attendant. (F.—Span.—Arab.?) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 2. 314; Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 66. Also spelt alakay in Lowl. Sc.; see Rolland, Court of Venus, ii. 1035 (S. T. S.).—MF. laquay, 'a lackey, footboy, footman;' Cot. ModF. laquais. There was also an OF. form alacay; see Littré, who shows that, in the 15th cent., a certain class of soldiers (esp. crossbow-men) were called alagues, alacays, or lacays. (The prefix a- suggests al, the Arab. def. article.)—Span. lacayo, a lackey; cf. Port. lacaio, a lackey, lacaia, a woman-servant in dramatic performances. β. The use of a- (for al) in OF. alacays suggests an Arab. origin.—Arab. luka', worthless, slavish, and, as a sb., a slave. The fem. form lak'ā, mean, servile (applied to a woman) may account for the Port. lacaia. Allied words are lakī, abject, servile, lakā'i, slovenly; alkā', sordid, servile. See Richardson, Pers. Dict. pp. 1272, 1273, 159. γ. However, this is but a guess; the etymology is quite uncertain; Diez connects it with Ital. leccare, G. lecken, to lick; see Lick. Der. lackey, verb, Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 46; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 2. 15.

LACONIC, brief, pithy. (L.—Gk.) 'Laconical, that speaks briefly or pithily;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'With laconic brevity;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Little Fr. Lawyer, v. 1. (Cleremont).—L. Laconicus, Laconian.—Gk. Λακωνικός, Laconian.—Gk. Λάκων, a Laconian, an inhabitant of Lacedæmon or Sparta. These men were proverbial for their brief and pithy style of speaking. Der. laconic-al, laconic-al-ly, laconic-ism; also lacon-ism, from Gk. Λάκων.

LACQUER, LACKER, a sort of varnish. (F.—Port.—Hind.—Skt.) 'Lacker, a sort of varnish;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Lacquer'd chair;' Pope, Horace, Ep. ii. 1. 337. 'The lack of Tonquin is a sort of gummy juice, which drains out of the bodies or limbs of trees. . . . The cabinets, desks, or any sort of frames to be lackered, are made of fir or pone-tree (sic). . . . The work-houses where the lacker is laid on are accounted very unwholesome;' Dampier, Voyages, an. 1688; ed. 1699; vol. ii. pt. 1, p. 61.—MF. lacre, 'a confection or stuffe made of rosin, brimstone, and white wax mingled, and melted together,' &c.; Cot.—Port. lacre, sealing-wax; allied to Port. laca, gum-lac.—Hind. lākh, lac.—Skt. lākshā, lac. See Lac (1). Der. lacquer, verb.

LACROSSE, a Canadian game; played with a crosse, or large stringed bat. (F.—L.) F. la crosse; from la, f., the, and crosse, a bent stick.—L. illa, f. of ille, that; Late L. type **croccia*, **croceca*, fem. of adj. formed from Late L. croccus, a hook.

LACTEAL, relating to milk, conveying chyle. (L.) 'Lacteal, Lacteous, milky;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Lactory [read lactary] or milky plants, which have a white and lacteous juice;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 10, § 2. Formed with suffix -al from L. lacte-us, milky.—L. lact-, stem of lac, milk.—Gk. γαλακτ-, stem of γάλα, milk. Der. lacte-ous (=L. lacteus); lactesc-ent, from pres. part. of lactescere, to become milky; whence lactescence. Also lacti-c-, from lacti-, decl. stem of lac; whence also lacti-ferous, where the suffix is from L. -fer, bearing, from ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. Also lettuce, q. v.

LACUNA, a hiatus, gap in a MS. (L.) First in 1663.—L. lacūna, a hole, pit.—L. lacu-s, a lake; see Lake (1), Lagoon.

LACUSTRINE, pertaining to a lake. (L.) First in 1830.

Formed from L. lacus, a lake; like L. palustri-, from palus, a marsh. LAD, a boy, youth. (E.) ME. ladde, pl. laddes; Havelok, l. 1786; P. Plowman, B. xix. 32; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 36. Of obscure origin; perhaps (as suggested in N.E.D.) the orig. sense was 'one led,' i.e. a follower, dependant. From ME. lad, led, pp. of lēden, to lead. See Lead (1). (H. Bradley, in Athenæum, June 1, 1894.)

¶ Larsen has Dan. aske-ladd (Norw. oske-ladd) the youngest son in Norw. nursery tales, a (male) Cinderella; where aske = ash.

LADANUM, the same as Laudanum, q. v.

LADDER, a frame with steps, for climbing up by. (E.) ME. laddre, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 44; Rob. of Glouc. p. 333. l. 6830. The word has lost an initial h. AS. hlædder, hlæder, a ladder; Grein, ii. 80.—Du. ladder, a ladder, rack or rails of a cart; OHG. hleitra, G. leiter, a ladder, scale. β. Allied to Gk. κλίμαξ, a ladder; see Climax. Named from sloping; see Lean (1). (✓KLEI.)

LADE (1), to load. (E.) 'And they laded their asses with the corn;' Gen. xlii. 26. Formerly a strong verb; we still use the pp. laden = loaded; Ant. and Cleop. iii. 11. 5; v. 2. 123. ME. laden, pp. laden, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1800. AS. hladan, to heap together, to lade, to burden; also, to lade out (water); pt. t. hlōd, pp. hladen.—Du. laden; Icel. hlaða, Dan. lade, Swed. ladda; Goth. -hlathan (in comp. af-hlathan; G. laden, OHG. hladan. β. All from a Teut. base **hlad* (not **hlath*), to lade (Kluge).

Russ. klade, a load. Der. lad-ing, a load, cargo, Merch. Ven. ...

3. And see Lade (2). (Distinct from load.)

LADLE (2), to draw out water, drain. (E.) 'He'll lade it [the sea] dry'; 3 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 139. ME. hladen, laden; 'lhade out thet weter'=lade out the water, Ayenbite of Inwyrt, p. 178, l. 19 [where lh is written for hl]. AS. hladan, to heap together, to load, to lade out; Grein, ii. 79. 'Hlōd wæter'=drew water; Exod. ii. 19. The same word as Lade (1). Der. lad-le, q. v.

LADLE, a large spoon. (E.) So called because used for lading or dipping out water from a vessel. ME. ladel, Chaucer, C. T. 2022; P. Plowman, B. xix. 274. AS. hlædel; in Glosses, ed. Napier. Formed with suffix -el from AS. hladan, to lade; see Lade (2). β. The suffix -el in this case denotes the means or instrument, as in E. sett-le (=AS. set-l), a seat, a thing to sit upon.

LADY, the mistress of a house, a wife, woman of rank. (E.) ME. lady, Chaucer, C. T. 88. Older spellings læfdi, Layamon, 1256; lefdi, leafdi, Ancren Riwe, pp. 4, 38; lheuēdi (= hleuēdi), Ayenbite of Inwyrt, p. 24; lafdi, Ormulum, 1807. AS. hlæfdige, a lady; Grein, ii. 81; ONorthumb. hlæfdia, in the margin of John, xx. 16, in the Lindisfarne MS. β. Of uncertain origin; the syllable hlæf is certainly from the word hlāf, a loaf; see Loaf, Lord. But the suffix -dige remains uncertain; the most reasonable guess is that which identifies it with a supposed **dige*, a kneader, from a verb cognate with Goth. deigan, to knead. This gives the sense 'bread-kneader,' or maker of bread, which is a very likely one; see Lord. Cf. Icel. deigja, a dairy-maid; and see further under Dairy, Dough. ¶ The Icel. lafði, a lady, is merely borrowed from English. β. The term Lady was often used in a special sense, to signify the blessed Virgin Mary; hence several derivatives, such as lady-bird, lady-fern, lady's-finger, lady's-mantle, lady's-slipper, lady's-smock, lady's-tresses. Cf. G. Marien-käfer (Mary's chafer), a lady-bird; Marien-blume (Mary's flower), a daisy; Marien-mantel (Mary's mantle), lady's-mantle; Marien-schuh (Mary's shoe), lady's-slipper. Der. A. (in the general sense), lady-love, lady-ship, ME. ladiship, Gower, C. A. ii. 301, bk. v. 5208; written lefdischip (=deference), Ancren Riwe, p. 108; lady-like. β. (in the special sense) lady-bird, &c., as above. Also lady-chapel, lady-day, which strictly speaking are not compound words at all, since lady is here in the gen. case, so that lady chapel = chapel of our Lady, and lady day = day of our Lady. The ME. gen. case of this word was lady or ladie, rather than ladies, which was a later form; this is remarkably shown by the phrase 'in his lady grace'=in his lady's favour, Chaucer, C. T. 88; where Tyrwhitt wrongly prints ladies, though the MSS. have lady. The contrast of Lady day with Lord's day is striking, like that of Fri-day with Thur-s-day, the absence of s marking the fem. gender; the AS. gen. case is hlæfdig-an.

LAG, sluggish, coming behind. (E.) 'Came too lag [late] to see him buried'; Rich. III, ii. 1. 90. Cf. prov. E. lag, late, last, slow; lag-last, a loiterer; lag-teeth, the grinders, so called because the last in growth; Halliwell. A difficult word, prob. due to confusion of lag, in other senses (see N. E. D.) with ME. lak, E. lack, failure, deficiency. Cf. prov. E. lack, to be absent, to loiter, lackish, slow, backward, lacky, laggy, a last turn, last of all; ME. Dan. lakke, to go slowly (Kalkar); Norw. lagga, to go slowly (Ross); Icel. lakra, to loiter, to lag behind. ¶ The obs. lagg, remnant of liquor in a cask, seems to answer to Norw. lagg(a)hall, with the same sense (Ross), which is prob. derived from Icel. lōgg, the end of a cask, and Norw. hald, inclined. This may have influenced the form. Der. lag, verb, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 6; spelt lagge in Palsgrave; also lagg-ing-ly, lagg-er; lag-end, 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 24; lagg-ard (a late word), where the suffix -ard is French (of Teut. origin) and is affixed even to English bases, as in drunk-ard.

LAGAN, wreckage lying on the bed of the sea. (F.—Scand.) 'Lagan, such a parcel of goods as the mariners in danger of shipwreck cast out of the ship; and because they sink, they fasten to them a buoy'; Cowel, Interpreter (1701). He adds that they are called ligan, from Lat. ligandō, i. e. fastening. But they are called lagan.—AF. lagan, used by Edw. II in 1315 (Godefroy); whence Late L. laganum. Allied to Icel. lōgn, pl. lagnir, a net laid in the sea.—Icel. lag, 2nd stem of liggja, to lie; see Lie (1). So called because sunk.

LAIR, the den or retreat of a wild beast. (E.) ME. leir; the dat. case leire occurs in OEng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 2nd Series, p. 103, l. 11, where it means 'bed.' Spelt layere, meaning 'camp,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 2293. AS. leger, a lair, couch, bed; Grein, ii. 167; from AS. **leg-*, base of ligan, to lie down. See Lie (1).+ Du. leger, a bed, couch, lair; liggen, to lie.+MHG. leger, OHG. legar, now spelt lager, a couch; OHG. liggan, to lie; Goth. ligrs, a couch; ligan, to lie. Doublet, leaguer.

LAITY, the lay people. (F.—L.—Gk.; F. suffix.) In Kersey, ed. 1715; laitie, Cockeram (1642). A coined word; AF. laieté, lay property, Yearbooks of Edw. I, 1304-5, p. 411; from the adj. lay, with the F. suffix -té, due to L. acc. suffix -tatem. Formed by analogy with du-ty from due; &c. See Lay (3).

LAKE (1), a pool. (F.—L.) ME. lac; Layamon, 1280; also AF. lac, as in 'pās meres and laces'=these meres and lakes; in MS. E. of the AS. Chron. an. 656; see Plummer's ed. p. 31.—L. lacum, acc. of lacus, a lake. The lit. sense is 'a hollow' or depression.+Gk. λάκκος, a hollow, hole, pit, pond. Doublet, loch. Der. lag-oon, q. v.

LAKE (2), a colour, a kind of crimson. (F.—Pers.—Skt.) A certain colour is called 'crimson lake.' 'Vermillion, lake, or crimson,' Ben Jonson, Expostulation with Inigo Jones, l. 11 from end.—F. laque, 'sanguine, rose or rubie colour,' Cot.—Pers. lāk, lake produced from lac; Rich. Dict. p. 1253; Pers. lak, lac; see Lac (1).

LAMA (1), a high priest. (Thibetan.) We speak of the Grand Lama of Thibet. 'Offered to a living Lama;' Murphy, Orphan of China (1759), A. ii. sc. 2. First in 1654.—Thibetan blama, a priest, the b being silent; Jäschke, Dict., p. 650.

LAME, disabled in the limbs, esp. in the legs. (E.) ME. lame, Wyclif, Acts, iii. 2; Havelok, 1938. AS. lama (weak form only), Matt. viii. 6.+Du. lam; Icel. lami; Dan. lam, palsied; Swed. lam; MHG. lam; G. lahm. β. The orig. sense is maimed, bruised, broken; from the base LEM, to break (second grade LOM), preserved in Russ. lomate, to break; Fick, iii. 267. Cf. Icel. lama, to bruise, prov. E. lam, to beat; whence lamming, a beating, Beaum. and Fletcher, King and No King, A. v. sc. 3. Der. lame, verb; lame-ly, lame-ness.

LAMENT, to utter a mournful cry. (F.—L.) Though the sb. is the orig. word in Latin, the verb is the older word in English, occurring in John, xvi. 20, in Tyndal's version, A. D. 1526.—F. lamentier, 'to lament'; Cot.—L. lamentāri, to wail.—L. lamentum, a mournful cry; formed with suffix -mentum from the base lā-, to utter a cry, which appears again in lā-trāre, to bark. β. Cf. Russ. laiate, to bark, snarl, scold. Of imitative origin. Der. lament, sb.; lament-able, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 145; lament-at-ion, ME. lamentacioun, Chaucer, C. T. 937 (A 935), from F. lamentation.

LAMINA, a thin plate or layer. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. lāmīna, a thin plate of metal. Cf. Omelette. Der. lamin-ar, lamin-at-ed, lamin-at-ion.

LAMMAS, a name for the first of August. (E.) ME. lammasse; P. Plowman, B. vi. 291; see note on the line (Notes, p. 173). AS. hlāfmæsse, Grein, i. 80; AS. Chron. an. 921; at a later period spelt hlammæsse, AS. Chron. an. 1009. K. Ælfred has: 'on þære tide calendas Augustus, on jæm dæge þe wē hātað hlāfmæsse'; Orosius, V. xiii. § 2. β. The lit. sense is 'loaf-mass,' because a loaf was offered on this day as an offering of first-fruits; see Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 154.—AS. hlāf, a loaf; and mæsse, mass. See Loaf and Mass (2). Another AS. name for lammas was hlāf-sēnung, i. e. loaf-blessing; The Shrine, p. 112. ¶ Not from lamb and mass, as the fiction sometimes runs.

LAMMERGEYER, the bearded vulture. (G.) First in 1817.—G. lämmergeier, lit. 'lambs-vulture.'—G. lämmer, pl. of lamm, a lamb; geier, a vulture. See Lamb and Gyrfalcon.

LAMP, a vessel for giving light. (F.—L.—Gk.) In early use. ME. lampe; St. Margaret, ed. Cockayne, p. 20, l. 21.—OF. lampe, 'a lampe'; Cot.—L. lampas.—Gk. λαμπάς, a torch, light.—Gk. λάμπεiv, to shine. Der. lamp-black; lantern, q. v.

LAMPOON, a personal satire. (F.—O. Low G.) In Dryden,

Essay on Satire, l. 47. —F. lampon, orig. a drinking song; so called from the exclamation lampons! = let us drink, frequently introduced into such songs. (See Littré, who gives an example.) —F. lamper, to drink; a popular or provincial word; given in Littré. Perhaps a nasalised form of OF. lapper, 'to lap or lick up'; Cot. Cf. Picard lamper, to drink. Of O. Low G. origin; see Lap (1). Der. lampon-er.

LAMPREY, a kind of fish. (F.—L.) ME. laumprei, laumpree; Havelok, ll. 771, 897. —AF. lamprey, Liber Albus, p. 382; OF. lamproie, spelt lamproye in Cot. Cf. Ital. lampreda, a lamprey. —Late L. lampreda, a lamprey, of which an older form was lampetra (Ducange). β. So called from its cleaving to rocks; lit. 'licker of rocks'; coined from L. lamb-ere, to lick, and petra, a rock. See Lambent and Petrify. ¶ Scientifically named Petromyzon, i.e. stone-sucking.

LANCE, a shaft of wood, with a spear-head. (F.—L.) ME. lance; P. Plowman, B. iii. 303; King Alisaunder, l. 936. —F. lance, 'a lance'; Cot. —L. lancea, a lance. Root uncertain. Der. lance, verb, Rich. III, iv. 4. 224 (sometimes spelt lanch) = ME. launcen, spelt lawncyn in Prompt. Parv., p. 290; lanc-er, formerly written lanceer, from F. lancier, 'a lanceer' (Cot.); also lancegay, q. v., lanc-et, q. v., lance-ol-ate, q. v. (But not lansquenet.)

LANCEGAY, a kind of spear. (Hybrid; F.—L.; and F.—Span.—Moorish.) Obsolete. In Chaucer, C. T. 13682, 13751 (Six-text, B 1942, 2011). A corruption of F. lance-zagaye, compounded of lance, a lance (see Lance), and zagaye, 'a fashion of slender . . . pike, used by the Moorish horsemen'; Cot. Cf. Span. azagaya = al zagaya, where al is the Arab. def. art., and zagaya is an OSpan. word for assegai or 'dart', a word of Berber or Algerian origin. See my note to Chaucer, loc. cit., and Way's note, Prompt. Parv., p. 290. ¶ Assegai is from Port. azagaia.

LANCEOLATE, lance-shaped. (L.) A botan. term, applied to leaves which in shape resemble the head of a lance. —L. lanceolatus, furnished with a spike. —L. lanceola, a spike; dimin. of lancea, a lance; see Lance. ¶ Esp. applied to the leaf of the plantain; cf. F. lancelée, 'ribwort plantaine' (Cot.).

LANCET, a surgical instrument. (F.—L.) ME. launcet, also spelt lawncet, lawncent, Prompt. Parv., p. 290. —OF. lancette, 'a surgeon's lancet; also, a little lance'; Cot. Dimin. of F. lance; see Lance.

LANCH, another spelling of Lance, verb, and of Launch.

LAND, earth, soil, country, district. (E.) ME. land, lond; Chaucer, C. T. 4912 (B 492). AS. land; Grein, ii. 154. +Du. land; Icel., Dan., and Swed. land; Goth. land; G. land; MHG. lant. Teut. type **landom*, neut.; closely allied to Celtic type **landā*, whence Irish lann, land, open space, W. llan, a yard, churchyard; whence F. lande, a moor. See Lawn (1). Der. land, verb, AS. lendan (= landian), Grein, ii. 168; land-breeze, land-crab, land-flood, land-grave, q. v., land-holder, land-ing, land-lady; land-lord, Tyndal's Works, p. 210, col. 1, AS. land-hlāford; lands-man (= land-man, Ant. and Cleop. iv. 3. 11); land-mark, Bible, 1551, Job, xxiv. 2; land-rail, q. v.; land-scape, q. v.; land-slip, land-steward, land-tax, land-waiter, land-ward.

LANDAU, a kind of coach. (G.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. In E. Darwin, Botanic Garden, pt. ii. c. i. 344. Named from Landau, a town in Bavaria. Here, Land = E. land; for -au, see Island.

LAND-GRAVE, a count of a province. (Du.) 'Landgrave, or Landsgrave, the earl or count of a province, whereof in Germany there are four'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt langraue, Fabyan, Chron., ed. 1811, p. 328. —Du. landgraaf, a landgrave. —Du. land, land, province; and graaf, a count, earl. So also G. landgraf, from land and graf. B. The word was borrowed from the Du. rather than the G., at any rate in the fem. form landgravine, which answers to Du. landgravin rather than to G. landgrüfinn. See Land and Mar-grave. Der. landgrav-in, as above; landgrav-i-ate, 'that region or country which belongs to a landgrave'; Blount.

LANDRAIL, a kind of bird; see Rail (3).

LANDSCAPE, the prospect of a country. (Du.) In Milton, L'Allegro, l. 70. Formerly spelt landskip; see Trench, Select Glossary. 'The landskipp . . . which is in the Dutch cabinet'; (1648); Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 216. And see Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, which gives it as a painter's term, to express 'all that part of a picture which is not of the body or argument'; answering somewhat to the mod. term back-ground. It was borrowed from the Dutch painters. —Du. landschap, a landscape, province; cf. landschap-schilder, a landscape painter. —Du. land, cognate with E. land; and -schap, a suffix = AS. -scipe = E. -ship (in friend-ship, wor-ship), allied to the verb which in Eng. is spelt shape. See Land and Shape. ¶ The Du. sch is sounded more like E. sk than E. sh; hence the mod. sound.

LANE, an open space between hedges, a narrow passage or street.

lane, lone; Chaucer, C. T. 16126 (G 658); P. Plowman, B. ii. 216. AS. lane, lone, a lane; Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, vol. i. p. 1. l. 13; vol. iii. p. 33 (no. 549). [Cf. Prov. E. lone (Cleveland), lonnin (Cumberland).] OFriesic lona, lana, a lane, way; North Fries. lona, lana, a narrow way between houses and gardens (Outzen). +Du. laan, an alley, lane, walk. Teut. type **lanōn*, fem.

LANGUAGE, speech, diction. (F.—L.) ME. langage, King Alisaunder, l. 6857; Chaucer, C. T. 4936 (B 516). —F. langage, language; formed with suffix -age (< L. -aticum) from langue, the tongue. —L. lingua, the tongue. See Lingual, Tongue.

LANGUID, feeble, exhausted, sluggish. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. —L. languidus, languid. —L. languēre, to be weak. See Languish. Der. languid-ly, languid-ness.

LANGUISH, to become enfeebled, pine, become dull or torpid. (F.—L.) ME. languishen, Chaucer, C. T. 11262 (F 950); Cursor Mundi, 14138. —F. languiss, stem of pres. part. of languir, 'to languish, pine'; Cot. —L. languēre, to be weak; whence languescere, to become weak, which furnishes the F. stem languiss. β. From √SLEG, to be slack or lax, whence also E. lax, q. v. See Slack. Brugmann, i. § 193; ii. § 632. Der. languish-ing-ly, languish-ment; and see languid, languor.

LANGUOR, dullness, listlessness. (F.—L.) ME. langour, Will. of Palerne, 918, 986; langur, Cursor Mundi, 3596. [Now accommodated to the L. spelling.] —F. langueur, 'langor'; Cot. —L. languōrem, acc. of languor, languor. —L. languēre, to be weak. See Languish.

LANIARD, the same as Lanyard, q. v.

LANIFEROUS, wool-bearing. (L.) A scientific term in zoology. In Coles (1676). Coined from L. lanifer, producing wool. —L. lāni, for lāna, wool; and ferre, to bear. β. The L. lāna is allied to Wool, q. v.; L. ferre is cognate with E. bear. Der. So also lani-gerous, wool-bearing, from L. gerere, to carry.

LANK, slender, lean, thin. (E.) ME. lank, lonk; spelt lonc, OE. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 249, l. 9: 'lonc he is ant leane' = he is lank and lean. AS. hlanc, slender; Grein, ii. 80. β. The orig. sense was 'bending'; weak; cf. G. lenken, to turn, bend; see further under Link (1). Der. lank-ly, lank-ness.

LANNER, a species of falcon. (F.) ME. laner, Voc. 761. 10; lanner, Newton, Dict. of Birds. —OF. lanier, 'a lanner'; Cot. Perhaps the same word as OF. lanier, cowardly. (N. E. D.)

LANSQUENET, a German foot-soldier; a game at cards. (F.—G.) Corruptly spelt lanceknight in old authors, by a popular blunder. See Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. ii. sc. 4. l. 21. 'Lansknyght, lancequenet'; Palsgrave. —F. lansquenet, 'a lanceknight, or German footman; also, the name of a game at cards'; Cot. —G. (and Du.) lands knecht, a foot-soldier. —G. lands, for landes, gen. case of land, land, country; and knecht, a soldier. Land = E. land; and knecht = E. knight. Thus the word is land's-knight, not lance-knight.

¶ The term means a soldier of the flat or Low Countries, as distinguished from the men who came from the highlands of Switzerland; see Revue Britannique, no. for Sept. 1866, p. 29 (Littré).

LANTERN, a case for carrying a light. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. lanterne, Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, l. 238. —F. lanterne. —L. lanterna, lāterna, a lantern; the spelling lanterna occurs in the Lindisfarne MS., in the L. text of John, xviii. 3. Lanterna = **lampterna*; not a true L. word, but borrowed from Gk. λαμπτήρ, a light, torch. —Gk. λάμπειν, to shine. See Lamp. ¶ Sometimes spelt lanthorn (Kersey), by a singular popular etymology which took account of the horn sometimes used for the sides of lanterns.

LANUGINOUS, covered with down or soft hair. (L.) In Blount's Gloss. (1681). From L. lanuginōsus, downy. —L. lanūgin-, stem of lanūgo, down; from lāna, wool. See Wool.

LANYARD, LANIARD, a certain small rope in a ship. (F.) The spelling laniard is the better one, since the word has nothing to do with yard. The d is excrescent; the old spelling was lannier. 'Lanniers, Lanniards, small ship-ropes that serve to slacken or make stiff the shrouds, chains, &c.'; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Laniers, vox nautica'; Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Lanyer of leather, lasniere'; Palsgrave. —MF. laniere, 'a long and narrow band or thong of leather'; Cot. β. Origin uncertain; but Cotgr. has lanieres, 'hawks lures', i.e. jesses; perhaps from OF. lanier, a species of falcon. See Lanner.

LAP (1), to lick up with the tongue. (E.) ME. lappen, lapen, Wyclif, Judges, vii. 7; Gower, C. A. iii. 215; bk. vii. 3671. AS. lapan, to lap; rare, but found in Ælfrie's Grammar, De Tertia Conj. § 6; and in Glosses to Prudentius (Leo). The derivative lapelder, a dish, is in Ælfrie's Homilies, ii. 244, l. 4. +Icel. leþja, to lap like a dog; Dan. labe, to lap; MHG. laffen, OHG. laffan, to lap up; MDu. lappen, lapen, 'to lap or lick like a dogge'; Hexham. +L. lambere (with inserted m), to lick. All from √LAB, to lap, lick up; Brugmann, ii. § 632. Der. from the same base are lab-i-al, lamb-ent, lip.

LAP (2), the loose part of a coat, an apron, part of the body covered by an apron, a fold, flap. (E.) ME. lappe (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 688 (A 686); P. Plowman, B. ii. 35, xvi. 255; often in the sense of 'skirt of a garment'; see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. AS. lappa, a loosely hanging portion; 'lifre-lappa' = portions of the liver; Ælfrie's Gloss., in Voc. 160. 39. OFries. lappa, a piece of a garment. + Du. lap, a remnant, shred, rag, patch; Dan. lap, a patch; Swed. lapp, a piece, shred, patch; G. lappen, a patch, shred. β. The Teut. type is **lappōn*, m.; allied to Icel. lapa, to hang down (not given in Cleasby, but cited by Fick and others). Cf. Gk. λοβός, a lobe of the ear, or of the liver (Prellwitz). See LOBE. Der. lap-ful; lap-el, i. e. part of a coat which laps over the facing (a mod. word, added by Todd to Johnson), formed with dimin. suffix -el; lapp-et, dimin. form with suffix -et, used by Swift (Johnson); lap-dog, Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 853; also dew-lap. Perhaps connected with lap (3). Cf. lop-eared = lap-eared, with hanging ears, applied to rabbits.

LAP (3), to wrap, involve, fold. (E.) Prob. derived from the word above; whence also ME. bi-lappen, to enfold; Ormulum, 14267. ME. lappen, to wrap, fold, Will. of Palerne, 1712; 'lapped in cloutes' = wrapped up in rags, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 438. β. The puzzling form wlappen is misleading; thus in Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 59, the L. inuoluit is translated in the later version by 'lappide it', but in the earlier one by 'wlappide it.' But this ME. wlappen is a later form of wrappen, to wrap, by the frequent change of r to l; so that wlap is a mere corruption or later form of wrap, prob. influenced by lap, to enfold. See WRAP.

LAPIDARY, one who cuts and sets precious stones. (L.) Cotgrave translates F. lapidaire by 'a lapidary or jeweller.' 'Werk of the lapidarie'; Wyclif, Eccus. xlv. 13 (A. V. 11). Englished from L. lapidarius, a stone-mason, a jeweller. — L. lapid-, stem of lapis, a stone. Allied to Gk. λέπας, a bare rock, λέπης, a scale, flake. From the base LEP, to scale off, peel; seen in Gk. λέπew, to peel. Der. from the same source, lapidi-fy, lapid-esc-ent, lapid-esc-ence, lapid-esc-enc-y, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23. § 5. Also di-lapid-ate, q. v.

LAPIS LAZULI, a silicate containing sulphur, of a bright blue colour. (L. and Arab.) From L. lapis, a stone; and lāzuli, gen. of Med. L. lāzulum, azure; see AZURE.

LAPSE, to slip or fall into error, to fail in duty. (L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 2. 19; the sb. lapse is in All's Well, ii. 3. 170. — L. lapsāre, to slip, frequentative of lābi (pp. lapsus), to glide, slip, trip. Cf. F. laps, a slip. Allied to SLEEP. Cf. Skt. lamb, to hang down; Brugmann, i. § 553. Der. lapse, sb., from L. lapsus, a slip; hence also some senses of the vb.; cf. AF. laps de temps, lapse of time, Stat. Realm, i. 318 (1351). Also col-lapse, e-lapse, il-lapse, re-lapse.

LAPWING, the name of a bird. (E.) ME. lappewinke (four syllables), Gower, C. A. ii. 329, bk. v. 6041; later lapwinke, Prompt. Parv. p. 288; spelt lhapwynche, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 61, l. 31. AS. hlæpewince; Voc. 260. 2. β. The first part is hlæpe-, connected with hlæpan, to run, spring, leap; see LEAP. γ. The second part of the word is, literally, 'winker'; but we must assign to the verb wink its original sense. This orig. sense appears in the OHG. winchan, MHG. winken, to move from side to side, a sense preserved in mod. G. wanken, to totter, stagger, vacillate, reel, waver, &c. Thus the sense is 'one who turns about in running or flight,' which is fairly descriptive of the habit of the male bird. δ. We find, however, an AS. form laepae-uince (OE. Texts, p. 504), which has not been explained. ¶ Popular etymology explains the word as 'wing-flapper'; but lap does not really take the sense of flap; it means, rather, to droop, hang down loosely; see LAP (2). This interpretation is wrong as to both parts of the AS. form of the word, and is too general.

LARBOARD, the left side of a ship, looking from the stern. (E.) Cotgrave has: 'Babort, the larboard side of a ship.' It is also spelt larboord in Minshew, ed. 1627. The spelling is, however, probably corrupt; the ME. spelling appears to be laddebord. In Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. l. 106, some sailors are preparing to set sail, and after spreading the mainsail, 'þay layden in on ladde-borde and the lofe wynnes' = they laid in [hailed in?] on the larboard and set right the loof (see LUFF). Again, in the Naval Accounts of Henry VII, ed. Oppenheim, p. 192, we find sterborde and latheborde; and, at p. 203, latebord; so that the former syllable was once lathe, late, or ladde. It was obviously altered to leerebord (Hakluyt, Voy. i. 4) and to larboard (Milton, P. L. ii. 1019) by the influence of steerboard, later starboard; see STARBOARD. β. The only word which answers in form to ME. ladde is Swed. ladda, to lade, load, charge, answering to Icel. hlaða, AS. hladan, E. lade. We find Icel. hlaða seglum = to take in sail. γ. Beyond this, all is uncertainty; we may conjecture that the sails, when taken down, were put on the left side of the ship, to be out of the way of the steersman, who originally stood on the starboard (= steer-board) or right side of the ship. δ. But it is worth notice that Icel. hlaðask á mara bögu, lit. 'to lade oneself on the shoulders of a horse,' meant 'to mount a horse;' and one mounts a horse on the left side. ¶ The F. babord = G. backbord, where back means 'behind' the steersman, who used his paddle on the right side of the ship.

LARCENY, theft, robbery. (F. — L.) In Cotgrave, who explains OF. larrecin by 'larceny, theft, robbery.' An old law term; see Blount's Nomolexicon. — OF. larrecin, larcin (both forms are in Cotgrave); mod. F. larcin. The spelling larrecin occurs in the Laws of William the Conqueror, § xiv; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws of England, i. 472; and larcin in Britton, bk. i. c. 25. [The suffix -y appears to be an E. addition, to conform the word to forgery, burglary, felony, and the like; but it is unnecessary.] — L. latrocinium, freebooting, marauding, robbery; formed with suffix -cinium (occurring also in tirōcinium) from latro, a robber. β. Curtius (i. 453) considers latro as borrowed from Gk. It is, rather, allied to Gk. λάτρεω, a hireling, used in a bad sense. The suffix -tro or -treis denotes the agent, and the base is lē- or la, discussed by Prellwitz, s. v. λάτρον. Der. larcen-ist.

LARCH, a kind of tree like a pine. (G. — L.) Spelt larche in Minshew, ed. 1627. Also spelt larche by Turner, Names of Herbes (1548), who seems to have introduced the spelling directly from G. lärche, a larch, though the ch naturally took the E. sound. — G. lärche. — L. laricem, acc. of larix, the larch-tree (whence Late Gk. λάριξ). The L. larix is for **darix* (cf. lingua for dingua); cognate with Irish dair, W. dar, an oak (Stokes-Fick, p. 147); cf. Skt. dāru, wood, a kind of pine. Allied to TREE.

LARD, the melted fat of swine. (F. — L.) 'Larde of flesche, larda, vel lardum'; Prompt. Parv. p. 288. — OF. (and F.) lard, 'lard'; Cot. — L. lardum; also larda, shortened form of lāridum (also lārīda), lard, fat of bacon. Akin to Gk. λαρός, pleasant to the taste, nice, dainty, sweet, λαρινός, fat. Der. lard, verb, ME. larden (Prompt. Parv.), from F. larder, to lard (see note to Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. iii. sc. 5, l. 174); lard-er, Gower, C. A. iii. 124, with which cf. AF. larder, OF. lardier, 'a tub to keep bacon in' (Cotgrave), hence applied to a room in which bacon and meat are kept, called by Palsgrave a larder-house; lard-y, lard-ac-e-ous; interlard.

LARGE, great, bulky, vast. (F. — L.) In early use. ME. large (which usually has the sense of liberal), O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 143, l. 32. — F. large. — L. larga, fem. of largus, large, long. Cf. OF. lare, larg, m. (superseded by large, f.) Der. large-ly; large-ness, King Alisaunder, l. 6879; large-heart-ed; large-hand-ed, Timon of Ath. iv. i. 11; and see largess, en-large.

LARGESS, a liberal gift, donation. (F. — L.) ME. largesse, P. Plowman, A. vi. 112; Ancrén Riwe, p. 166. — F. largesse, bounty; Cot. — Late L. **largitia* (not found), for L. largitio, a bestowing, giving; cf. L. largitus, pp. of largiri, to bestow. — L. largus, large, liberal; see LARGE.

LARIAT, a rope with a noose, a lasso. (Span. — L.) 'Lariats, or noosed cords'; W. Irving, Tour on the Prairies, 1835, p. 26. — Span. la reata, lit. 'the rope that ties together.' — L. illa, fem. of ille, he; and Span. reatar, lit. 'to retie,' attach together, from L. re-, again, and aptāre, to adjust, from aptus, fit. See APT.

LARK (1), the name of a bird. (E.) Lark also appears as larrow; see Burns, Holy Fair, st. 1. ME. larke, Chaucer, C. T. 1493 (A 1491); spelt laverock, Gower, C. A. ii. 264; bk. v. 4100. AS. lāwerce, later lāuerce, lāverce, lāferce. The spelling lāwerce is in Voc. 286. 17; lauerce in Voc. 131. 28. Lāferce is in the comp. lāfercan-beorh, a place-name cited in Kemble. But the oldest spelling is laurice, Corpus Gloss. 1173. + Icel. lævirki, a lark; Low G. lewerke (Bremen Wörterbuch); OHG. lērehha; G. lerche; Du. leuwrik, leuwerik; Swed. lärka; Dan. lærke. β. The Icel. læ-virki = skilful worker or worker of craft, from læ, craft, and virki, a worker; cf. Icel. læ-vísi, craft, skill, læ-víss, crafty, skilful; and (as to virki), ill-virki, a worker of ill, spell-virki, a doer of mischief. But the general Teut. form points rather to an original **laiwirakjōn* (N. E. D.), which may perhaps mean 'revealer of treachery'; from **rakjan* (AS. reccan, to relate, expound). Cf. læwa, a traitor, betrayer, Mark, xiv. 44; also Goth. lêw, an occasion, opportunity (Rom. vii. 8, 11), whence lêwjan, leiwan, to betray. Such a name would point to some superstition which may have connected the bird with the rising sun; but no such legend is known. Thus the true origin remains wholly unknown; and the oldest spelling (laurice) is obscure.

LARK (2), a game, sport, fun. (E.) Spelt lark in modern E., and now a slang term. Also used as sky-lark, and probably due to a peculiar use of LARK (1); from its cheerful note. ¶ Often (but perhaps wrongly) connected with ME. lak, lok; also laik, which is a Scand. form. See Will. of Palerne, 678; P. Plowman, B. xiv.

243; Ormulum, 1157, 2166; Ancren Riwe, p. 152, note b; &c. (Stratmann). Cf. AS. lāc, play, contest, prey, gift, offering; Grein, ii. 148; Icel. leikr, a game, play, sport.

LARUM, short for ALARUM, q. v. In Shak. Cor. i. 4. 9.

LARVA, an insect in the caterpillar state. (L.) A scientific term. — L. larua, a ghost, spectre, mask; the insect's first stage being the mask (disguise) of its last one; a fanciful term. Root unknown. Der. larv-al, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

LARYNX, the upper part of the windpipe. (L.—Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1715; and in P. Fletcher, Purple Island, c. 4, note 29. — L. larynx. — Gk. λάρυγξ, the larynx, throat, gullet; gen. case, λάρυγγος. Der. laryng-e-al, laryng-e-an, laryng-itis.

LASCAR, a native E. Indian sailor. (Pers.) 'Lascars, or Indian seamen;' W. Dampier, A New Voyage, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 112 (1669). First in 1625. — Pers. lashkar, an army; whence lashkari, military; hence, a soldier, camp-follower; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1265. See Yule.

LASCIVIOUS, lustful. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 1. 19; Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, l. 686. — Late L. lasciviosus, lustful. — L. lascivus, sb.; from L. lascivus, lascivious. Lengthened from an older form **lascus* (not found), as fest-ivus is from fest-us. Cf. Skt. lash, to desire, covet, akin to Gk. λ-λαίωμαι, I desire, and to E. lust. See Lust. Der. lascivious-ly, lascivious-ness.

LASH (1), to fasten firmly together. (F.—L.) 'Lash (in sea affairs), to fasten or bind up anything to the ship's sides;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Her ordnance being lashed so fast;' Capt. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 674. — OF. lachier, variant of lacier (Godefroy), to fasten with a lace or string. — OF. lache (Godefroy), a lace, also a hinge. — Folk-L. **lacium*, for L. laqueum, acc. of laqueus, a snare. See Lace. Cf. Norm. dial. lacher, to fasten with thongs (Moisy). ¶ We also find Du. lasschen, to join, scarf together; lask, sb., a piece, joint, seam, notch; Swed. laske, to stitch, lask, a scarf, joint; Dan. laske, to scarf, lask, a scarf; but it is not clear that they have influenced the E. word. See lask in Franck. Der. lash-ing, sb.

LASH (2), a thong, flexible part of a whip, a stroke, stripe. (F.—L.) ME. lasche. 'Lasche, stroke, ligula, flagrum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 288. 'Whippes lasshe;' Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 178. Perhaps formed from Lash (1). Cf. Norm. dial. laschier, to lash, whip with a cord (Le Héricher). β. Or, from OF. lache, a lace (Godefroy); see above. Der. lash, verb, to flog, scourge; cf. 'Laschyn, lashyn, betyn, ligulo, verbero;' Prompt. Parv.

LASS, a girl. (Scand.) ME. lasse, spelt lasce in Cursor Mundi, l. 2608. ME. lasse may be regarded as allied to Icel. löskr (base lask-), weak; MSwed. lösk, a person having no fixed abode; OSwed. loska kona, a spinster (cited by Vigfusson); — H. Bradley; in Athenæum, June 16, 1894. Cf. Bavarian lasch, a woman (a term of contempt); Schmeller. β. Olcel. löskr is for **lat-kwaz*, allied to Goth. lat-s, idle, E. late, q. v.; Brugmann, ii. § 85.

LASSITUDE, weariness. (F.—L.) 'The one is callyd cruditie, the other lassitude;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 1. — F. lassitude; Cot. — L. lassitudo, faintness, weariness. — L. lassi-, for lassus, tired, wearied; with suffix -itudo. β. Lassus is for **lad-tus*, where lad- corresponds to lat- in Goth. lats, slothful, cognate with E. late. See Late. Brugmann, i. § 197.

LASO, a rope with a noose. (Span.—L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. The pron. is that used in Texas, which is archaic. — OSpan. lazo (Minsheu, 1623); Span. lazo, a snare, slip-knot; and cf. F. lacs. — Folk-L. **lacium*, for L. laqueum, acc. of laqueus, a snare. See Lace. ¶ Not from mod. Spanish, for the Span. z is sounded like our voiceless th. Der. lasso, verb.

LAST (1), latest, hindmost. (E.) Last is a contraction of latest, through the intermediate form latst (= lat'st), for which see Ormulum, l. 4168. See Late. Cf. Du. laatst, last, which is the superl. of laat, late.

LAST (2), a wooden model of the foot on which shoes are made. (E.) ME. last, leste. 'Hec formula, last;' Voc. 654. 35; in a glossary of the 15th cent. 'Leste, sowlarys [shoemaker's] forme, formula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 298. AS. lāst, a foot-track, path, trace of feet; Grein, ii. 160; also AS. lāste, a model of the foot; 'Calopodium, uel mustricula, laeste;' Voc. 125. 32. + Du. leest, a last, shape, form; Icel. leistr, the foot below the ankle; Swed. läst, a shoemaker's last; Dan. læst, the same; G. leisten, the same; Goth. laists, a track, way, footstep; 2 Cor. xii. 18. β. The Teut. types are all from a base laist-, and the original sense is foot-track, trace of a man's path; cf. G. gleise (ge-leise), a track. Formed from Teut. **lais*, as in Goth. lais, I know (Phil. iv. 12); the trace being that whereby a man's path is known. This word lais was orig. used in the sense 'I have experienced,' and it is the pt. t. of Goth. leisan, to track, to find out. From Teut. base **leis-*, to find out, whence E. learn; allied to L. lira, a furrow, a track, whence E. de-lir-ious. See Learn. Der. last (3).

LAST (3), to endure, continue. (E.) ME. lasten, Havelok, 538; also lesten, Prompt. Parv. p. 299. AS. læstan, to observe, perform, last, remain; the orig. sense being 'to follow in the track of,' from lāst, a foot-track; see Last (2). + Goth. laistjan, to follow, follow after; from laists, a foot-track; G. leisten, verb, to perform, follow out, fulfil, allied to leisten, sb., a form, model, shoemaker's last. Der. last-ing-ly, ever-last-ing. ¶ The train of ideas in learn, last (2), and last (3) is: trace (whence learn, know), follow out, fulfil, continue.

LAST (4), a load, a large weight, ship's cargo. (E.) ME. last. 'A thousand last quad yere' = a thousand cargoes of bad years; Chaucer, C. T. 13368 (B 1628); and see Deposition of Rich. II, ed. Skeat, iv. 74. AS. hlæst, a burden; Grein, ii. 81. — AS. hladan, to load; see Lade, Load. + Icel. lest, a load, from hlada, to load; Dan. last, a weight, burden, cargo, from lade, to load; Swed. last, a burden, allied to ladda, to load; Du. and G. last, from laden, to load. Idg. type **klat-sto-* (-sti-), from **klat-*, to lade; whence also Idg. **klat-to-*, as in Icel. hlæss, a cart-load, Swed. lass, the same.

LATCH, a catch, fastening. (E.) ME. lacche, used by Walter de Bibbesworth to translate OF. cliket; Wright's Vocab. i. 170. [See cliket in Chaucer, C. T. 9920 (E 2046).] 'Latche, lahche, lach, or snekke, Clitorium, vel pessula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 283. From ME. verb lacchen, to seize, catch hold of, Will. of Palerne, 666, 671; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 324. AS. læccan, to seize, lay hold of, Grein, ii. 161; also ge-læccan, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 182, ii. 50. β. AS. læccan is a weak verb (pt. t. læhte), from a base **lakk-*. It is perhaps ultimately connected with L. laqueus, a snare. ¶ The assertion in Trench's Select Glossary that lace and latch are 'the same word,' may be true for some senses of the latter; thus ME. lacche occurs in the sense of 'snare' in Ch., Rom. Rose, 1624. The E. and F. words were prob. confused. For the F. word, see Latchet. Der. latch, verb, to fasten with a latch, merely formed from the sb., and not the same as ME. lacchen; also latch-key.

LATCH, to moisten. (E.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dream, iii. 2. 36: 'But hast thou yet latcht the Athenians eyes With the loue-inyce, as I did bid thee doe?' ed. 1623. Oberon had bidden Puck to 'annoint his eyes;' ii. 1. 261. A variant of North E. leck, to moisten, which exactly represents AS. leccan, to moisten, water; latch has the vowel of prov. E. lache, a gutter, AS. lacu, a stream, closely allied to leccan. Cf. MDu. laken, to flow (Oudemans), Swed. laka på, to pour on to. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 158.

LATCHET, a little lace, a thong. (F.—L.) In the Bible, Mark, i. 7, Isa. v. 27. The former t is intrusive. ME. latchet, as in 'latchet of a schoo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 284. 'Latchet outhler loupe' = latchet or loop; Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knight, l. 591. — OF. latchet, Norman and Picard form of OF. lacet, 'the lace of a petticoat, a woman's lace or lacing, also a snare or ginne;' Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of OF. lache (Godefroy), variant of las, a snare. See Lace. ¶ Observe that latchet is the dimin. of lace, and distinct from latch in most of its senses.

LATE, tardy, coming behind, slow, delayed. (E.) 1. ME. lat, rare as an adj. in the positive degree. 'A lat mon' = a man slow of belief; Joseph of Arimathe, ed. Skeat, l. 695. The adv. is late, as in 'late ne rathe' = late nor early, P. Plowman, B. iii. 73. 2. The compar. form is later or latter, spelt laetere in Layamon, l. 5911. 3. The superl. is latest, latst, or last, the intermediate form appearing in the Ormulum, l. 4168. AS. læt, slow, late; Grein, ii. 165. + Du. laat, late; Icel. latr, slow, lazy; Dan. lad, lazy, slothful; Swed. lat, lazy, idle; Goth. lats, slothful, Luke, xix. 22; G. lass, weary, indolent. Allied to L. lassus (= **lad-tus*), weary. β. All from the weak grade of Teut. base **lēt*, to let, let go, let alone; so that late means let alone, neglected, hence slothful, slow, coming behindhand. See Let (1). Brugmann, i. § 197. Der. late-ly, late-ness, lat-ish, latt-er, latt-er-ly, last (1), q. v., last-ly. Also let (2). From the same source, lassitude, q. v.

LATEEN, triangular, applied to sails. (F.—L.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Vessels in the Mediterranean frequently have lateen sails, of a triangular shape. The E. spelling preserves the pronunciation of the F. word Latine, the fem. of Latin, Latin; the lit. sense being 'Latin sails,' i. e. Roman sails. See Latin. 'Voile Latine, a mizen or smack sail;' Cot. 'Latina, the mizen saile of a ship; also, the Latine toong;' Florio, Ital. Dict. ed. 1598. So also Span. Latina vela, a lateen sail; a la Latina, of a triangular form.

LATENT, lying hid, concealed. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Cockeram (1642). — L. latent, stem of pres. pt. of latēre, to lie hid. Der. latent-ly, latency.

LATERAL, belonging to the side. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 705. 'A lateral view;' Ben Jonson, Underwoods, xxiii. l. 9. — L. lateralis, belonging to the side. — L. later-, for **lates-*, stem of latus, the side. + Irish leth, W. led, side. Der. lateral-ly.

LATH, a thin slip of wood. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 136.

In the North of England, the form used is lat; see Ray, Halliwell, and the Holderness Glossary (E. D. S.). This corresponds with ME. latte, a lath. 'Hic assere, a latt;' Voc. 729. 4. AS. lætt, pl. lætta; 'Asseres, lætta;' Ælfric's Gloss., in Voc. 126. 14; also latta, pl., Voc. 185. 20. +Du. lat, a lath; G. latte, a lath, whence F. latte is borrowed. β. The exact correspondence of the dental sound in AS. lætt and G. latte presents a difficulty. Perhaps the modern E. form was influenced by the W. llath, a rod, staff, yard, which is cognate with Irish slat, a rod, from a Celtic type **slattā*. The pl. lathes occurs in 1350; Riley, Memorials of London, p. 261. Der. latt-ice, q. v., latt-en, q. v.

LATHE (1), a machine for 'turning' wood and metal. (Scand.) 'Could turn his word, and oath, and faith, As many ways as in a lathe;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. ll. 375, 376. Cotgrave explains F. tournoir by 'a turner's wheel, a lathe or lare.' Prob. of Scand. origin; from a form represented by Dan. lad, as in drie-lad, a turning-lathe; which also means 'frame,' as in væver-lad, a loom (weaving-frame). This Dan. lad is prob. the same as Icel. hlād, a pile, a stack; from hlāða, to lade; see Lade (2). β. We may also compare AS. hlæd-hwēogl (lit. lade-wheel), an engine or wheel of a well, to draw water (Bosworth); also AS. hlæd-trendel, a wheel for drawing water (id.); which are clearly derived from AS. hladan, to lade out water. A transference of name from the water-wheel to the lathe would be easy. ¶ The entry lōð, a lathe, in Vigfusson's Icel. Dict., is incorrect (N. E. D.).

LATHE (2), a division of a county. (E.) Kent is divided into five lathes or portions; see Pegge's Alphabet of Kenticisms; E. D. S. Gloss. C. 3. AS. læð, a portion of land; 'ne gyrne ic þines, ne læðes ne landes' = I covet not thine, neither lathe nor land; Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 184. 'In quibusdam vero provinciis Anglice vocabatur leð, quod isti dicunt tithinge;' id. i. 455, note 3; and see Glossary in vol. ii. +Icel. lāð, land, landed possession. Teut. type **læðom*, neuter. Cf. Goth. un-lēds, poor, lit. 'landless.'

LATHER, foam or froth, esp. when made with soap and water. (E.) ME. lather, for which Stratmann gives no reference; but we find the derived verb letherien, as in 'he lepered a swote' = he was in a lather with sweat; Layamon, l. 7489 (later text). AS. læðor, lather, Voc. 456. 14; also in the comp. læðor-wyrt, lit. lather-wort, i. e. soap-wort; Gloss. to AS. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; whence the verb læðrian, to anoint, John, xi. 2 (Lindisfarne MS.). +Icel. lauðr, later lōðr, froth, foam, scum of the sea, soap; whence lauðra, lōðra, to foam, also to drip with blood; leyðra, to wash. Teut. type **lauðrom*, neut.; Idg. type **loutrom*, as in Gk. λουτρόν, for λοφερόν, a bath, from λούω, Homeric λῶω (for **λοφω*), I wash (Prellwitz). Cf. L. lauāre, to wash; for which see Lave. Der. lather, vb.

LATIN, pertaining to the Romans. (F.—L.) ME. Latin; Chaucer, C. T. 4939 (B 519); and earlier, in St. Juliana, p. 3.—F. Latin.—L. Latīnus, Latin, belonging to Latium.—L. Latium, the name of a country of Italy, in which Rome was situate. Der. Latinism, Latin-ist, Latin-i-ty, Latin-ise. Also latim-er = Latin-er, an interpreter, Layamon, 14319; well known as a proper name. Also lateen, q. v.

LATITUDE, breadth, scope, distance of a place N. or S. of the equator. (F.—L.) ME. latitude; Chaucer, C. T. 4433.—F. latitude.—L. latitūdo, breadth.—L. lātus, broad; from an OL. slātus, appearing in slāta, a broad ship. See Brugmann, i. § 529 (2). Der. latitudin-al, from stem latitūdīn- of the sb. latitūdo; latitudin-ar-i-an, latitudin-ar-i-an-ism, latitudin-ous.

LATTEN, a mixed metal, a kind of brass. (F.—G.?) 'This latten bilbo;' Merry Wives, i. 1. 165. ME. latoun, laton; Chaucer, C. T. 701 (A 699).—OF. laton (13th cent., see Littré); mod. F. laiton. Cotgrave has: 'Laiton, latten (metall)'. Cf. Span. laton, latten, brass; Port. latão, brass; Ital. ottone (corrupted from lottone or littone), latten, brass, yellow copper. β. According to Diez, the OF. laton is from latte, a lath (also spelt late, as in Cotgrave); because this metal was hammered into thin plates. This is rendered probable by the Ital. latta, tin, a thin sheet of iron tinned, answering in form to Low L. latta, a lath (occurring in Voc. 729. 5); so also Span. latas, laths, hoja de lata, tin-plate, tinned iron plate [where hoja = foil, leaf]; also Port. lata, tin plate, latas, laths. γ. If this be right, these words are of G. origin viz. from G. latte, a lath; see Lath.

LATTER, another form of later; see Late. (E.)

LATTICE, a network of crossed laths. (F.—G.) Here, as in other words, the final -ce stands for s; a better form is lattis, as in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 15. ME. latis, latys; Wyclif, Prov. vii. 6.—AF. latys, Liber Albus, p. 333, l. 4; F. lattis, lath-work (Hamilton).—F. latte, a lath.—G. latte, a lath; see Lath. Der. lattice-work.

LAUD, to praise. (L.) ME. lauden. 'If thou laudest and ioyest any wight;' Test. of Love, b. i. ch. 10. 76; 'laude it nought;' P. Plowman, B. xi. 102.—L. laudāre, to praise.—L. laud-, stem of laus, praise. Root uncertain. Der. laud-er, laud-able, laud-able-ness, laud-abl-y; also laud-at-or-y (from pp. laud-ātus); laud, sb., Troil. iii. 3. 179; Hamlet, iv. 7. 178. And see allow (2).

LAUDANUM, a preparation of opium. (L.—Gk.—Pers.) 'Laudanum or Opiate Laudanum, a medicine so called from its excellent qualities;' Kersey, ed. 1715; and in Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, pt. ii. § 12. Kersey's remark refers to a supposed connexion with L. laudāre, to praise; on which Mahn (in Webster) remarks: 'this word cannot be derived from L. laudandum, to be praised, nor was it invented by Paracelsus, as it previously existed in Provençal.' The name, in fact, was an old one; but was transferred from one drug to another. 'Laudanum, Ladanum, or Labdanum, a sweet-smelling transparent gum gathered from the leaves of Cistus Ledon, a shrub, of which they make pomander; it smells like wine mingled with spices;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Cf. MSpan. laudano, 'the gum labdanum used in pomanders;' Minsheu (1623). Spelt labdanum in Cotgrave, s. v. labdane; but laudanum in Bullein's Dialogue (1578), p. 43, l. 13. Spelt ludanum, Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2 (Perfumer).—L. lādanum, lēdanum, the resinous substance exuding from the shrub lada; Pliny, xxvi. 8. 30, § 47; xii. 17. 37, § 45.—Gk. λῆδανον, λάδανον, the same.—Gk. λῆδον, an oriental shrub, Cistus Creticus.—Pers. lādan, the gum-herb lada; Rich. Pers. Dict., p. 1251, col. 2, last line.

LAUGH, to make the noise denoting mirth. (E.) ME. laughen, Chaucer, C. T. 3847 (A 3849). Various spellings are lauhwen, lauhen, laghen, lehzen, lihzen, &c.; see Stratmann. OMerc. hlæhhan, AS. hlehhan, hlihhan, hlihan, pt. t. hlōh; Grein, ii. 81. +Du. laghen; Icel. hlæja, pt. t. hlō; Dan. lee; Swed. le; G. lachen; Goth. hlahjan, pt. t. hlōh. β. All imitative words from a Teut. base HLAH, corresponding to an Aryan base KLAH, to make a noise. Cf. Lith. kleg-ėti, to laugh, Gk. κλάσσειν, to cluck. Somewhat similar words are κλάσειν, to cry as a jackdaw, κράσειν, to caw, κλάειν, to clash, κράσειν, to croak, &c.; L. crocitāre, glocire; and cf. E. crake, creak, crack, click, clack, cluck, &c. Der. laugh, sb., laugh-er, laugh-able, laugh-abl-y, laugh-able-ness, laugh-ing-l-y, laugh-ing-gas, laugh-ing-stock. Also, laugh-ter, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1169, from AS. hleahior, Grein, ii. 82, cognate with Icel. hlātr, Dan. latter, G. lächter.

LAUNCH (1), LANCH, to throw forward like a spear, hurl, send forth, send (a ship) into the water. (F.—L.) ME. launchen, to pierce, Destr. of Troy, 6811; variant of launcen, to hurl, Will. of Palerne, l. 2755; cf. P. Plowman's Crede, 551. 'Lawncyn, launchyn, or stynges with a spere or blode-yrnye, lanceo;' Prompt. Parv.—OF. lanchier, variant of lancier, Picard lancher, F. lancer, 'to throw, fling, hurl, dart; also, to prick, pierce;' Cot.—F. lance, a lance; see Lance. Doublet, lance, verb.

LAUNCH (2), the largest boat of a man of war, a kind of long-boat. (Span.—Port.—Malay.) Formerly lanch. 'The craft was . . a lanch, or long-boat;' Dampier, Voy. (ed. 1729), i. 2.—Span. lancha, 'the pinnacle of a ship;' Pineda.—Port. lancha, pinnacle of a ship; also lanchara.—Malay lanchār, swift, nimble; lanchar, to proceed quickly. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 158.

LAUNDRESS, a washerwoman. (F.—L.) Formerly launderess (see below), formed by adding the F. suffix -ess to the old word launder or lavender, which had the same sense. ME. lavender, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 358; spelt lauender, laynder, landar, Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvi. 273, 292.—OF. lavandier, masc. one who washes; (whence the fem. lavandiere, 'a laundresse or washing-woman;' Cot.).—Late L. lavandārius, one who washes; Ducange.—L. lauand-a, things to be washed; from lauāre, to wash; see Lave. Der. laundr-y (= launder-y), spelt lauendrye in P. Plowman, B. xv. 182.

LAUREATE, crowned with laurel. (L.) ME. laureat, Chaucer, C. T. 14614 (B 3886).—L. laureātus, crowned with laurel.—L. laurea, a laurel crown; fem. form of adj. laureus, made of laurel, from laurus; see Laurel. Der. laureate-ship.

LAUREL, the bay-tree. (F.—L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 107. Formed, by the common substitution of l for r, from ME. laurer, a laurel, Chaucer, C. T. 9340 (E 1466); spelt lorer, Gower, C. A. i. 337; bk. iii. 1716; lorer, Will. of Palerne, l. 2983.—F. laurier, 'a laurel, or bay-tree;' Cot.—Late L. **laurārius* (not found), an adjectival formation with suffix -ārius.—L. laurus, a laurel-tree. LAVA, the matter which flows down a burning mountain. (Ital.—L.) In Keats, Lamia, i. 157. A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.—Ital. lava, 'a running gullet, streame, or gutter sodainly caused by raine;' Florio's Ital. Dict., ed. 1598.—Ital. lavare, to wash.—L. lauāre, to wash; see Lave.

LAVATORY, a place for washing. (L.) In Levins; and in Wyclif, Exod. xxx. 18. Cotgrave explains F. lavatoire as 'a lavatory, a place or vessel to wash in.'—L. lauātōrium, a lavatory; neut. of lauātōrius, belonging to a washer.—L. lauātor, a washer.—L. lauāre, to wash; see Lave.

LAVE, to wash, bathe. (F.—L.) ME. lauēn; 'And laueth hem in the lauandrie' [laundry]; P. Plowman, C. xvii. 330; cf. Layamon, 7489.—F. laver, to wash.—L. lauāre, to wash.—Gk. λούειν, to wash. From the Idg. base LOU, to wash. See Lather. Der. lav-er (Exod. xxxviii. 8), ME. lavour, lauour, Chaucer, C. T. 5869 (D 287), from OF. laveoir, lavoer (Godefroy), lavoir, 'a washing poole' (Cot.), from L. lauātōrium (above). And see laundress, lotion. From the same base are de-luge, al-luvial.

LAVEER, to beat to windward, to tack. (Du.—F.—Du.) 'But those that 'gainst stiff gales laveering go'; Dryden, Astræa Redux, l. 65.—Du. laveeren, MDu. laveren, loeveren, 'to saile up and downe', Hexham.—MF. loveër (Littre); F. louvoyer.—F. lof, luff, weather-side.—Du. loef. See Luff. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 159.

LAVENDER, an odoriferous plant. (F.—Late L.) Spelt lavendre in Palsgrave; cf. Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 104. 'Lavendere, herbe, Lavendula,' Prompt. Parv.—AF. lavendre, Voc. 557. 9.—Late L. lavendula, as in Prompt. Parv. and Voc. 557. 9. Other forms are lavandula, livendula (N.E.D.). Also F. lavande, 'lavender,' Cot.; Ital. lavanda, lavender; Ital. lavendola, Span. lavandula. β. The plant was often laid with fresh-washed linen, and thus came to be associated (in popular etymology) with L. lauāre, to wash. But the early form livendula tends rather to associate it with liuēre, to be livid, from its blueish colour. The exact source is unknown.

LAVISH, adj., profuse, prodigal. (F.—L.) α. The adj. is due to an obs. sb., also spelt lavish; also lavas, lavess, which is explained below. β. Examples of the adj. are as follows. 'In al other thing so light and laues [are they] of theyr tong'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 250 b. 'Punishing with losse of life the lavessnes of the tounge'; Brende, Quintus Curtius, fol. 67 (R.). 'Although some lauishe lippes, which like some other best'; Gascoigne, In Praise of Lady Sandes, l. 7 (Poems, ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 53). 'Lavish Nature'; Spenser, Muopotmos, l. 163. Spelt lavas in 'Romeus and Juliet,' p. 20 (Halliwell); so also 'lavas of theyr tungys'; Paston Letters, iii. 323. γ. The adj. arose from the use of lavas, sb., in the sense of lavishness or prodigality. 'There was no lauas [profusion, excess] in their speche'; Caxton, Golden Legend, fol. 364, back (N.E.D.). Whence also the vb., as in; 'Those, who did prodigally lavess out and waste their substance'; Udall, tr. of Erasmus' Apophthegms, Diogenes, § 161. The sb. is of F. origin.—OF. lavasse, an inundation, abundant rain (Godefroy); cf. Rouchi lavache, as in plouvoir à lavache, to rain abundantly (Hécart).—F. laver, to wash; Norm. dial. laver, to lavish, to squander (Moisy).—L. lauāre, to wash. See Lave. Compare: 'He lauēz hys gyftez as water of dyche' = God lavishes his gifts as (freely as one would take) water out of a ditch; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 607; see the whole passage, which treats of God's profuseness of reward to the souls in heaven. Der. lavish-ly, lavish-ness, lavish-ment; also lavish, verb (Levins).

LAW, a rule of action, edict, statute. (Scand.) ME. lawè (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 1167 (A 1165). AS. lagu, a late word, used in place of the early AS. læ, law. Borrowed from prehistoric ON. **lagu*, answering to Icel. lög (below). Cf. OSax. lag (pl. lagu), a statute, decree; Icel. lög (s. pl., but used in the sing. sense), for older **lagu*, a law; it is the pl. of lag, a stratum, order, due place, lit. 'that which lies' or is placed; Swed. lag; Dan. lov. Teut. type **lagom*, n. β. The sense is 'that which lies' or is in due order; from Teut. base **lag*, 2nd grade of **ligger*, to lie; see Lie (1). Der. law-ful, ME. laweful, Trevisa, iii. 193; law-ful-ly, ME. lawefulliche, P. Plowman, C. x. 59; law-ful-ness, see Owl and Nightingale, ed. Stratmann, l. 1741; law-giver; law-less, ME. laweles, Trevisa, iii. 73; law-less-ly, law-less-ness; law-book, see Ormulum, l. 1953; law-suit; also law-er, q. v.

LAWN (1), a space of ground covered with grass in a garden. (F.—C.) Properly an open space, esp. in a wood; a glade (see Glade). The spelling lawn is not old; the older spelling is invariably laund, which was still in use in the 18th century. 'Laund or Lawn, in a park, plain untilld ground'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt laund in Shak. Venus, 813; 3 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 2. ME. laund, Chaucer, C. T. 1691; (observe that Dryden substitutes lawn in his Palamon and Arcite, l. 845); P. Plowman, C. i. 8.—OF. launde (Godefroy), also lande, 'a land or laund, a wild, untilld, shrubby, or bushy plain'; Cot. Cf. Ital. and Span. landa, a heath, tract of open country.—OCeltic **landā*, fem.; whence Bret. lann, a bushy shrub, of which the pl. lannou is only used to signify waste land, like the F. landes. The Bret. lann is also used in a variety of senses, corresponding to those of Gael. and Irish lann, and W. llan; one of these senses is land or territory, though most often used of an inclosure. Spurrell gives W. llan, 'an area, yard, church'; but the Gael. lann means 'an inclosure, a house, a church, a repository, land'; and the Irish lann is 'land, a house, church, repository.' In fact, the Irish lann and E. land are cognate words; see Land.

LAWN (2), a sort of fine linen. (F.—L.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 209, 220. 'In the third yeare of the raigne of Queene Elizabeth, 1562, beganne the knowledge and wearing of lawne and cambrick, which was then brought into England by very small quantities'; Stow, King James, an. 1604 (R.). But this misleading statement is entirely wrong, as the word is known to English as early as 1415 (N. E. D.). It also occurs in Lydgate's London Lickpenny, l. 66 (Minor Poems, p. 105); and in Henrysoun, Test. Cressid, 423. In 1502, lawn is enumerated among the wares of Flanders; Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 205. And Palsgrave (1530) has: 'Laune lynen, crespé.' I understand Laune lynen to mean 'linen of Laon,' formerly also Lan, not far N.W. of Rheims; cf. 'Lawne, or fine linnen cloth called cloth of Remes'; Baret. Linen manufacture was carried on at Laon for many centuries (Romania, xxix. 182). For the spelling Lan, see Calendar of State Papers, vi. 203, 224; and for OF. Lan (Laon) see Ménage.—L. Laudūnum, Lugdūnum, a name of Celtic origin. Cf. faun (2), from OF. fan, faon; pawn (2), from OF. paon.

LAWYER, one versed in the law, one who practises law. (E.) ME. lawyer, lawier; P. Plowman, B. vii. 59. From law, with suffix -er. This suffix originated in the use of the suffix -ien in place of -en in causal verbs, and verbs derived from sbs. Thus, from the AS. lufu, love, was formed the vb. lufigan or lufian, to love, which became lov-ien in ME. Hence the sb. lov-ier or lov-er, a lover, another form of lov-er or lov-ere, a lover; see the readings in the Petworth and Lansdowne MSS. in Chaucer, C. T., A 1347. By analogy, from lawe, law, was formed law-ier or law-er. So also bow-er, one who uses a bow; saw-er, one who uses a saw.

LAX, slack, loose, soft, not strict. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 162. —L. laxus, lax, loose.—L. base LAG, to be weak; whence also langu-ere, to be languid, with inserted n. Allied to slack; see Slack. Brugmann, i. § 193. Der. lax-ly, lax-ness; lax-i-ty, from F. laxité (Cot.), which from L. acc. laxitatem; and see lax-at-ive.

LAXATIVE, loosening. (F.—L.) ME. laxatif, Chaucer, C. T. 14949 (B 4133).—F. laxatif, 'laxative'; Cot.—L. laxātīvus, loosening; cf. laxātus, pp. of laxāre, to render lax.—L. laxus; see Lax. Der. laxative-ness.

LAY (1), to cause to lie down, place, set. (E.) The causal of lie, from which it is derived. ME. leggen; weak verb, pt. t. leide, pp. leid; Chaucer, C. T. 81, 3935 (A 3937). AS. leggan (where cg=gg), to lay; pt. t. legde, pp. gelegd; Grein, ii. 166. Formed (by vowel-change of a to e) from lag, orig. form of AS. læg, pt. t. of licgan, to lie; see Lie (1). +Du. leggen, pt. t. legde, leide, pp. gelegt; Icel. leggja, pt. t. lagði, pp. lagðr, lagðr; Dan. lægge, pt. t. lagde, pp. lagt; Swed. lägge, pt. t. lade, pp. lagd; Goth. lagjan, pt. t. lagida, pp. lagiths; G. legen, pt. t. legte, pp. gelegt. Teut. type **lagjan*; from lag, 2nd grade of **legjan*, to lie. β. The form lay is due to the base leg, occurring in AS. leg-est, leg-ð, 2nd and 3rd pers. sing. of the present tense. Der. lay-er, q. v.

LAY (2), a song, lyric poem. (F.—OHG.) ME. lai, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 199, l. 167; lay, P. Plowman, B. viii. 66.—OF. lai, spelt lay in Cotgrave; cf. Prov. lais, a lay. [The lay was regarded as specially belonging to the Bretons; Mr. Wedgwood cites from Marie de France: 'Les cuntes ke jo sai verais Dunt li Breton unt fait lor lais Vus cunterai assez briefment' = the tales which I know to be true, of which the Bretons have made their lays, I will briefly relate to you. See further in note 24 to Tyrwhitt's Introductory Discourse to the Cant. Tales; and see Chaucer, C. T. 11021 (F 709).] Of doubtful origin; but most probably from OHG. leih, leich, a game, sport; also melody, song (see Schade). +Icel. leikr; AS. lāc, sport; Goth. laiks, dancing (Lu. xv. 25). Teut. type **laikoz*, m.; whence also OSlav. likŭ, Russ. lik', a chorus, choir. ¶ Not from Celtic; and not from G. lied; see under Lark (2).

LAY (3), LAIC, pertaining to the laity. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. lay; 'Lered men and lay' = learned men and laymen; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 171, last line.—OF. lai, 'lay, secular, of the laity'; Cot.—L. laicus, belonging to the people (whence the E. laic).—Gk. laikos, belonging to the people.—Gk. laos (Ionic λῆός, Attic λαός), the people. Root uncertain. Der. laic-al, lay-man, Trevisa, v. 289; also lai-ty, used by Cotgrave (as cited above), formed with suffix -ty by analogy with words such as chasti-ty, quanti-ty, &c.

LAY FIGURE, a jointed wooden model of the human body, used by artists. (Du. and F.) Figure is from F. figure, L. figurā. Lay is properly a part of the older word layman (used in the same sense as lay figure).—Du. leeman, lit. 'joint man,' i. e. jointed figure; where lee is for lede, in compounds (Sewel); from MDu. ledt, lidt (Hexham), Du. lid, a joint, limb, which is cognate with AS. lið, a limb, G. g-lied, Goth. lithus, a limb. See Franck. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 159.

LAYER, a stratum, row, tier, bed. (E.) 'Layer, a bed or channel in a creek, where small oysters are thrown in to breed; among gardeners, it is taken for a young sprout covered with mould, in order to raise its kind;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Lay-er = that which lays, hence a mode of laying or propagating. It was extended to mean anything carefully laid in due order. See Lay (1). ¶ Distinct from lair, which is from the intrans. verb to lie. Der. layer-ing.

LAZAR, a leper. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) ME. lazar, Chaucer, C. T. 242. — F. Lazare; see Littré. — L. Lazarus. — Gk. Λάζαρος, the name of the beggar in the parable; Luke, xvi. 20; contracted from the Heb. name Eleazar. — Heb. El'āzār, 'he whom God helps.' Der. lazar-like, Hamlet, i. 5. 72; lazar-house, Milton, P. L. xi. 479; also lazar-etto, from Ital. lazzaretto, a plague-hospital.

LAZY, slow, sluggish, slothful. (Low G.?) In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 28; spelt laesie in Spenser, Shep. Kal. Feb., 9; July, 33; lazie in Minshew, ed. 1627. We also find the verb to laze. 'S'endormir en sentinelle, to sleep when he hath most cause to watch; to laze it when he hath most need to looke about him;' Cot.; this is a back formation from the adj. Spelt laysy in 1549 (N. E. D.). Of obscure origin; but prob. from Low G. lasich, variant of losich, languid, idle (Lübben); läösig, lazy (Danneil); Pomeran. läsig; Hamburg lösich, slow, tired, lazy (Richey); cf. laassam, lazy (Bremen); Du. leuzig, idle (Calisch). Allied to Loose. The phonology offers difficulties; it does not appear to be connected with G. lässig, weary, lazy (though the sense corresponds); which is from G. lass, cognate with E. late. Of course we did not borrow words from High German in the 16th century, except in very rare and peculiar instances, such as carouse. Der. lazi-ly, läzi-ness.

LEA (1), LEY, LAY, a tract of open ground. (E.) 'On the watry lea, i.e. plain; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 16. Often spelt ley, leigh, in E. place-names, as in Brom-ley, Haw-ley, Had-leigh. 'Thy rich leas;' Tempest, v. 1. 60. AS. lēah, lēa, gen. case lēages, also lēage; see Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 109, l. 8, p. 292, l. 4; also p. 526, where the place-name Hæd-lēah (Hadleigh) occurs; also p. 658. β. Just as AS. flēah (= E. fllea) is cognate with G. floh, so lea is cognate with prov. G. loh, a morass, bog, wood, forest (Flügel), which also appears in place-names, such as Hohen-lohe, i.e. high leas. So also we find the Low G. loge, which in place-names near Bremen signifies a low-lying tract, a grassy plain; Bremen Wörterb. iii. 80. So also Water-loo = water-lea. Teut. types **lauhoz*, m., **lauhā*, f. Further cognates occur in Lithuanian laukas, an open field (Nesselmann); L. lūcus, a grove, glade, open space in a wood (?); Skt. lōka-s, a region; Idg. type **lougos*. LEA (2), LEY, LAY, fallow land, arable land under grass, pasture-land. (E.) Often very difficult to distinguish from Lea (1). E. D.

AS. lēdan, pt. t. lēdde, pp. lēded; Grein, ii. 161; lit. 'to show the way.' — AS. lād, a way, path; Grein, ii. 150. — AS. līðan, strong verb, to travel, go; Grein, ii. 183; of which lēdan may be regarded as the causal form. + Icel. leiða, to lead, from leið, a way; which from liða, to go, pass, move along; Swed. leda, to lead, from led, a way, course; which from lida, to pass, go on; Dan. lede, to lead, from led, a gate; which from lide, to glide on; G. leiten, to lead; causal of OHG. lidan, to go, go away, undergo, endure, suffer = mod. LEAGUE (1), a bond, alliance, confederacy. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, iii. 2. 25. Spelt lyge in G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, bk. iii. ch. 7, l. 63. — F. ligue, 'a league or confederacy;' Cot. — Ital. liga, variant of lega, 'a league, confederacie;' Florio; Late L. liga (sometimes lega), a league, confederacy. — L. ligāre, to clasp, bind, fasten, tie, ratify an agreement. D. 1217, Ducange; another form being leuca, which is the more original; L. leuca (more correctly leuga), a Gallic mile of 1500 Roman paces; a word of Celtic origin. β. The Celtic word remains in Bret. leō or lev, a league; in the district of Vannes, leu. From Celtic type leugā; Stokes-Fick, p. 244. Observe that the F. form from which the E. word is derived is a Southern F. or Provençal form; and the E. league of 3 miles coincides, as to length, with that of Languedoc. See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1903, p. 154. Der. seven-leagu-ed.

See further under Loyal, of which it is a doublet.

LEAN (1), to incline, bend, stoop. (E.) ME. lenen, P. Plowman, B. prol. 9, xviii. 5. The trans. and intrans. forms are now alike; properly, the intrans. form is the more primitive, and the mod. E. verb may have arisen from this form only, as the causal form was rare. AS. hleonian, hlinian, intrans. weak verb, to lean, Grein, i. 85; whence hlēnan, to make to lean, id. i. 81. + OSax. hlinōn, intrans. form; OHG. hlinēn, MHG. lenen, G. lehnen, intrans. form. AS. hlēne, lean; used of Pharaoh's lean kine; Gen. xli. 3. + Low G. leen, lean. β. Perhaps the orig. sense was leaning, bending, stooping; hence weak, thin, poor. Cf. L. declivis, bending down, declining; etāte declivis, in the decline of life; OFries. länig, yielding, weak; OIrish clóen, sloping, bad. See Lean (1). The occurrence of the initial h in AS. hlēne at once separates it from AS. lēne, adj. transitory, which is connected with lend and loan. Der. lean-ly, lean-ness.

LEAP, to bound, spring, jump. (E.) ME. lepen, pt. t. leep, lep, pp. lopen; Chaucer, C. T. 4376, 2689 (A 4378, 2687); P. Plowman, B. v. 198. All from Teut. type **hlaupan-*, pt. t. **hle-hlaup*, to leap, run. Der. leap, sb., AS. hlýp, Grein, ii. 89, cognate with Icel. hlaup, a leap, G. lauf, a course. Also leap-frog; leap-year, ME. lepejeer, Mandeville's Travels, p. 77.

LEARN, to acquire knowledge of. (E.) ME. lernen, Chaucer, C. T. 310 (A 308). AS. leornian, to learn; Grein, ii. 179. + OSax. linōn, to learn, contracted form of **lizinōn*; OHG. lirnen, G. lernen. Brugmann, i. § 903 (c). Der. learn-ed, orig. merely the pp. of the verb; learn-ed-ly, learn-ed-ness, learn-er, learn-ing.

LEASE (1), to let tenements for a term of years. (F.—L.) 'To lease or let leas, locare, dimittere; the lease, letting, locatio, dimissio,' Levins, ed. 1570. An AF. law term; see Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691.—AF. lesser, Year-book of Edw. I (1292–3), p. 43; F. laisser, 'to leave, relinquish;' Cot. [Cf. Ital. lasciare, to quit.] Laisser is still used in the sense 'to part with' or 'let go' at a fixed price; see Littré. [The AF. form lessér at once accounts for E. less-or, less-ee.]—L. laxāre, to slacken, let go.—L. laxus, lax, slack; see Lax. ¶ Not related to G. lassen, which=E. let; see Let (1). Prob. connected with læt-an, to let alone; so that the sense was 'land not tilled.' See N. E. D. Doublet, prov. E. leasow; see E. D. D. ¶ Often confused with Lea (1).

LEASH, a thong by which a hawk or hound is held; a brace and a half. (F.—L.) 1. ME. lees, leese, leece. 'Alle they renne in o lees' = they all run in one leash; Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Septem Peccatis (Six-text, Group I, 387). And see Prompt. Parv. p. 291.—OF. lesse (mod. F. laisse), 'a leash, to hold a dog in;' Cot. Cot. also gives: 'Laisse, the same as Lesse, also, a leash of hounds, &c.' Cf. Ital. lascio, a leash, band; also a legacy, will.—Late L. laxa, a lease, thong; lit. a loose rope; cf. 'Laxa, a lees;' Voc. 592. 5.—L. laxa, fem. of laxus, loose, lax; see Lax. 2. The sense of 'three' arose from the application of the word to the number usually leashed together (Richardson); see Shak. 1 Henry IV, ii. 4. 7. 'A Brace of grehoundis, of ij; a Lece of Grehoundis, of iij;' Book of St. Alban's, fol. f 6, col. 2. Der. leash, verb, Hen. V, prol. 7.

Plowman, B. v. 192, formed with suffix -en, as in gold-en; also leather-y.

LEAVE (1), to quit, abandon, forsake. (E.) ME. leuen (with u = v), pt. t. lafte, lefte, pp. laft, left; Chaucer, C. T. 8126, 14204, 10500 (E 250, B 3388, F 186). AS. lēfan, Grein, ii. 162. The lit. sense is 'to leave a heritage,' to leave behind one.—AS. lāf, a heritage, residue, remnant. OFries. lēva, to leave.—Icel. leifa, to leave, leave a heritage; from leif, a leaving, patrimony. β. The Goth. form is laibjan, only in comp. bi-laibjan, to leave behind; from the sb. laiba, a remnant. Teut. type **laibjan-*, to leave; from **laib-*, as in AS. lāf, Icel. leif, Goth. laiba, above. And **laib-* is the 2nd stem of Teut. leihan-, to remain, as in AS. be-lifan, G. b-leiben from OHG. bi-liban. From the Idg. √LEIP, whence Gk. λίπ-αρός, persistent; the weaker grade **lip* is in Skt. lip, to smear, Gk. λίπ-ος, grease, Russ. lip-kii, sticky, Lith. lip-ti, to adhere to. See Live. Brugmann, i. § 87. ¶ The Gk. λείπειν answers to L. linguere, and to Goth. leihtwan, G. leihen, to lend (orig. to let go). See Loan. Der. leav-ings.

LEAVE (2), permission, farewell. (E.) In the phr. 'to take leave,' the word is the same as leave, permission. The orig. sense was, probably, 'to take permission to go,' hence, 'to take a formal farewell.' Cf. 'to give leave.' We may, then, remember that the sb. is entirely independent of the verb above. ME. leue, leawe (with u = v). 'By your leue' = with your permission; Chaucer, C. T. 13377. 'But taketh his leue' = but takes his leave; id. 1219. AS. lēaf, permission; Grein, ii. 168; whence was formed the verb lēfan (OAnglian lēfan), to permit = ME. leuen, to permit, grant (now obsolete), one of the most troublesome words in old authors, as it is frequently confounded by editors with ME. lenen, to lend, and misprinted accordingly; see note to Chaucer's Prioress's Tale, ed. Skeat, l. 1873. The orig. sense of leave is 'that which is acceptable or pleasing,' or simply 'pleasure;' and the Teut. type is **laudā*, fem.; from **laud-*, 2nd grade of Teut. root **leud-*, whence AS. lēof, pleasing, lief, dear; see Lief. + Du. -lof, only in the comp. oor-lof, permission, ver-lof, leave; cf. also Icel. leyfi, leave; leyfa, to permit; lofan, permission; G. ur-laub, leave, furlough; ver-laub, leave, permission; er-lauben, to permit. See Furlough and Love.

LEAVEN, the ferment which makes dough rise. (F.—L.) ME. leuain, leuein (with u for v). 'He is the leuein of the bred' [bread]; Gower, C. A. i. 294; bk. iii. 446; cf. Prompt. Parv. p. 300.—F. levain, 'leaven;' Cot.—L. leuāmen, an alleviation, mitigation; but used (here) in the orig. sense of 'that which raises.' [Ducange records the sense of 'leaven' for Late L. leuāmentum, a parallel form to leuāmen.]—L. leuāre, to raise. See Lever. Similarly, Ital. lievito, leaven, is from Ital. lievare, to raise (< L. leuāre). Der. leaven, verb.

LECHER, a man addicted to lewdness. (F.—G.) In early use. ME. lechur, lechour; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 53, l. 27; Ancren Riwle, p. 216; Rob. of Glouc. p. 119; l. 2529.—OF. lecheor (Godefroy), lecheur (Cotgrave), lit. one who licks up.—OF. lechier, to lick, to live in gluttony (Godefroy), mod. F. lécher, to lick.—OHG. lecchōn, G. lecken, to lick; cognate with E. Lick, q.v. Der. lecher-ous, P. Plowman, C. ii. 25; lecher-ous-ly, lecher-ous-ness; lecher-y, ME. lecherie, leccherie, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 11, l. 3. Cf. lickerish.

LECTERN, LECTURN, a reading-desk. (F.—L.) 'Leterone, lectorne, lectrone, lectrun, deske, Lectrinum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 299. Spelt lecterne in Minshew, ed. 1627. Adapted from OF. letrun, a lectern (Godefroy), with c added from the Late L. form.—Late L. lectrum, a reading-desk or pulpit (attributed to Isidore of Seville). For **leg-trum*; from leg-ere, to read (below). [Cf. L. mulc-trum, a milking-pail; from mulg-ere, to milk.] See Legend. Some forms, as OF. leitrin, F. lutrin, were influenced by Late L. lectrinum, by-form of lectrum. Hence lectryne, a lectern; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, vi. 447.

LECTION, a reading, portion to be read. (F.—L.) 'Other copies and various lections;' Milton, A Defence of the People of England. (R.)—OF. lection, a reading, a lesson (Godefroy).—L. lectionem, acc. of lectio, a reading; cf. L. lectus, pp. of legere, to gather, read; see Legend. Der. lection-ary; and see below. Doublet, lesson.

LECTURE, a discourse, formal reproof. (F.—L.) 'Wherof oure present lecture speaketh;' Sir T. More, p. 1301 c.—F. lecture, 'a lecture, a reading;' Cot.—Late L. lectūra, a commentary; cf. lectus, pp. of legere, to read; see Legend. Der. lecture-ship.

LEDGE, a slight shelf, ridge, small moulding. (E.) Palsgrave has: 'Ledge of a shelve, apuy, i.e. support; also: 'Ledge of a dore, barre.' See Legge in Prompt. Parv. In Norfolk, a bar of a gate, or stile, of a chair, table, &c., is termed a ledge, according to Forby. A door made of three or four upright boards, fastened by cross-pieces, is called a ledger-door; a ledger is a horizontal slab of stone, a horizontal bar, and is also called a ligger (Halliwell). A ligger is 'a liar,' that which lies, from AS. ligan, to lie; and ledge is from a like source, as it was evidently formed from ME. leggen [gg = dj], to lay, the causal of liggen, AS. ligan (above). So also MHG. leкке, legge, a layer, stratum, from OHG. lekkān, to lay. We may also note Norw. lega, a lying, couch, lair, bed, a support upon which anything rests. See Lay (1), Lie (1).

LEDGER, a book in which a summary of accounts is preserved. (E.) Formerly called a ledger-book; Kersey, ed. 1715. Spelt lidger in 1538, with reference to a bible that was always to lie in the same place (N.E.D.). The word had other meanings, most of them involving the sense of 'lying still.' Thus a ledger was a horizontal slab of stone (Halliwell); leger ambassadors were such as remained for some time at a foreign court; see leiger in Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 59. A ledger-bait was a bait that was 'fixed or made to rest in one certain place'; I. Walton, Angler, pt. i. c. 8. 'A rusty musket, which had lien long leger in his shop'; Fuller's Worthies, London (R.). Formed, like ledge above, from ME. leggen [gg = dj], to lay, or from ME. liggen [gg = dj], to lie; which were much confused. Cf. prov. E. ledge, to lie (E.D.D.). A similar formation occurs in Du. legger, 'one that lyes down' (Sewel); hence mod. Du. legger, the nether mill-stone [answering to E. ledger, a horizontal slab of stone]; MDu. ligger, 'a daily Booke kept for ones use,' i.e. a ledger (Hexham); MDu. leggen, to lie, once in common use, though the form is liggen, and the proper sense of leggen is to lay. We know how these words are constantly confused in English. 'Te bed leggen, to ly a-bed. Neer leggen, to lie down. Waar legt hy t'huys, where does he ly, or lodge?' Sewel. See LIE (1). ¶ Thus a ledger-book is one that lies always ready in one place. The etymology of the word was ill-understood, and it was confused with OF. legier, light; see Ledger-line. Hence it was sometimes spelt ligier (see Richardson); and Howell goes so far as to use a leger-book in the sense of a portable memorandum-book, apparently from thus mistaking the true sense. 'Some do use to have a small leger-booke fairely bound up table-book-wise,' i.e. like a memorandum-book; Howell, Forrairie Travell, sect. iv, ed. Arber, p. 27. N.B. The earliest quotation in the N.E.D. is dated 1481, with reference to 'a large copy of the breviary'; but Wylie, Hist. Henry IV, iv. 198, cites '10 portos, 3 liggers' in 1401.

LEDGER-LINE, in music; one of the short lines added above or below the stave to accommodate notes lying beyond the usual five lines. (Hybrid; E. and L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Spelt leger-line in Ash's Dict., 1775. 'You add a line or two to the five lines, . . . those lines . . . being called Ledger-lines;' Playford, Skill of Music, i. 6; ed. 1700 (N.E.D.). So called from lying flat; cf. ledger, a horizontal timber (N.E.D.). ¶ Not from F. léger, OF. legier, light; the F. name is ligne additionnelle.

LEE, a sheltered place, shelter; part of a ship away from the wind. (Scand.) ME. lee, shelter. 'We lurked vnder lee,' we lay hid under shelter; Mort Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 1446. A-lee = on the lee; Deposition of Rich. II, ed. Skeat, iv. 74. The word and its use are perhaps both Scand.; the E. word is lew, a shelter, still in use provincially (E.D.D.), though lee also occurs. Prob. from Icel. hlē, lee, used only by seamen; sigla ā hlē, to stand to leeward; hlē-borð, the lee-side; Dan. læ; Swed. lä. + Du. lij. Cognate with AS. hlēo, hleow, a covering, protection, shelter; Grein, ii. 82; whence prov. E. lew, a shelter, also, as adj., warm; see Lew. β. From AS. hlēo was formed the sb. hlēoð, hleowð, a shelter (Grein, ii. 83); the same word as prov. E. lewth, shelter, warmth. With these forms we may compare Icel. hlý, warmth, hlær, hlýr, warm, hlýja, to shelter. All from a Teut. type **hlewoz*, adj. warm. ¶ Note the pronunciation lew-ard, for lee-ward, due to E. lew. Der. lee-shore, lee-side, lee-way. Also lee-ward, allied to MDu. lywaard, lee-ward (Sewel); the mod. Du. form being lijwaarts.

LEECH (1), a physician. (E.) In Shak. Timon, v. 4. 84. ME. leche, Chaucer, C. T. 15524 (G 56). AS. læce, a physician; Matt. ix. 12; Lu. iv. 23. Connected with AS. læcnian, to heal; Grein, ii. 150. Cf. Icel. lækni, a physician; lækna, to cure, heal; Dan. læge, a physician; læge, to heal; Swed. läkare, a physician; from läka, to heal; Goth. leikeis, lēkeis, a physician, Lu. iv. 23; connected with leikinon, lēkinon, to heal; OHG. lāhhi, lāchi, a physician; connected with OHG. lāhhiñon, to heal, MHG. lāchenen, to employ remedies, MHG. lāchen, a remedy. β. The AS. læce, Dan. læge, Goth. lēkeis, are all from a Teut. type **lækjoz*, a healer; from Idg. base **lēg-*. γ. We may further compare Irish and Gael. leigh, OIrish liaig, a physician.

LEECH (2), a blood-sucking worm. (E.) ME. leche, Prompt. Parv. p. 291. AS. læce; we find 'Sanguisuga, vel hirudo, læce' in Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum; Voc. 121. 36. Lit. 'the healer'; and the same word as the above.

LEECH (3), LEACH, the border or edge of a sail at the sides. (Scand.) 'Leech, the edge of a sail, the goring;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'The leetch of a sail, vox nautica;' Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Penne d'une voile, the leech of a saile;' Cot. Ultimately allied to Icel. lik, a leech-line; Swed. lik, a bolt-rope, stående liken, the leeches; Dan. lig, a bolt-rope, staende lig, a leech. + MDu. lyken, a bolt-rope (Sewel); Du. lijk (see Franck).

LEEK, a kind of onion. (E.) ME. leek, Chaucer, C. T. 3877

(A 3879); P. Plowman, B. v. 82. AS. lēac; Voc. 295. 22. + Du. look; Icel. laukr; Dan. løg; Swed. lök; G. lauch. Teut. types **laukoz*, m.; **laukom*, n. Root unknown; perhaps from Teut. type **lauk*, as in AS. lēac, pt. t. of lūcan, to weed, to pull up. Der. gar-lic, char-lock, hem-lock.

LEER, to cast side-glances. (E.) 'I leare or lere, as a dogge dothe underneth a dore;' Palsgrave. Cf. Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 480, 2 Hen. IV. v. 5. 7; Troil. v. 1. 97. The verb is a later development from the ME. lere, meaning the cheek, also the face, complexion, mien. 'A loveli lady of lere' = a lady of lovely mien; P. Plowman, B. i. 3. It was orig. almost always used in a good sense, and with adjectives expressive of beauty, but in Skelton we find it otherwise in two passages. 'Her lothely lere Is nothyng clere, But vgly of chere' = her loathsome look is not at all clear, but ugly of aspect; Elynoure Rummyng, l. 12. 'Your lothesum lere to loke on;' 2nd Poem against Gamesche, l. 5. Shakespeare has it in two senses; (1) the complexion, aspect, As You Like It, iv. 1. 67, Titus Andron. iv. 2. 119; (2) a winning look, Merry Wives, i. 3. 50. At a later period it is generally used in a sinister sense. — AS. hlēor, the cheek; hence the face, look, Grein, ii. 85. + OSax. hlīor, the cheek; MDu. lier (Oudemans); Icel. hlýr, pl. the cheeks. Der. leer, sb., a side-glance.

LEES, dregs of wine. (F.) In A. V. Isa. xxv. 6, Jer. xlviii. 11. 'Verily the lies of wine are so strong;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 2. ME. lyes, pl.; Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 1040. Gower has lie, sing., sediment; Conf. Amant. i. 309; bk. iii. 895. A pl. sb., from a sing. not much used. — F. lie, 'the lees, dregs, grounds, thick substance that settles in the bottome of liquor;' Cot. Of unknown origin; the Late L. form is lia; the phr. 'fecla sive lias uini' occurs in a MS. of the 10th century (Littré). Moncaut has Gascon lio, 'lie de vin.' Perhaps Celtic; cf. Bret. lec'hid, sediment, W. llaid, mire. Körting, § 5574; Thurneysen, p. 66.

LEET, a special court of record held by certain lords of manors. (E.?) 'Americyn in a corte or lete;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt lēta in Law Latin (Cowell); and lete in AF., as in Stat. Realm, i. 342 (1353); Year-books of Edw. I., 1392, p. 297. Lete is perhaps the AF. spelling and adaptation of AS. lēð; for which see Lathe (2). β. Or perhaps it was adapted from Icel. leið, which, according to Vigfusson, means precisely 'a leet.' γ. Or perhaps a particular use of leat, q. v. Cf. Low G. gelaat, G. gelass, room, space.

Plowman, A. ii. 5; Layamon, 24461. Rare in AS., which has the term winster instead; see Grein, ii. 716. We do, however, find 'inanis, left,' in a Gloss (Mone, Quellen, i. 443), and the same MS. has senne for synne (sin); so that left is the Kentish form of lyft, with the sense of 'worthless' or 'weak'; cf. AS. lyft-ād, palsy. NFriesic leeft, leefter hond (left hand); Outzen. + MDu. luft, left (Oudemans); Kilian also gives the form lucht. β. The t is a suffix; cf. EFries. luf, weak. The OF. leisir was orig. an infin. mood, signifying 'to be permitted'; Littré. — L. licēre, to be permitted. See Licence. Der. leisure-ly. We may note the bad spelling; it should be leis-er, leis-ir, or lezir; but is now mispronounced.

Not in Todd's Johnson. — Norweg. lemende; also used in many various forms, as læmende, limende, lemende, lömende, lemming, lemelde, &c.; see Aasen; Swed. lemel; Icel. lömundur; Swed. dial. lemming. There is also, according to Ihre (Lexicon Laponicum), a Lapp form, luomek. β. Origin obscure; Aasen thinks that the word means 'laming', i.e. spoiling, very destructive, and connects it with Norweg. lemja, to palsy, strike, beat; but this is 'popular etymology.' Perhaps it is of Lapp origin, after all.

LEMNISCATE, one of certain closed curves, resembling the figure 8. (L.—Gk.) First in 1781. From L. lēmniscātus, adorned with a ribbon; from the ribbon-like form. — L. lēmniscus, a pendent ribbon. — Gk. λημνίσκος, a fillet. Said to be from Gk. λῆνος, wool; see Wool.

The final -n may be Latin; whence, perhaps, Pers. limūn, limūnā, a lemon, citron; Richardson's Pers. Dict., p. 1282, col. 1. Cf. Turk. limūn; Arab. laimūn, a lemon; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 517. Der. lemon-ade, from F. limonade.

LEND, to let for hire, allow the use of for a time. (E.) The final d is excrescent, as in sound from F. son. ME. lenen, pt. t. lenede, lende, lente, pp. lened, lend, lent. Thus the mod. final d was easily suggested by the forms of the pt. t. and pp. 'Leen me your hond' = lend me your hand; Chaucer, C. T. 3084 (A 3082). 'This lond he hire lende' = he lent [granted] her this land; Layamon, l. 228. AS. lēnan, to lend, also, to give, grant; Grein, ii. 163. — AS. lēn, a loan, Grein, ii. 163. + Du. leenen, to lend; from leen, a fee, fief; Icel. lāna, to lend; from lān, a loan; Dan. laane, to lend; from laan, a loan; OHG. lēhanōn, G. lehn, to lend (a provincial word); from OHG. lēhan, lehen, lehn, a fief. See further under Loan. Der. lend-er; lend-ings, K. Lear, iii. 4. 113.

LENGTH, extent, the quality of being long. (E.) ME. lengthe (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 83, 4428 (B 8). AS. lengþu; the dat. lengþe occurs in the AS. Chron. an. 1122. For **langiðā*. Formed with suffix -ðu and vowel-change of a to e from AS. lang, long. + Du. lengte, from lang; Dan. længde, from lang; Swed. längd, from lång; Icel. lengd, from langr. See Long. Der. length-en, in which the final -en has a causal force, though this peculiar formation is conventional and unoriginal; in the ME. lengthen, the final -en merely denoted the infinitive mood, and properly produced the verb to length, as in Palsgrave, and in Shak. Passionate Pilgrim, l. 210. Also length-y, length-i-ly, length-i-ness; length-wise, length-ways.

LENIENT, mild, merciful. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 659. — L. lenient-, stem of pres. part. of lenire, to soften, soothe. — L. lenis, soft, mild. See Lenity, Lithe. Der. lenient-ly, lenient-y.

Root uncertain; but re-lent and lithe are related words. Der. lenit-ive = OF. lenitif, a 'lenitive' (Cot.), from Late L. lenitivus. And see Lenient.

LENS, a piece of glass used for optical purposes. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. So called, from the resemblance in shape to the seed of a lentil, which is like a double-convex lens. — L. lens; see Lentil. Der. lenticul-ar, from L. lenticula, a little lentil.

LENT, a fast of forty days, beginning with Ash Wednesday. (E.) The fast is in the spring of the year, and the old sense is simply 'spring.' ME. lenten, lente, lent; spelt lenten, P. Plowman, B. xx. 359. AS. lenceten, the spring; Grein, ii. 167. + Du. lente, the spring; G. lenz, spring; OHG. lenzin, lengizen. β. Supposed to be derived from AS. Du, and G. lang, long, because in spring the days lengthen; Kluge suggests that the orig. Teut. type was **langi-tino-*, i.e. 'long day'; where -tino- is allied to Skt. dina-, Lith. dēna, a day. Der. lenten, adj., Hamlet, ii. 2. 329; here the suffix -en is not adjectival (as in gold-en), but the whole word is the ME. lenten fully preserved; so also Lenten-tide = AS. lenceten-tīd, spring-time, Gen. xlviii. 7.

LENTIL, an annual plant, bearing pulse for food. (F.—L.) ME. lentil; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1488. — OF. lentille, 'the lindle or lentill'; Cot. — L. lenticula, a little lentil; double dimin. (with suffix -cul-) from lenti-, decl. stem of lens, a lentil. See Lens. Der. lenticul-ar, resembling a lens or lentil.

LENTISK, the mastic-tree. (F.—L.) In Turner's Herbal (1562); and in Cotgrave. — F. lentisque, 'the lentiske or mastick-tree'; Cot. — L. lentiscum, lentiscus, a mastic-tree; named from the clamminess.

of the resin yielded by it. — L. lenti-, decl. stem of lentus, tenacious, sticky, pliant. See Relent and Lithe.

LEO, a lion. (L. — Gk. — Egypt.) As the name of a zodiacal sign; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, i. 8. 2. We even find AS. leo, Grein, ii. 171. — L. leo, a lion; see Lion. Der. leon-ine = F. leonin (Cot.); from L. leōn-in-us, from leōn-, stem of leo.

Hist.* b. viii. c. 16. — Gk. λεό-, λεοντο-, secondary form or decl. stem of λέων, a lion; and πάρδος, a pard. See Lion and Pard.

LEPER, one afflicted with leprosy. (F. — L. — Gk.) The form of the word is founded on a mistake; the word properly means the disease itself (2 Kings, v. 11), now called leprosy; the old term for 'leper' was leprous man. 'And loo! a leprouse man cam . . . And anon the lepre of him was clensid; Wyclif, Matt. viii. 2, 3. And see Henryson, Test. of Cresseid, ll. 438, 451, 474, 480, &c. — F. lepre, 'a leprosie'; Cot. — L. lepra. — Gk. λέπρα, leprosy. So called because it makes the skin scaly. — Gk. λεπρός, scaly, scabby, rough. — Gk. λέπος, a scale, husk, rind. — Gk. λέπειν, to strip, peel, take off the husk or rind, scale. Cf. Russ. lupite, to scale, peel, bark; Lithuanian lūpti, to scale, peel. Der. lepr-ous = OF. leprous, from L. leprōsus, adj.; whence was coined the sb. lepros-y, Matt. viii. 3.

LEPIDOPTERA, s. pl., a certain order of insects. (Gk.) Modern, and scientific; due to Linnæus. Used of the butterfly, and other insects whose four wings are covered with very fine scales. Coined from Gk. λεπίδο-, decl. stem of λεπίς, a scale; and πτερόν, pl. of πτερόν, a wing. Λεπίς is from λέπειν, to scale (see Leprosy); and πτερόν is allied to E. feather, from πτ-, weak grade of ✓PET, to fly; see Feather, Pen. Der. lepidopter-ous.

LEPORINE, pertaining to the hare. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1656. Either from F. leporin, 'of or belonging to a hare' (Cot.), or rather directly from L. leporinus, with the same sense. — L. lepor-, for **lepos-*, stem of lepus, a hare. See Leveret.

LEPROSY; see under Leper. (F. — L. — Gk.)

LESION, an injury, wound. (F. — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — MF. lesion, 'hurt, wounding, harme'; Cot. — L. læsiōnem, acc. of læsio, an injury; cf. læsus, pp. of læsere, to hurt. Der. (from L. lædere), col-lide, col-lis-ion, e-lide, il-lis-ion.

LESS, smaller. (E.) Used as compar. of little, but from a different root; the coincidence in the first letter is accidental. ME. lessē, lassē, adj., les, adv. 'The lesse luue' = the less love; Ancren Riwle, p. 92, l. 7. Les as adv., id. p. 30, l. 7. AS. læssa, adj., læs, adv.; Grein, ii. 164. — OFries. lëssa, less. β. Lëssa stands for læs-ra, by assimilation; Teut. type **lais-iz-on-*; and læs represents the Teut. type **lais-iz*, both formed (with comp. suffix -iz-) from a base **lais-*, for **lais-a-*, small; allied to Lith. lësas, thin, small. From Idg. base **leis-*.

LEAST, the superl. form, is the ME. lestē, adj., P. Plowman, B. iii. 24; lest, adv., Gower, C. A. i. 153; bk. i. 3285. AS. læst (whence læst by contraction, Grein, ii. 164; from the same base **lais-*, with the usual suffix -est (for -ist, Gk. -ιστος). Der. less, sb.; less-er, a double comparative, Gen. i. 16; less-en, vb., from ME. lassen, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1800, lessin (for lessen), Prompt. Parv., p. 298; with a new suffix -en (as in length-en) added, after the loss of the ME. infin. suffix -en, -e. And see lest.

-LESS, suffix. (E.) AS. læs, cognate with Loose, q. v.

LESSEE, LESSOR; see under Lease.

LESSON, a reading of scripture, portion of scripture read, a task, lecture, piece of instruction. (F. — L.) ME. lesson, Chaucer, C. T. 9069 (E 1193); spelt lescun, Ancren Riwle, p. 282, l. 3. — OF. leçon, F. leçon. — L. lectiōnem, acc. of lectio, a reading; from legere, to read; see Legend. Doublet, lection.

LEST, for fear that, that not. (E.) Not for least, as sometimes erroneously said, but due to less. It arose from the AS. equivalent expression ðy læs ðe, as in the following sentence. 'Nelle we ðas race nā leng tēon, ðy læs ðe hit eow æþryt þynce' = we will not prolong this story farther, lest it seem to you tedious; Sweet's A. S. Reader, p. 94, l. 211. Here ðy læs ðe literally = for the reason less that (L. quō minus); where ðy (= for the reason) is the instrumental case of the def. article; læs = less, adv.; and ðe (= that) is the indeclinable relative. β. At a later period ðy was dropped, læs became les, and læs ðe, coalescing, became one word lesthe, altered (regularly) to leste, and lastly to lest, for ease of pronunciation. The form leste occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 58, l. 12, whilst the older expression þi les þe occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, l. 2 from bottom; so that the word took the form leste about the beginning of the 13th century. See Nevertheless.

LET (1), to allow, permit, suffer, grant. (E.) ME. leten (with one t), a strong verb; pt. t. lat, let, leet; pp. laten, leten, lete. See Chaucer, C. T. 128, 510 (A 508). AS. lætan, létan, to let, allow; pt. t. lēt, leort, pp. læten; Grein, ii. 165. — Du. laten, pt. t. liet, pp. gelaten; Icel. lata, pt. t. lét, pp. lätinn; Dan. lade, pt. t. lod, pp. ladet; Swed. lata, pt. t. lät, pp. läten; Goth. lētan, pt. t. lailōt, pp. lētans; G. lassen, pt. t. liess, pp. gelassen. β. The Teut. type is **lēt-an-*, pt. t. **lētōt*, pp. **lētanoz*. Idg. ✓LE(I)D; from the weak grade **lad* comes E. late. See Late. Brugmann, i. § 478. Cf. Lith. lėidmi, I let (base lėid). And see Let (2).

It has been derived from L. **laicātus*, belonging to the laity, parallel to Late L. clericātus, whence clergy; and if so, is from L. laicus, a word of Gk. origin; see Laic. Further related to Russ. ležati, to lie; L. base leg-, to lie; only in lectus, a bed; Gk. base λεχ-, appearing in aorist ἐλεξα, Homer, Iliad, xiv. 252; λέχος, a bed. ¶ As to the modern E. form, which depends on the AS. stem lig-, occurring in the 2nd and 3rd person sing. indic. and in the imp. sing., see Sweet, E. Gram. § 1293. The pp. lien occurs in Gen. xxvi. 10, Ps. lxviii. 13. Der. lay, q.v., law, q.v.

LIE (2), to tell a lie, speak falsely. (E.) ME. liȝen, lien, lyen, a strong verb; Layamon, 3034, Chaucer, C. T. 765 (A 763); pt. t. leh, Layamon, 12942, 17684; pp. lowen, P. Plowman, B. v. 95. Teut. type **leugan-*, pt. t. **laug*, pp. **luganoz*. Teut. root leug; Idg. √LEUGH. Cf. Russ. lgate, liugate, to lie; loje, a lie. Der. lie, sb. = AS. lyge, lige, Grein, ii. 199; li-ar, cf. AS. lēogere; ly-ing, ly-ing-ly.

LIEF, dear, beloved, loved, pleasing. (E.) Now chiefly used in the phr. 'I had as lief,' which is common in Shak.; see Hamlet, iii. 2. 4. ME. lief, leef, lef, Chaucer, C. T. 3790 (A 3792); vocative and pl. leue (= leve), id. 1138; compar. leuer (= lever), id. 295; superl. leuest (= levest), P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 16. AS. lēof, liof, vocative lēofa, pl. lēofe; compar. lēofra, superl. lēofesta, Grein, ii. 174, 175 (a common word). + Du. lief, dear; Icel. ljúfr; Swed. ljuf; Goth. liubs; G. lieb, MHG. liep, OHG. liup. Teut. type **leuboz*; Idg. type **leubhos*. Cf. also Russ. lioboi, agreeable; liobite, to love. β. All from Teut. base LEUB, to be pleasing to; cf. L. lubet, libet, it pleases; Skt. lubh, to covet, desire. — √LEUBH, to desire. Der. (from the same root) love, leave (2), believe, furlough, lib-idinous.

LIEGE, faithful, subject, true, bound by feudal tenure. (F.—OHG.) α. The etymology is disguised by a change both of sense and usage. We now say 'a liege vassal,' i.e. one bound to his lord; it is easy to see that this sense is due to a false etymology which connected the word with L. ligātus, bound, pp. of ligāre, to bind; see Ligament. β. But the fact is, that the older phrase was 'a liege lord,' and the older sense 'a lord entitled to feudal allegiance.' The phrase 'my liege man' occurs twice, and 'my liege men' once, in Will. of Palerne, 1174, 2663, 3004. The expression 'vr [our] lige louerd' occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 457, l. 9376; and in Chaucer, C. T. 12271 (Six-text, C 337, where the MSS. have lige, lege, liege). In Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, v. 165, we find: 'Bot and I lif in lege pouste' = but if I survive in sovereignty entitled to homage; or, in free sovereignty. — OF. lige, 'liege, leall, or loyall; Prince lige, a liege lord; Seigneur lige, the same;' Cot. Also (better) spelt liege in the 12th cent. (Littré). — OHG. ledec, ledic, also lidic, lidig (mod. G. ledig), free, unfettered, free from all obligations; which seems to have been the orig. sense. The expression 'ligius homo, quod Teutonicè dicitur ledighman' occurs A.D. 1253; Ducange. 'A liege lord' seems to have been a lord of a free band; and his lieges, though serving under him, were privileged men, free from other obligations. B. Further; the OHG. lidic is cognate with Icel. lidugr, free, also ready, willing; and is prob. allied to OHG. lidan, to go, depart, experience, take one's way; cognate with AS. liðan, to go, travel. Also, the Icel. lidugr, ready, free, is from Icel. liða, to travel; see Lead (1). ¶ For further information on this difficult word, see Diez, Scheler, and Littré; and the MDu. ledig, free, in Kilian. And see Körting, § 5506. 'Leecheyt [= ledigheid]' is moeder van alle quaethede' = idleness is mother of all vices; O. Du. Proverb, cited in Oudemans. Ducange's attempt to connect the word with Late L. litus, a kind of vassal, is a failure.

LIEGER, LEIGER, an ambassador; see Ledger.

LIEN, a legal claim, a charge on property. (F.—L.) A legal word; not in Todd's Johnson; preserved as a law term from the 16th century. — F. lien, a band, or tye, . . . anything that fasteneth or fettereth; Cot. — L. ligāmen, a band, tie. — L. ligāre, to tie; see Ligament. And see Liane.

LIEU, place, stead. (F.—L.) In the phr. 'in lieu of' = in place of; Temp. i. 2. 123. — F. lieu, 'a place, roome;' Cot. Spelt liu in the 10th century. (Littré). — L. locum, acc. of locus, a place; see Locus. Der. lieu-tenant, q.v.

LIEUTENANT, a deputy, vicegerent, &c. (F.—L.) ME. lieutenant, Gower, C. A. i. 73; bk. i. 947; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 47. — F. lieutenant, 'a lieutenant, deputy;' Cot. — L. locum-tenentem, acc. of locum-tenens, one who holds another's place, a deputy. — L. locum, acc. of locus, a place; and tenens, pres. part. of tenēre, to hold. See Locus and Tenant. Der. lieutenancy. ¶ The pron.

as leftenant is old; cf. luftenand in Barbour, Bruce, xiv. 139. Cf. OF. luef, for lieu (Godefroy).

LIFE, animate existence. (E.) ME. lif, lyf, gen. case lyues, dat. lyue, pl. lyues (with u=v); Chaucer, C. T. 2757, 2778, 14100 (A 2755, 2776, B 3284). AS. lif, gen. lifes, dat. life, pl. lifas; Grein, ii. 183. +Icel. lif, lifi; Dan. liv; Swed. lif; OHG. līb, leip, life; mod. G. leib, the body. Cf. Du. lijf, the body. β. Teut. type **liþom*, n. This sb. is a derivative from Teut. root **liþ* (weak grade **liþ*), to remain, occurring in Icel. lifa, to be left, to remain, to live, AS. lifian, to be remaining, to live; OHG. līban, līpan, only used in the comp. belīban, MHG. beliben, G. bleiben, to remain, be left. γ. The sense 'remain' arose from that of 'to cleave'; and thus life is connected with Lithuanian lipti, to cleave, stick, Skt. lip, to anoint, smear, Gk. ἀλείφειν, to anoint, λίπ-αφής, persistent; the form of the root being LEIP; Fick, i. 754. Der. life-blood, life-boat, life-estate, life-guard, q. v., life-hold, life-insurance, &c.; also life-less, life-less-ly, life-less-ness, life-long. Also live, live-ly, live-lihood, live-long. From the same source, leave (1). And see Alive.

LIFEGUARD, a body-guard. (Hybrid; E. and F.) 'The Cherethites were a kind of lifeguard to king David;' Fuller, Pisgah Sight of Palestine, ed. 1650, p. 217. From Life and Guard. ¶ See Trench, Eng. Past and Present. The word is not borrowed from the G. leibgarde, a body-guard; and it is much to the purpose to observe that, if it were so, it would make no difference; for the G. leib is the G. spelling of the word which we spell life, despite the difference in sense. The MHG. līp meant 'life' as well as 'body.'

LIFELONG, lasting for a life-time. (E.) Modern; suggested by livelong; see Livelong.

LIFT (1), to elevate, raise. (Scand.) ME. liften, to raise; Prompt. Parv. p. 303; P. Plowman, B. v. 359; Havelok, 1028; spelt leften (lefftenn), Ormulum, 2658, 2744, 2755, 6141, 7528, &c. The orig. sense is to raise aloft, to exalt into the air. — Icel. lyfta (pronounced lyfta), to lift; allied to loft, the air; Dan. løfte, to lift; loft, a loft, a cock-loft, orig. 'the air'; Swed. lyfta, to lift; loft, a loft, garret, orig. 'the air.' Teut. type **lufþjan*-; from **lufþuz*, the air; see Loft. The i=y, mutation of u (o).

LIFT (2), to steal. (E.) 'But if night-robbers lift [steal from] the well-stored hive;' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 228, l. 916. The sb. lifter, a thief, occurs in Shak., Troil. i. 2. 129. This sense arose from that of lifting up and carrying away; and the word is ult. the same as Lift (1). See N. E. D. Skelton has: 'Conuey it be [by] crafte, lyft and lay asyde;' Magnificence, l. 1373.

LIGAMENT, a band, the membrane connecting the moveable bones. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. ME. ligament, Lanfranc, Cirurgie, p. 24, l. 1. — F. ligament, 'a ligament, or ligature;' Cot. — L. ligamentum, a tie, band. — L. ligā-re, to tie; with suffix -mentum. Der. ligament-al, ligament-ous. From L. ligāre we have also ligature, liable, liane, liator, lien, lime-hound, ally, alligation, alloy, ally, league (1), oblige, rally (1).

LIGAN, as if from L. ligāre; corrupt form of Lagan, q. v.

LIGATURE, a bandage. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Lanfranc, Cirurgie, p. 177, l. 17. — F. ligature, 'a ligature, tie, band;' Cot. — L. ligātūra, a binding, bandage; from ligāre, to bind; see Ligament.

LIGHT (1), illumination. (E.) ME. light, Chaucer, C. T. 1989, 1991 (A 1987, 1989). AS. leoht, Grein, ii. 177 (cf. lyhtan, lihtan, to shine, id. ii. 200); O Merc. lēht, whence ME. liht, light. + Du. licht; G. licht, OHG. liht; Goth. liukath, light. β. Observe that the t is a mere suffix; Teut. type **leuh-tom*, n., related to **leuh-toz*, adj., 'bright,' as in E. light, adj. The Goth. liukath answers to Teut. type **leuh-a-thom*, Idg. type **leuk-o-tom*. γ. Neglecting the final t, we have cognate words in Icel. ljós (Teut. type **leuh-som*), light, Icel. logi, a flame (whence Lowland Scotch lowe, a flame). Idg. root LEUQ; whence L. lūx, light, L. lūmen (= luc-men), light, lūna (= luc-sna), moon; with numerous connected terms; also Gk. λευκός, white, bright, λύχνος (= luc-nos), a light, lamp, &c. Cf. Skt. ruch, to shine. See Lucid. Der. light-house. Also light, verb, ME. lighten, Chaucer, C. T. 2428, AS. lyhtan, lihtan, Grein, ii. 200; whence light-er, sb. Also light-en (1), q. v., light-ning, q. v. Connected words are luc-id, luc-i-fer, e-luc-idate, il-lu-minate, lu-nar, lu-natic, luc-ubration, lea (1), q. v., lustre, il-lu-strate, il-lu-strious, luminous, lynx, &c.

LIGHT (2), active, not heavy, unimportant. (E.) ME. light, Chaucer, C. T. 9087 (E 1211); lightly, adv., id. 1463 (A 1461). AS. leoht, adj., Grein, ii. 176; O Merc. liht, Matt. xi. 30 (Rushworth MS.). + Du. ligt; Icel. lætt; Dan. let; Swed. lätt; Goth. leihts, 2 Cor. i. 17; G. leicht, MHG. lihte, OHG. lihti, liht. Teut. type **lihtoz*, for **linhtoz*, **lenhtoz*. Allied to Lith. lengwas, light; from Idg. base **lengh(w)*. From the weak grade of the same we have Gk. ἐλαχ-ύς, Skt. lagh-u(s), light. Allied further to Skt. laugh, to jump over. See Brugmann, i. § 684; Sievers, § 84. Thus the orig. sense is 'springy,' active, nimble; from which the other senses are easily deduced. Der. light-ly, light-ness, lights, q. v., light-fingered, light-headed, light-hearted, light-minded, &c.; light-some, Rom. of the Rose, l. 936; light-some-ness; light-en (2), q. v.; light-er, q. v. From the same root we have (from L. leu-is) lev-ant, lev-er, lev-ity, lev-y, al-lev-iate, &c. And see Lung.

LIGHT (3), to settle, alight, descend. (E.) ME. lighten, lihten; 'adun heo gunnen lihten' = they alighted down; Layamon, 26337; 'he lighte adoun of lyard' = he lighted down from his horse, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 64. β. The sense is to relieve a horse of his burden, and the word is identical with ME. lighten in the sense of to relieve of a burden. The derivation is from the adj. light, not heavy; see Light (2). γ. When a man alights from a horse, he not only relieves the horse of his burden, but completes the action by descending or alighting on the earth; hence light came to be used in the sense of to descend, settle, often with the prep. on. 'New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;' Hamlet, iii. 4. 59; 'this murderous shaft Hath yet not lighted;' Macb. ii. 3. 148. Hence this verb is (in sense) a doublet of Lighten (2), q. v., as well as of Lighten (3). Der. light-er, q. v. And see Alight, verb.

LIGHTEN (1), to illuminate, flash. (E.) The force of the final -en is somewhat dubious, but appears to have arisen in the transitive form. 1. Intrans. to shine as lightning; 'it lightens,' Romeo, ii. 2. 120. ME. lightenen, Prompt. Parv. p. 304; also lightn-en, to shine; Wyclif, Gen. i. 15. 2. Trans. The trans. use is in Shak. Hen. VIII, ii. 3. 79, Titus And. ii. 3. 227, with the sense 'to illuminate.' ME. lightenen; as in 'that lightend has ur ded sa dim;' Cursor Mundi, 18600. From light, sb. with causal suffix -en, as in length-en, strength-en. We also find the simple form light, as in: 'the eye of heaven that lights the lower world;' Rich. II, iii. 2. 38. This is the ME. lighten, lightè (where the final -en is merely the mark of the infin. mood, often dropped); Chaucer, C. T. 2428 (A 2426). AS. leohtan, to illuminate; Grein, ii. 178. — AS. leoht, light; see Light (1). Der. lightn-ing.

LIGHTEN (2), to make lighter, alleviate. (E.) The final -en is merely formative, as in strength-en, length-en, short-en, weak-en. It is intended to have a causal force. We also find the simple form to light, answering to ME. lighten, lightè (in which the final -en is merely the mark of the infin. mood, and is often dropped). 'Lyghteyn, or make wyghtys [weights] more esy, lightyn burdens, heuy weightis, Allevio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 304. 'To lihten ower heaved' = to take the weight [of hair] off your head; Ancrén Riwe, p. 422. From the adj. light; see Light (2), and Light (3). So also Dan. lette, to lighten, from let, light.

LIGHTEN (3), to descend, settle, alight. (E.) 'O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us;' Te Deum, in the Prayer-book (L. 'fiat'). Here lighten is a mere extension of Light (3), q. v.

LIGHTER, a boat for unlading ships. (Du.) In Skinner, ed. 1671; and in Pope, Dunciad, ii. 287. 'Lyghter, a great bote;' Palsgrave. Probably borrowed from Du. liger, a lighter (Sewel); spelt lichter in Skinner. Hence also lighter-man, from Du. ligterman, a lighter-man (Sewel). — Du. ligt, light (not heavy); see Light (2). ¶ Thus the sense is the same as if the word had been purely English; it means 'unloader;' from the use made of these vessels. Der. lighter-man (as above); lighter-age.

LIGHTNING, an illuminating flash. (E.) 'Thi lightnyngis schyneden;' Wyclif, Ps. lxxvii (lxxviii). 19. Verbal sb. from Lighten (1).

LIGHTS, lungs. (E.) ME. lightes, Destruction of Troy, 10705; þa lihte = the lights, Layamon, 6499, answering to AS. þā lihtan, i. e. the light things. So called from their lightness. So also Russ. legkii, lights; from legkii, light. See Light (2).

LIGN-ALOES, the bitter drug aloes. (Hybrid; L. and Gk.) In Numbers, xxiv. 6 (A. V.). 'A kind of odoriferous Indian tree, usually identified with the Aquilaria Agallochum which supplies the aloes-wood of commerce. Our word is a partial translation of the L. lignum aloës, Gk. ξυλαλόη. The bitterness of the aloes is proverbial;' Bible Wordbook, ed. Eastwood and Wright. Chaucer has: 'As bittre . . . as is lignè aloes, or galle;' Troilus, iv. 1137. — L. lignum, wood; and aloës, of the aloes, gen. case of aloë, the aloes, a word borrowed from Gk. ἀλόη, the aloes. ¶ On the true distinction between aloe and aloes-wood, see note to Aloe. And see Ligneous.

LIGNEOUS, woody, wooden, wood-like. (L.) 'Of a more lignèous nature;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 504. Formed by mere change of L. -us into E. -ous (as in ingenious, arduous, and many others), from L. lignèus, wooden. — L. lignum, wood; a word of disputed origin. Der. from ligni- (for ligno-) we have ligni-fer-ous = wood-producing (from ferre, to bear); ligni-fy = to turn to wood; and from the stem lign- has been formed lign-ite, coal retaining the texture of wood, where the suffix -ite is Gk.

LIGULE, a strap-shaped petal. (L.) A mod. botanical term; also applied to the flat part of the leaf of a grass. — L. ligula, a little tongue, a tongue-shaped extremity; by-form of lingula. Dimin. of lingua, a tongue; see Lingual. But Brugmann (i. § 604) derives lig-ula immediately from lig-, base of ling-ere, to lick. See Lick.

LIGURE, a precious stone. (L.—Gk.) In the Bible, A. V., Ex. xxviii. 19, xxxix. 12. 'Our translators have followed the Septuagint λιγύριον and Vulgate ligurius in translating the Heb. leshem by ligure, which is a precious stone unknown in modern mineralogy;' Bible Wordbook, by Eastwood and Wright. — L. ligūrius. — Gk. λιγύριον, also spelt λιγγούριον, λιγκούριον, λυγκούριον, a sort of gem; acc. to some, a reddish amber, acc. to others, the hyacinth (Liddell).

LIKE (1), similar, resembling. (E.) ME. lyk, lik; Chaucer, C. T. 414, 1973 (A 412, 1971). AS. lic, in comp. ge-lic, like, in which form it is common; Grein, i. 422. The prefix ge- was long retained in the weakened form i- or y-; Chaucer has ylliche as an adv., C. T. 2528 (A 2526). + Du. ge-lijk, like; where ge- is a prefix; Icel. líkr, glíkr, like; where g- = ge-, prefix; Dan. lig; Swed. lik; Goth. ga-leiks, Mark, vii. 8; G. gleich, MHG. ge-lich, OHG. ka-lih. β. All signifying 'resembling in form,' and derived from the Teut. sb. **likom*, a form, shape, appearing in AS. lic, a form, body (whence Lich-gate), OSax. lik, Icel. lík, Goth. leik, the body, &c. Cf. Lith. lygus, like; Skt. linga(m), a mark, sign; W. cyffe-lyb, like, similar; Stokes-Fick, p. 251. Der. like-ly, ME. lykly, Chaucer, C. T. 1174 (A 1172); like-li-hood, ME. liklihed, id. 13526 (B 1786); like-li-ness, ME. liklines, id. 8272 (E 396); like-ness, ME. liknes, P. Plowman, B. i. 113, formerly i-licnes, Ancren Riwle, p. 230, from AS. ge-licnes; like-wise, short for in like wise (see Wise, sb.); like (2), q. v.; like, sb.; lik-en, q. v. All adjectives ending in -ly have adopted this ending from AS. -lic, lit. 'like;' all adverbs in -ly take this suffix from AS. -lice, the same word with the adverbial final -e added. The word like-ly = like-like, a reduplication.

LIKE (2), to approve, be pleased with. (E.) The mod. sense is evolved by an alteration in the construction. The ME. verb lyken (or liken) signified 'to please,' and was used impersonally. We have, in fact, changed the phrase it likes me into I like, and so on throughout. Both senses are in Shak.; see Temp. iii. 1. 43, Hamlet, v. 2. 276. Chaucer has only the intrans. verb. 'And if you lyketh' = and if it please you; C. T. 779 (A 777); still preserved in the mod. phrase 'if you like.' 'That oghte lyken yow' = that ought to please you; id. 13866 (B 2128). AS. lician, to please, rarely lican; Grein, ii. 182. The lit. sense is to be like or suitable for. — AS. lic, ge-lic, like; see Like (1). + Du. lijken, to be like, resemble, seem, suit; from ge-lijk, like; Icel. líka, to like; from líkr, like; Goth. leikan, ga-leikan, to please; from ga-leiks, like; MHG. lichen, ge-lichen, to be like; from ge-lich, like (G. gleich). Der. lik-ing, ME. lykyng, P. Plowman, B. xi. 20, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 271. Also well-liking = well-pleasing, Ps. xcii. 13, Prayer-book.

LIKEN, to consider as similar, to compare. (E.; or Scand.) ME. liknen. 'The water is likned to the worlde;' P. Plowman, B. viii. 39, A. ix. 34. 'And lyknez hit to heuen ly3te' = and likens it to the light of heaven; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 500. But the orig. sense was perhaps intransitive, as in the case of Goth. verbs in -nan, and several Swed. verbs in -na; and the peculiar use and form of the word seem to be Scand. It is intrans. in Allit. Poems, B. 1064. — Swed. likna, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken; from lik, like; Dan. ligne, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken; from lig, like. See Like (1).

LILAC, a flowering shrub. (F.—Span.—Arab.—Pers.) 'The lelache tree;' Bacon, Essay 46. Spelt lilach in Kersey, ed. 1715. — MF. lilac, Cot.; now spelt lilas. — Span. lilac, lila, a lilac. Of Oriental origin. — Arab. lilak, lilāk (Devic). Derived from the Pers. lilaj, lilanj, or lilang, of which the proper sense is the indigo-plant; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1282. Here the initial l stands for n, and the above forms are connected with Pers. nīl, the indigo-plant; whence nīlak (dimin. form, whence Arab. lilak), blueish; Rich. Dict. pp. 1619, 1620. Cf. Skt. nīla-s, dark-blue, nīli, the indigo-plant. Named from the blueish tinge on the flowers in some varieties (Devic).

LILLIPUTIAN, diminutive, very small. (E.) 'The stairs are of lilliputian measurement;' Dickens, American Notes (1850), p. 33. Formed with suffix -ian, from Lilliput, the name of an imaginary country in Gulliver's Travels, inhabited by pygmies six inches high. Coined by Swift (1726).

LILT, to sing cheerfully. (Scand.) Cf. ME. liling-horn, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 1223. The pp. lilted occurs in Early E. Allit. Poems, A. 1207. Connected with Norw. lilla, to sing in a high tone; OSwed. lylla, to lull to sleep (Rietz, s. v. lulla). — Swed. lulla, Dan. lulle, to hum, to lull. See Lull. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 163.

LILY, a bulbous plant. (L.—Gk.) ME. lilie; Chaucer, C. T. 15555 (G 87). AS. lilie, pl. lilian; Matt. vi. 28; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Herbarum. — L. lilium; Matt. vi. 28. — Gk. λείριον, a lily; the change of Gk. ρ to L. l being in accordance with usual laws.

¶ The more usual Gk. name is κρίνον, as in Matt. vi. 28. Der. lili-ac-e-ous = L. liliaceus.

LIMB (1), a member of the body, branch of a tree. (E.) ME. lim, pl. limes; Chaucer, C. T. 4881 (B 461). AS. lim, pl. leomu; Grein, ii. 188; Icel. limr; Dan. and Swed. lem. Teut. types **li-mom*, n.; **li-moz*, m.; allied to AS. li-þ, Goth. li-thus, a limb. See Lay figure. Cf. Lith. lėmũ, trunk, stature.

LIMB (2), the edge or border of a sextant, &c. (L.) 'Limb, in mathematics, the outermost border of an astrolabe; . . in astronomy, the utmost border of the disk or body of the sun or moon, when either is in eclipse;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Kersey also gives the form limbus. — L. limbus, a border, edging, edge. Cotgrave gives MF. limbe de bouteille, 'the mouth or brink of a bottle.' Doublet, limbo.

LIMBECK, the same as Alembic, q. v. Palsgrave has: 'Lembyke for a stillatorie, lembic;' where lembic is a F. form.

LIMBER (1), flexible, pliant. (E.) Not found very early. 'With limber vows;' Wint. Tale, i. 2. 47. Richardson quotes an earlier and better example. 'Ne yet the bargeman, that doth rowe With long and limber oare;' Turberville, A Myrrour of the Fall of Pride. Cooper's Thesaurus has: 'Lentus, softe, pliant, limber' (1565). Perhaps allied to limp, flexible, pliant; or to prov. E. limmock, flexible, pliant. The suffix -er is adjectival, as in bitt-er, fai-r (= AS. fæg-er), &c.; see Mätzner, Engl. Gramm. i. 435. See Limp (1).

LIMBER (2), part of a gun-carriage consisting of two wheels and a shaft to which horses are attached. (F.) Taken up from prov. E. 'Limbers, thills or shafts (Berkshire); Limmers, a pair of shafts (North);' Grose's Prov. Eng. Glossary, ed. 1790; and see E. D. D. It appears that b is excrement, and the form limmers is the older one. β. Further, limmer was formerly spelt limour (in 1480), and lymour, as in: 'The cartis stand with lymouris;' Douglas, tr. of Virgil, bk. ix. ch. 6, l. 23. In Douglas, Palice of Honour, st. 33, the form used is lymnaris, pl. of lymnar, for limner. The spelling limours seems to be an E. variant of F. limons, pl. of limon, 'the thill of a waine,' which was mostly used in the pl.; Cot. Similarly, limner may well represent F. limonier, as in 'Cheval limonier, a thill-horse;' Cot.

LIMBO, LIMBUS, the borders of hell. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 261. The orig. phrase was in limbo, Com. Errors, iv. 2. 32; or more fully, in limbo patrum, Hen. VIII, v. 4. 67. — L. limbō (governed by the prep. in), abl. case of limbus, a border; see Limb (2). 'The limbus patrum, in the language of churchmen, was the place bordering on hell, where the saints of the Old Testament remained till Christ's descent into hell;' Schmidt. The Ital. word is also limbo, derived (not from the ablative, but) from the acc. limbum of the same L. word. Cf. P. Plowman, B. xvi. 84. Doublet, limb (2).

LIME (1), viscous substance, bird-lime, mortar, oxide of calcium. (E.) The orig. sense is 'viscous substance.' ME. lym, liim, lyme. 'Lyme, to take with byrdys [to catch birds with], viscus; Lyne, or mortare, Calx;' Prompt. Parv. p. 305. And see Chaucer, C. T. 16274 (G 806). AS. lim, bitumen, cement; Grein, ii. 188. + Du. lijm, glue, lime; Icel. lim, glue, lime, chalk; Dan. liim, glue; Swed. lim, glue; G. leim, glue; MHG. lim, bird-lime. + L. limus, mud, slime. β. Teut. type **limoz*, Idg. type **leimos*, from √LEI; of which the weak grade (li) appears in L. li-nere, to smear, daub; cf. Russ. lite, to pour, flow; cf. Skt. li, to melt, to adhere; allied to Skt. ri, to distil. See Loam (which is allied). Der. lime, verb, Ancren Riwle, p. 226, Hamlet, iii. 3. 68; lime-y; lime-kiln, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 86; lime-stone; lime-twigg, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 189; lime-rod, spelt lymrod, Chaucer, C. T. 14694 (B 3574).

LIME (2), the linden-tree. (E.) In Pope, Autumn, 25. A corruption of the earlier spelling line. 'Linden-tree, or Line-tree;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'In the line-grove' (modern edd. lime-grove); Shak. Temp. v. 10. The change from line to lime does not seem to be older than about A. D. 1625. The form lime is in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731; Bacon has 'the lime-tree;' Essay 46. β. Again, line is a corruption of lind, the older name, by loss of final d. See Linden. Der. lime-tree.

LIME (3), a kind of citron. (F.—Span.—Arab. or Pers.—Malay.) First in 1638. 'Lime, a sort of small lemmun;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. lime, a lime; Hamilton. — Span. lima. — Arab. limah (below); Pers. līmū, a lemon, citron; Rich. Dict. p. 1282. — Malay limau, Javanese limo, a generic name for a lime or citron. And see Lemon. Dozy gives Arab. limah, a lime; see Devic.

LIME-HOUND, a dog led by a cord; a dog used for hunting the wild boar. (F.—L.; and E.) Lime-hound is short for liam-hound, a hound held by a liam or leash. 'The string wherewith wee leade a Grey hounde is called a lease, and for a hounde a lyame;' Turberville, Booke of Hunting, ed. 1575, p. 240. See Croft's Gloss. to Sir T. Elyot's The Governour. Spenser has lime-hound; F. Q. v. 2. 25. — OF. liem; F. lien; see Littré, s. v. lien; and cf. Norm.

dial. lian, a tie, a cord. = L. ligāmen, a fastening; see Lien. And see Hound. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 164.

LIMIT, to assign a boundary; a boundary. (F.—L.) The verb is in older (general) use in E. than the sb. limit, though really the derived word. ME. limiten, to limit. 'To limite us or assigne us;' Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus, Six-text, B 2956. [Hence the sb. limit-or, Chaucer, C. T. 209.] = F. limiter, 'to limit'; Cot. = F. limite, a limit; id. = L. limitem, acc. of limes, a boundary; akin to L. limen, a threshold. Prob. allied to L. limus, transverse (Bréal). Der. limit-ed, limit-ed-ly, limit-ed-ness, limit-less, limit-able; also limit-at-ion = F. limitation, 'a limitation' (Cot.), from L. acc. limitātiōnem.

LIMN, to illuminate, paint. (F.—L.) ME. limnen, a contracted form of luminen. 'Lymnyd, or lumynid, as bookys;' Prompt. Parv. p. 317. 'Lymnore, luminour, Alluminator, illuminator;' id. β. Again, luminen is short for enluminen, by loss of the prefix. Chaucer has enlumined = enlightened; C. T. 7909 (E 33). = MF. enluminer, 'to illuminate, inlighten; . . . also to sleek, burnish; also to limn; Cot. = Late L. inlūmināre; for L. illūmināre, to enlighten; see Ilumin-ate. Der. limn-er = ME. luminour, as above, short for enluminour; 'Enluminneur de livres, a burnisher of bookes, an alluminer;' Cot.

LIMP (1), flaccid, flexible, pliant, weak. (E.) 'Limp, limber, supple;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Scarce in books, but known to our E. dialects, and doubtless an old E. word. β. Allied words are perhaps 'Swiss lampig, lampelig, faded, loose, flabby, hanging,' and similar words, cited in Wedgwood. Also Bavarian lampecht, flaccid, lampende Ohren, hanging ears (answering to E. lop-ears, as in 'a lop-eared rabbit'); lamp, lemp, a rag, a hanging shred; from the verb lampen, to hang loosely down; Schmeller, Bav. Dict. 1474. Cf. Skt. lamba-, depending, lambana-, falling; from the verb lamb, to fall, hang downwards. Der. limp-ness; cf. limber (1).

LIMP (2), to walk lamely. (E.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 2. 130; and in Levins (1570). Palsgrave has: 'lympe-hault, boiteux.' Not easily traced earlier, and the orig. form is uncertain. Allied to AS. lemp-hælt, limp-halting, halting, lame, of which the earliest form is laempi-halt, Epinal Gloss., 589; cf. lemp-halt, Corpus Gloss., 1250. Allied also to MDan. limpe, to limp (Kalkar); MHG. limphin, to limp. Possibly connected with Limp (1), rather than (as some think) with Lame. ¶ We also find Low G. lumpen, to limp (Bremen Wörterbuch); which seems to be connected with limp by gradation. So also Dan. dial. lumpe, to limp; lumpen, lame.

LIMPET, a small shell-fish, which cleaves to rocks. (L.) Cotgrave explains OF. berdin by 'the shellfish called a lympyne or a lempet.' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 9, translates L. mituli by 'limpins.' ME. lempet, Durham Acc. Rolls (Surtees Soc.), p. 10 (1313). AS. lempedu, (properly) a lamprey. = Late L. lempreda, for lamprēda, late form of lampeira, a lamprey; see Lamprey, of which limpet is a doublet. We find in Wülker's Gloss., 438, 17: 'lempreda, lempedu;' where lempedu is the AS. form. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 164.

LIMPID, pure, clear, shining. (F.—L.) In Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. 'Most pure and limpid juice;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. ii. c. 1. § 16. = F. limpide, 'clear, bright;' Cot. = L. limpidus, limpid, clear. Allied to L. lympba, pure water; see Lymph. Brugmann, i. § 102. Der. limpid-i-ty, limpid-ness.

LINCH-PIN, a pin to fasten the wheel on to the axle. (E.) Formerly also spelt lins-pin; see Kersey, ed. 1715; Coles, ed. 1684; Skinner, ed. 1671. [Linch appears to be a corrupted form, obviously by confusion with link.] The pl. linses in Will. of Shoreham's Poems, p. 109, means 'linch-pins.' AS. lynis, an axle-tree; Epinal Gloss., 8. + Du. luns, a linch-pin; whence lunzen, to put the linch-pin to a wheel; Low G. lunse, a linch-pin; Bremen Wörterbuch; G. lünse, a linch-pin. β. Cf. also OHG. lun, a linch-pin.

LIND, LINDEN, the lime-tree. (E.) Here (as in the case of asp-en) the true sb. is lind, whence lind-en was formed as an adjective, with the suffix -en as in gold-en, birch-en, beech-en. The true name is lind, or, in longer phrase, linden tree. Lind was in time corrupted to line, and later to lime; see Lime (2). ME. lind, lynd; Chaucer, C. T. 2924 (A 2922). AS. lind, Grein, ii. 128. 'Seno vel tilia, lind;' Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Arborum. Hence the adj. linden (Grein, ii. 189), as in linden bord = the linden shield, shield made of lind. + Du. linde, linde-boom; Icel. lind; Dan. lind, lind-træ; Swed. lind; G. linde, OHG. linta. Teut. type **lendā*; Idg. base **lent-*; the weak grade appears in Gk. ἐλάτη, silver fir. Cf. Lith. lenta, a board.

LINE, a thread, thin cord, stroke, row, rank, verse. (L.; or F.—L.) In all senses, the word is of L. origin; the only difference is that, in some senses, the word was borrowed from L. directly, in other senses through the French. We may take them separately, as follows. 1. Line = a thin cord or rope, a thread, rope of a ship. ME. lyne; P. Plowman, B. v. 355. AS. line, a cord; Grein, ii. 189. = L. linea, a string of hemp or flax, hempen cord; properly the fem. of adj. lineus, made of hemp or flax. = L. linum, flax. Prob. rather cognate with than borrowed from Gk. λίνον, flax. [The G. lein, &c. are probably borrowed from Latin.] 2. Line = a verse, rank, row; Chaucer, C. T. 1553 (A 1551); P. Plowman, B. vii. 110. = F. ligne, a line. = L. linea, a line, stroke, mark, line of descent; the same word as above. Der. line, verb, in various senses; to line garments is properly to put linen inside them (see Linen); also lin-ing, lineal, q.v., linear, q.v., lineage, q.v., lineament, q.v. And see linnet, linseed, linsey-woolsey, lint, de-lineate, a-lign.

LINEAMENT, a feature. (F.—L.) 'In the liniamentes and favor of his visage;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 61 b. = MF. lineament, 'a lineament or feature;' Cot. = L. lineāmentum, a drawing, delineation, feature. = L. lineāre, to draw a line; with suffix -mentum. = L. linea, a line; see Line.

LINEAR, consisting of lines. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = L. lineāris, belonging to a line. = L. linea; see Line. Doublet, lineal, which is an older word. Der. linear-ly.

LINEN, cloth made of flax. (L.) Used as a sb., but really an adj., with adj. suffix -en as in wooll-en, gold-en; the orig. sb. was lin, preserved in lin-seed. ME. lin, sb. linen, adj. The sb. is rare. 'The bondes . . . That weren of ful strong line' = the bonds that were of very strong flax; Havelok, 539. The adj. is common. 'Clothid with lynun cloth . . . he lefte the lynun clothing;' Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 51, 52. It was also used as a sb., as now. 'In lynnen yclothed' = clothed in linen; P. Plowman, B. i. 3. = AS. līn, flax, linen; in comp. līn-wēd, a linen garment; John, xiii. 5. Thence was formed the adj. linen, as in linen hrægl = a linen cloth, John, xiii. 4. = L. linum, flax; cognate with Gk. λίνον, flax. See Line. And see linseed, linnet.

LING (1), a kind of fish. (E.) 'Lyng, fysshe;' Palsgrave. Spelt leenge in Prompt. Parv. p. 296; and see Way's note. Spelt lenge, Havelok, l. 832. Not found in AS., but answering to Teut. **lang-jōn-*, f., from lang, long; i.e. 'the long one.' EFries. leng, leng-fisk. So called from its slender shape. + Du. leng, a ling; from lang, long; Icel. langa, a ling; from langr, long; Norw. langa, longa (Aasen); Swed. långa; G. länge, a ling; also called långfisch, i.e. long fish.

Formed by adding the frequentative suffix -er or -r to the ME. lengen, to tarry; with further thinning of e to i before ng. This ME. verb is by no means rare. 'I may no lenger lenge' = I may no longer linger; P. Plowman, B. i. 207. Cf. Will. of Palerne, 5421; Havelok, 1734. = AS. lengan, to prolong, put off; Grein, i. 168; formed by the usual vowel-change (of a to e) from AS. lang, long; see Long. Cf. Coined, as if from an adj. linguālis, from L. lingua, the tongue, of which the OL. form was dingua (see Lewis' Dict.); cognate with E. Tongue, q.v. Der. (from L. lingua) lingu-ist, q.v., language, q.v.

LINGUIST, one skilled in languages. (L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iv. 1. 57; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. Coined, with suffix -ist (= L. -ista, from Gk. -ιστης), from L. lingua, the tongue; see Lingual. Der. linguist-ic, linguist-ic-s.

LINK (1), a ring of a chain, joint. (Scand.) In Shak. Cor. i. 1. 73. Cf. 'Trough [truth] and mercy linked in a chain;' Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii (How truth is preferred). — Oícel. **hlenkr*, Icel. hlekkr (by assimilation); Dan. lænke; Swed. länk. + AS. hlence (which would have given linch); as in the comp. sb. wæhlence, a slaughter-link, i. e. linked coat of mail, Grein, ii. 646. Teut. type **hlankjoz*, m.; cf. also G. gelenk, a joint, link, ring; G. lenken, to turn, bend. Der. link, verb.

LINK (2), a torch. (Scand.) 'A link or torch;' Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Links and torches;' Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 48. 'Lynke, torches;' Palsgrave. Of obscure origin; but it is prob. the same as the word above, in the sense of 'length of rope;' cf. 'a link of sausages.' Such seems to be the sense in Shak. 2 Hen. IV, v. i. 23: 'Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had.' Links for torches were made of handy lengths of rope.

LINN, a pool; also a cascade, torrent. (C.) Two words have been confounded: (1) AS. hlynn, a torrent; Rushworth Gospels, John, xviii. 1; and (2) Gael. linne, Irish linn, W. llyn, a pool. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 165.

LINNET, a small singing-bird. (F.—L.) ME. lynnet, Court of Love, l. 1412. — OF. linette (Godefroy); F. linotte, 'a linnet;' Cot. [So called from feeding on the seed of flax and hemp, as is clearly shown by similar names in other languages, e.g. G. hänfling, a linnet, from hanf, hemp, G. lein-finke, a linnet (cited by Wedgwood), lit. a lin-finch, flax-finch.] — F. lin, flax. — L. linum, flax; see Linen, Line. ¶ The E. name is lintwhite, Scotch lintquhit; see Complaint of Scotland, ed. Murray, p. 39, l. 24. From AS. linetwige, a linnet; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Avium. This name is also (probably) from L. linum, flax. So also W. llinos, a linnet; from llin, flax.

LINSEED, flax-seed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) ME. lin-seed; spelt lynne-seed in P. Plowman, C. xiii. 190; linseed (to translate OF. lynnoys) in Walter de Bibbesworth; Wright's Vocab. i. 156. From ME. lin = AS. lin, flax, borrowed from L. linum, flax; and E. seed. See Line, Linen, and Seed. Der. linseed-oil, linseed-cake.

LINSEY-WOOLSEY, made of linen and wool mixed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) 'Lynsy-wolsye, linistema, vel linostema;' Cathol. Anglicum (1483). Used facetiously in Shak. All's Well, iv. 1. 13; Minshew (ed. 1627) has: 'linsie-woolsie, i. e. of linnen and woollen.' As if from ME. lin, linen; and E. wool; with -sy or -sey as a suffix twice over; cf. tip-sy; see Linen and Wool. β. But linsey may represent Lindsey, near Kersey (Suffolk); see Kersey. In fact, Lindsey was formerly Lynsey, Lylsey, Lelesey; Skelton has the form Lylse wulse; see further in the Supplement.

LINSTOCK, LINTSTOCK, a stick to hold a lighted match. (Du.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 188; spelt linstock in Marlowe, Jew of Malta, v. 4. 4. 'Lint-stock, a carved stick (about half a yard) with a cock at one end to hold the gunner's match, and a sharp pike at the other, to stick it anywhere;' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. — Du. lontstok, 'a lint-stock;' Sewel. — Du. lont, a match; and stok, a stick, for which see Stock. + Dan. lunte-stok, a lint-stock; from lunte, a match, and stok, a stick; Swed. lunt-stake; from lunta, a match, an old bad book (fit to be burnt), and stake, a stick, candlestick. β. The derivation of Du. lont, Swed. lunta, is uncertain; but it would appear from Kilian that Du. lomp, a rag, tatter, MDu. lompe, was also used in the same sense as lont, MDu. lonte. Perhaps lonte arose from **lomp-te*; cf. MDu. lonte, a match, rag, with MDu. lompe, a rag, tatter; and Swed. lunta, a match, with Swed. lumpor, rags (only used in the plural). See Ihre, s. v. lunta; and see Lump.

LINT, scraped linen. (F.—L.; or L.) 'Lynt, schauynge of lynen clothe, Carpea;' Prompt. Parv. p. 306. Spelt lynnet in Lanfranc, Chirurgie, p. 83; but lynt (flax) in Barbour, Bruce, bk. xvii. 612. Either from F. lin, flax, with F. suffix -et or -ette (cf. OF. linette, linseed, in Godefroy); or perhaps borrowed directly from L. linteum, a linen cloth. — L. linteus, made of linen. — L. linum, flax. See Line, Linen. ¶ And see Du. lint in Franck.

LINTEL, the head-piece of a door or casement. (F.—L.) ME. lintel, lyntel; Wyclif, Exod. xii. 22. — OF. lintel (see Littré), later F. linteau, 'the lintell, or head-piece, over a door;' Cot. — Late L. limitellus, a lintel; which (as Diez suggests) stands for **limitellus*, dimin. of L. limes (stem limit-), a boundary, hence a border; see Limit. Prob. confused with limen, a threshold. ¶ A similar contraction is found in Span. linde, from L. acc. limitem, a boundary.

LION, a large and fierce beast of prey. (F.—L.—Gk.—Egypt.)

In early use. In Layamon, 1463, we find leon in the earlier text, lion in the later. A still earlier form was leo, but this was borrowed from the Latin directly; see Leo. — OF. leon, lion. — L. leōnem, acc. of leo, a lion. — Gk. λέων, a lion. Also Gk. λέαινα, for **λέφανα*, a lioness; from Egypt. labai, lawai, a lioness; which was also the name of the hieroglyphic for L. Cf. Heb. lābī, a lion; also of Egypt. origin. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 165. We also find G. löwe, OHG. leo, lewo; Russ. lev; Lithuanian lėvas, lavas; Du. leeuw; &c. Der. lion-ess, As You Like It, iv. 3. 115, from F. lionnesse; lion-hearted; also lion-ise, orig. to show strangers the lions which used to be kept in the Tower of London. See Capt. Smith, Works, ed. Arber; p. 872.

LIP, the muscular part forming each of the upper and lower edges of the mouth. (E.) ME. lippe, Chaucer, C. T. 128, 133. AS. lippa. 'Labium, ufeweard lippa' = upper lip; Ælfric's Gloss., in Voc. 157. 22. 'Labrum, niðera lippe' = nether lip; id. + Du. lip; Dan. læbe; Swed. läpp; G. lippe, lefze; OHG. lefs, leffur. Further allied to L. lab-rum, lab-ium, the lip; Pers. lab, the lip, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 511. See Brugmann, i. § 563. Perhaps allied to lambere, to lick (Bréal). The AS. lippa represents a Teut. type **lep-jon*, m. Der. lipp-ed; from the same root are lab-ial, lab-iate, lamb-ent.

LIQUEFY, to make liquid. (F.—L.) Also 'to become liquid,' but this is a later sense. 'The disposition not to liquefie' = to become liquid; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 840. — MF. liquefier; but only found in Cot. as a pp.; he gives 'liquefié,' dissolved, melted, made liquid.' β. The E. liquefy is formed by analogy with other words in -fy, which answers to F. -fier = L. -ficāre, used in place of facere, to make. But in the intrans. sense the word corresponds to L. liquefiēri, to become liquid, used as pass. of liquefacere, to make liquid. — L. lique-, from liquēre, to be fluid; and facere, to make. See Liquid and Fact. Der. lique-fact-ion, Minshew, ed. 1627; allied to liquefactus, pp. of liquefacere.

LIQUESCENT, melting. (L.) Modern; in Todd's Johnson; and in Bailey, vol. ii. — L. liquescent, stem of pres. pt. of liquescere, to become liquid; inceptive form of liquēre, to be liquid. See Liquid. Der. liquescent-y, de-liquescent.

LIQUEUR, a cordial. (F.—L.) In Pope; Dunciad, iv. 317. A modern F. form of the older term Liquor, q. v.

LIQUID, fluid, moist, soft, clear. (F.—L.) 'The playne [flat] and liquide water;' Tyndal, Works, p. 265, col. 2. — F. liquide, 'liquid, moist, wet;' Cot. — L. liquidus, liquid, moist. — L. liquēre, to be liquid or moist or clear. See Bréal. Der. liquid, sb., liquid-i-ty, liquid-ness; also liquid-ate, q. v.; liquor, q. v., lique-fy, q. v.

LIQUIDATE, to make clear, clear or pay off an account. (L.) Bailey has liquidated, vol. ii. ed. 1727. 'Liquidate, to make moist or clear;' Blount, Gloss., 1681. — Late L. liquidatus, pp. of liquidāre, to clarify, make clear. — L. liquidus, liquid, clear; see Liquid. Der. liquid-at-ion = F. liquidation; liquidat-or.

LIQUOR, anything liquid, moisture, strong drink. (F.—L.) The word is really F., but has been accommodated to the orig. L. spelling; yet we retain somewhat of the F. pronunciation, the qu being sounded as c (k). ME. licour, Chaucer, C. T. l. 3; spelt licur, Ancren Riwele, p. 164, l. 13. — AF. licur, Tristan, i. 136; F. liqueur, 'liquor, humor;' Cot. — L. liquōrem, acc. of liquor, moisture. — L. liquēre, to be liquid; see Liquid. Doublet, liqueur.

LIQUORICE, the same as Licorice, q. v.

LIRA, an Italian silver coin. (Ital.—L.) First in 1617. — Ital. lira. — L. libra, a pound. Doublet, litre.

LISP, to pronounce imperfectly, utter feebly, in speaking. (E.) ME. lisp, lipsen; Chaucer, C. T. 266 (Six-text, A 264, where 5 MSS. have lipped for lisp). AS. **wilispian*, to lisp; in ā-wilispian, in Napier's Additions. — AS. wilisp, imperfect in utterance, lisp, Voc. 8. 29; also spelt wilps, Voc. 192. 11. + Du. lisp, to lisp; Dan. læspe, to lisp; Swed. läspa; G. lispeln, to lisp, whisper. β. An imitative word, similar to Whisper, q. v. Der. lisp, sb.; lisp-ing-ly.

LISSOM, pliant, agile. (E.) A contr. form of lithesome; from E. lithe, with suffix -some. See Lithe.

LIST (1), a stripe or border of cloth, selvage. (E.) ME. list, liste. 'With a brode liste' = with a broad strip of cloth; P. Plowman, B. v. 524. AS. liste; 'Lembus, liste;' Corp. Gloss., 1228. Teut. type **list-jōn*, f. + Du. lijst, list, a border; G. leiste, list, border; OHG. lista, whence Ital. lista, F. liste. Der. list (2).

LIST (2), a catalogue. (F.—G.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 1. 98, i. 2. 32. — F. liste, 'a list, roll, catalogue; also, a list, or selvage;' Cot. The older sense is the latter, viz. border; hence it came to mean a strip, roll, list of names. — OHG. lista, G. leiste, a border; cognate with AS. liste, whence list, a border. See List (1). ¶ Thus list (1) and list (2) are the same word, but the latter is used in the F. sense. Der. list, verb, en-list.

LIST (3), gen. used in the pl. Lists, q. v.

LIST (4), to choose, to desire, have pleasure in. (E.) In Shak.

1 Hen. VI, i. 5. 22. Often used as an impers. verb in older authors. ME. listen, lusten; 'if thee lust' or 'if thee list' = if it pleases thee; Chaucer, C. T. 1185; cf. l. 1054 (A 1183, 1052). AS. lystan, to desire, used impersonally; Grein, ii. 200. Formed (by regular vowel-change from u to y) from AS. lust, pleasure; see Lust. + Du. lusten, to like; Icel. lysta, to desire; Dan. lyste; Swed. lysta; Goth. lustōn; G. gelüsten. Teut. type **lustjan-*; from **lustuz*, sb. Der. list, sb., Oth. ii. 1. 105. And see list-less.

LIST (5), an inclination (of a ship) to one side. (E.) A variant of lust, desire, inclination, which was formerly used in the same sense. 'The ship at low water had a great lust to the offing'; T. James, Voy. (1633), p. 82 (N. E. D.). 'Lust of a ship'; Phillips (1658); prov. E. lust (E. D. D.). Cf. Dan. lyst, inclination. See List (4).

LIST (6), to listen. (E.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 22. ME. listen, lusten. 'Listeth, lordes'; Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 1. 'And lust hu ich con be bitelle'; Owl and Night, 263. AS. hlystan, Grein, ii. 90. — AS. hlyst, hearing, the sense of hearing, id. Teut. type **hlystiz*, Idg. type **clustis*; cf. Icel. hlust, the ear, W. clust, the ear; Skt. grustis, hearing, obedience (Uhlenbeck). All from √KLEUS, extended form of √KLEU, to hear, whence L. clu-ere, Gk. κλύειν, Skt. gru, to hear. See Loud.

LISTEN, to hearken, give ear. (E.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 89; ii. 2. 29. We also find list, as above. So we also find both ME. lustnen or listnen, and lusten or listen. 1. 'Or lysteneth to his reson,' P. Plowman, B. xiv. 307; where the Trinity MS. has listneth, ed. Wright, l. 9534. Here list(e)neth stands for the older listneth, the e being inserted for greater ease of pronunciation, and still retained in mod. E. spelling, though seldom sounded. We further find the pt. t. lustnede, Layamon, 26357; and the pp. lustned, id. 25128. This form lust(n)en is derived from an AS. form **hlysnan* (see below) by an insertion of t, due to confusion with the closely allied List (5), AS. hlystan, used in the same sense. The AS. **hlysnan* is inferred from O. North. lysna (for **hlyсна*) in Matt. xiii. 18; cf. AS. hlosnian, to listen (Bosworth). Here lysna represents a Teut. type **hlysinōjan-*, and hlosnian represents a Teut. type **hlysnōjan*; both from Teut. **hlyus-*, weak grade of **hleys*, to hear; √KLEUS (above). Cf. Swed. lyssna, to listen; EFries. lûstern, Westphal. lûstern.

LISTLESS, careless, uninterested. (E.) The lit. sense is 'devoid of desire.' Not immediately derived from the verb to list (see List (4)), but put in place of the older form lustless. We find lystles in Prompt. Parv. p. 307; but lustles in Gower, C. A. ii. 111; bk. iv. 3262. Formed from lust with the suffix -less. See Lust and -less. Cf. Icel. lystarlauss, having no appetite, from lyst = losti, lust. Der. list-less-ly, list-less-ness.

LISTS, the ground enclosed for a tournament. (E.) Scarcely used in the singular. Used to translate OF. lices in the Rom. of the Rose, 4199; and much affected by the influence of that word. ME. listes, pl. sb., the lists, Chaucer, C. T. 63, 1864. Really the pl. of E. list, a stripe, border, which took up the further sense of limit or boundary; as in Eng. Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 44: 'Any brother or sister that duellen wyt[h]outen the lystys of thre myle fro the cyte.' See therefore List (1). β. Note also OF. lisce, lice (mod. F. lice), 'a list or tiltyard'; Cot. Cf. Ital. liccia, a barrier, palisade, list; Span. liza, a list for tilting; Port. liça, liçada, list, enclosed ground in which combats are fought; whence Low Lat. licia, s. pl., barriers, palisades; licia duelli, the lists. Hatzfeld thinks this OF. lice may be derived from a Romanic type **listea*, formed from OHG. lista (G. leiste), a border. If so, it is closely related to E. list (1); and this explains the way in which the two were so readily confused.

LITANY, a form of prayer. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. letanie, Ancrén Riwle, p. 20, l. 4; altered to litanie, litany, to bring it nearer to the L. spelling. — OF. letanie, a litany; so spelt in the 13th century (Littré); mod. F. litanie. — L. litanía. — Gk. λιτανεία, a prayer. — Gk. λιταίνειν, to pray. — Gk. λιτανός, a suppliant; from λιπή, supplication, prayer, allied to λίτομαι, λίσσομαι, I pray, beg, beseech.

LITERAL, according to the letter. (F.—L.) 'It hath but one simple litterall sense'; Tyndal, Works, p. 1, col. 2. — OF. literal, MF. litéral, 'literal'; Cot. — L. litterālis, literal. — L. littera, a letter; see Letter. Der. literal-ly, -ness; also liter-ar-y, Englished from L. litterārius, belonging to learning; and see Literature.

LITERATURE, the science of letters, literary productions. (F.—L.) In Wyntoun, Chron. v. 3633. — MF. literature, 'literature, learning'; Cot. — L. litterātūra, scholarship; allied to the pp. form litterātus, learned. — L. littera, a letter; see Letter. Der. literate, from L. litterātus; litteratur-ed, Hen. V, iv. 7. 157.

LITHARGE, protoxide of lead. (F.—L.—Gk.) Lit. 'stone-silver.' ME. litarge, Chaucer, C. T. 631, 16243 (A 629, G 775). — OF. litarge, F. litharge, 'lithargie, white lead'; Cot. — L. lithargyrus. — Gk. λιθάργυρος, litharge. — Gk. λιθ-, base of λίθος, a stone (root unknown); and ἀργυρος, silver (see Argent).

LITHE, pliant, flexible, active. (E.) ME. lithe, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 118. AS. līðe (for **linðe*), gentle, soft; Grein, ii. 183; līð, gentle, id. 182. + G. ge-lind, ge-linde, OHG. lindi, soft, tender. Teut. type **linthjoz*. β. Shorter forms appear in Icel. linr, soft, L. lenis, gentle, len-tus, pliant; see Lenient. Der. lithe-ness; lissom = lithe-some. And see lenity, lentisk, re-lent.

LITHER, foul, pestilential, of the air. (E.) 'Two Talbotts winged through the lither skie'; 1 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 21. Also explained as 'yielding,' owing to the influence of lithe, which is unconnected; but see 'luther eir' in P. Plowman, C. xvi. 220. ME. lither, luther; AS. lyðre, evil, poor, bad (hence, dull). See Stratmann and E. D. D. Cf. G. liederlich, vicious.

LITHOGRAPHY, writing on stone. (Gk.) Modern. Coined from Gk. λίθο-, decl. stem of λίθος, a stone; and γράφειν, to write. Der. lithograph-er, lithograph-ic; lithograph. Also lith-ia, lith-ium.

LITHOTOMY, the operation of cutting for stone. (L.—Gk.) Englished from Late L. lithotomia, the form given in Kersey's Dict.; ed. 1715. — Gk. λιθοτομία. — Gk. λίθο-, decl. stem of λίθος, a stone; and τομή, 2nd grade of τέμν-, base of τέμνειν, to cut; see Tome. Der. lithotom-ist.

LITIGATION, a contest in law. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Late L. litigatio, a disputing. — L. litigāre, to dispute. — L. lit-, stem of lis, strife, law-suit; and -ig-, weakened form of ag-ere, to drive, conduct (see Agent). β. The L. lis was in OL. slis (Festus). Der. litigate, a late verb, really due to the sb.; litigant = L. litigant-, stem of pres. pt. of litigāre; also litigious, q. v.

LITIGIOUS, contentious. (F.—L.) In old authors it also means 'debatable' or doubtful; see Trench, Select Glossary. Litigious = precarious; Shak. Pericles, iii. 3. 3. — F. litigieux, 'litigious, debatefull'; Cot. — L. litigiōsus, (1) contentious, (2) doubtful. — L. litigium, strife; cf. litigāre, to dispute; see Litigation. Der. litigious-ly, litigious-ness.

LITMUS, a kind of dye. (Du.) Spelt litmose-blew in Phillips, ed. 1706. It appears in AF. as lytemoise, Liber Albus, p. 238. Put for lakmose; prob. by association with the old E. word lit, to dye. — Du. lakmoes, a blue dye-stuff (Sewel). — Du. lak, lac; and moes, pulp. Hence also G. lackmuss, litmus. See Lac.

LITRE, a unit of capacity in the metric system. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) It contains about 1½ pints. — F. litre (1793). — Late L. litra. — Gk. λίτρα, a pound. See Librate, Lira.

LITTER (1), a portable bed. (F.—L.) ME. litere, Cursor Mundi, 13817; Wyclif, Isa. lxvi. 20. Spelt lytier in Caxton, Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 61, l. 1. — AF. littiere, Livre de Reis, 86; OF. litiere (F. litière), 'a horse-litter'; Cot. — Late L. lectāria, a litter. — L. lectus, a bed. Cf. Gk. λέκτρον, a bed, λέχος, a couch. — L. and Gk. base LEGH, to lie; see Lie (1). Allied to Lectern.

LITTER (2), materials for a bed, a heap of straw for animals to lie on, a confused mass of objects scattered about; &c. (F.—L.) Really the same word as the above; with allusion to beds of straw for animals, and hence a confused heap. Thus Cotgrave has: 'Litiere, a horse-litter, also litter for cattell, also old dung or manure.' See Litter (1). β. Hence also litter in the sense of 'a brood'; see the various senses of lytere in Prompt. Parv.; and cf. F. accoucher, and E. 'to be in the straw.' And see Wright, Vocab. p. 156. Der. litter, verb, Temp. i. 2. 282.

LITTLE, small. (E.) ME. litel, lutel (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 492 (A 490); Havelok, 481; Layamon, 9124. AS. lytel, lytel, Grein, ii. 201. + OSax. luttill; Du. luttel, little, few; MHG. lützel; OHG. luzzil; Teut. type **luttiloz*. β. All from a base LEUT, to deceive, in connexion with which we also find AS. lytig, deceitful, Ælfric's Colloquy, in Voc. 101. 2; also AS. lot, deceit, Grein, i. 194; and the Goth. liuts, deceitful, liuta, dissembler, lutōn, to betray. γ. Further, the Teut. base LEUT meant orig. to stoop, to bow down (hence to creep, or sneak), as in AS. lutan, to stoop, 'lout,' incline to; see Lout. Der. little-ness. It is remarkable that the Icel. litill, Swed. liten, Goth. leitils, little, are unrelated; being from a base **leit*. The forms less, least, are from a different source. But see Loiter.

LITTORAL, belonging to the sea-shore. (L.) Spelt littoral in Kersey; litoral in Blount, ed. 1674. Mere Latin. — L. littoralis, better litorālis, belonging to the sea-shore. — L. litor-, for **litos*, stem of litus, the sea-shore.

LITURGY, public worship, established form of prayer. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) Spelt litturgie in Minshew, ed. 1627. — MF. lyturgie, 'a liturgy, or form of service'; Cot. — L. liturgia. — Gk. λειουργία, public service. — Gk. λειουργός, performing public service or duties. — Gk. λείτο-, for λείτος, public; and εργον, work, cognate with E. Work. β. Λείτος, λείτος, λάϊτος, public, is derived from λαός, λαός, the people; whence E. Laic, Laity. Der. liturgi-c, liturgi-c-al, liturg-ist.

LIVE (1), to continue in life, exist, dwell. (E.) ME. liuien, liuen

(with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 508 (A 506); Havelok, 355. AS. lifian; Grein, ii. 185; also libban, id. 179; where bb stands for fi. + Du. leven; also used as sb., with sense of 'life'; Icel. lifa, to be left, to remain behind, also to live; Dan. leve; Swed. lefva; Goth. liban; G. leben, to live (whence leben, sb. life), MHG. leben, lepen, to live (also spelt libjan, lipjan); allied to b-leiben, MHG. beliben, OHG. beliban, to remain, be left. From Teut. stem \**lib-*, weak grade of \**leib-*; to remain.  $\beta$ . The sense of 'live' is unoriginal; the older sense is to remain, to be left behind. See further under Life. Der. liv-er, liv-ing; and see live (2).

LIVE (2), adj. alive, having life, active, burning. (E.) 'Upon the next live creature that it sees;' Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 172. The use of this adj. is really due to an attributive use of live, aphetic form of alive, which is not a true adj., but a phrase consisting of a prep. and a dat. case; see Alive.  $\beta$ . The use as an adj. arose the more easily owing to the currency of the words live-ly and liv-ish. The former is still in use, but the latter is obsolete; it occurs as lifiss in Gower, C. A. iii. 93; bk. vii. 257. Der. live-stock.

LIVELIHOOD, means of subsistence. (E.)  $\alpha$ . Cotgrave translates F. patrimoine by 'patrimony, birthright, inheritance, livelihood.' And Drayton speaks of a man 'Of so fair livelihood, and so large rent;' The Owl. The metre shows that the word was then, as now, trisyllabic.  $\beta$ . But it is a singular corruption of the ME. livelode, liuelode, i.e. life-leading, means of living; due to confusion with livelihood in the sense of 'liveliness,' as used (quite correctly) in Shak. Venus, 26; All's Well, i. 1. 58.  $\gamma$ . Again livelode is better spelt liflode, as in P. Plowman, B. prol. 30. Cf. 'Lyflode, lyflode, lyuelode, or warysome, Donativum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 308; indeed, we find livelode as late as in Levins, ed. 1570. An older spelling is in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 20, l. 16, where we find liflade, meaning 'way of life,' lit. leading of life.  $\delta$ . Late AS. liflād, course of life; Rule of St. Bennet, ed. Schröer, c. 1; p. 13, l. 24. Compounded of AS. lif, life; and AS. lād, a leading, way, also provisions to live by, Grein, ii. 150. Another sense of AS. lād is a course, as preserved in mod. E. lode. See Life and Lode.

LIVELONG, long-lasting, long as it is. (E.) 'The livelong night;' Macb. ii. 3. 65. Orig. lif-long, i.e. 'dear long;' but altered to live-long at the end of the 16th cent., where live represents the verb to live, the i being short. Sometimes understood as live-long (with long i) as if connected with life. Really from Lief and Long.  $\beta$ . Cf. 'Alle the lefe longe daye;' Sowdan of Babylon, l. 832; 'Al that leve longe nyht;' H. Lovelich, The Holy Grail, c. xxxix. l. 319.

LIVELY, vigorous, active. (E.) 'A corruption of lively. 'Lyvely, lyfly, or qwyk, or fulle of lyf, Vivax;' Prompt. Parv. p. 308. Chaucer uses lyfly in the sense of 'in a life-like manner,' C. T., A 2087. AS. liflic: Compounded of Life and Like. Der. liveliness, in Holinshed, Conquest of Ireland, c. 9 (R.). Cf. lively, adv., in a life-like manner, Two Gent. iv. 4. 174; Chaucer (as above).

LIVER, an organ of the body, secreting bile. (E.) ME. liuer (with u=v); Chaucer, C. T. 7421 (D 1839). AS. lifer, Grein, ii. 184. + Du. lever; Icel. lifr; Dan. lever; Swed. lefver; G. leber, MHG. lebere, OHG. lepara, lipara. Cf. Russ. liver, the pluck (of animals); (from Teut.) Teut. type **librā*, f.; cognate with Armenian leard, liver; but not with L. iecur. Brugmann, i. §§ 280, 557 (2). Der. liver-coloured; also liver-wort, Prompt. Parv. p. 309.

LIVERY, a thing delivered, as e.g. a uniform worn by servants; a delivery. (F.-L.) ME. liuerè (with u for v, and trisyllabic), Chaucer, C. T., A 363. - AF. liueré (Britton); F. livrée, 'a delivery of a thing that's given, the thing so given, hence, a livery;' Cot. Properly the fem. of the pp. of livrer, to deliver, give. Cf. Ital. liberare, to deliver. - Late L. liberāre, to give, give freely; a particular use of L. liberāre, to set free; see Liberate. Der. livery-man; livery-stable, a stable where horses are kept at livery, i.e. at a certain rate or on a certain allowance; liveri-ed. The word is fully explained in Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 623, col. 2; and Prompt. Parv. p. 308.

LIVID, black and blue, discoloured. (F.-L.) 'Purple or livid spots;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 12, l. 31. - F. livide (Cot.). - L. lividus, leaden-coloured, bluish. - L. livēre, to be bluish. Cf. W. lliw, OIrish li, colour, hue. Brugmann, i. § 94. Der. lividness.

LLAMA, a Peruvian quadruped. (Peruvian.) See Prescott, Conquest of Peru, c.v. 'Llama, according to Garcilasso de la Vega, is a Peruvian word signifying flock; see Garcilasso, Com. Real. parte i. lib. viii. c. xvi;' note in Prescott. But the Peruv. Dict. gives 'llama, carnero de la tierra,' i.e. sheep of the country. Cf. 'Llamas, or sheepe of Peru;' Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 735.

LLANO, a treeless plain in S. America. (Span.-L.) Usually in the pl. llanos; spelt lanos in E. G., tr. of Acosta, b. iii. c. 20. - Span. llano (pl. llanos), a plain. - Span. llano, plain, flat. - L. plānus, flat. See Plain.

LO, interj. see, behold. (E.) ME. lo, Chaucer, C. T. 3019 (A 3017). AS. lā, lo! Grein, ii. 148.  $\beta$ . Lo is gen. considered as equivalent to look; and we actually find a ME. lo (with close o), prob. from lō-, short for AS. lōca, look thou! But this would have become loo in modern E., and is obsolete; though it may have affected the sense of the surviving form. The AS. lā is a natural interjection, to call attention. Cf. Gk. ἀλαλή, a loud cry, ἀλαλάειν, to utter a war-cry, L. lā-trāre, to bark; &c.

LOACH, LOCHE, a small river-fish. (F.) ME. loche; Prompt. Parv. p. 310. Also lochefissh, Stat. of the Realm, i. 355 (1357). - F. loché, 'the loach;' Cot. Cf. Norm. dial. loque, a loach, a slug (Moisy); Ital. locca, locchia, 'a cob, or gudgeon-fish;' Florio. Of unknown origin.

LOAD, a quantity carried, a burden. (E.) Most probably this word has been extended in meaning by confusion with the unrelated verb to lade. Load is common in Shakespeare both as a sb. and verb, but in ME. it is a sb. only, and is identical with Lode, q.v., notwithstanding the difference in sense. The AS. lād means only way, course, journey; but ME. lode has also the sense of 'burden.' An early example of this is 'hors and lode,' Ancren Riwe, p. 268; cf. also carte-lode, a cart-load, in Havelok, l. 895. It should be particularly noticed, however, that the derived verb to lead is constantly used in prov. E. in the sense 'to carry corn;' and, in the Prompt. Parv. p. 62, we find: 'Cartyn, or lede wythe a carte, Carruco.' Chaucer has y-lad=carried, Prologue, 530. 'Se geneat secal . . . lade lædan,' the tenant shall carry loads; Birch, Cart. Saxon. iii. 102. Hence load=ME. lode=AS. lād, a derivative from the 2nd grade of the verb līdan, to go, travel. See Lode, Lead (1). Der. load, vb.

LOAD-STAR, LOAD-STONE, the same as Lode-star, Lode-stone.

LOAF, a mass of bread; also of sugar. (E.) ME. lof, loof. 'A pese-lof'=a loaf made of peas; P. Plowman, B. vi. 181; pl. looues (=loves), Wyclif, Matt. iv. 3. AS. hlāf, a loaf; Grein, ii. 79. + Icel. hleifr; Goth. hlaifs; G. laib, MHG. leip. Cf. also Lithuanian klēpas, Lettish klaiņas, bread; Russ. khlieb, bread; prob. borrowed from Teutonic.  $\beta$ . Perhaps named from its 'rising,' when leavened; cf. AS. hlifian, to rise high; NFries. lif, a loaf; MSwed. lef (Ihre). Der. loaf-sugar; lady, lord, lammas.

LOAM, a mixed soil of clay, sand, &c. (E.) ME. lam, dat. lame; Cursor Mundi, 11985; where one MS. has cley (clay). AS. lām; Grein, ii. 153; Du. leem; G. lehm, OHG. leim.  $\beta$ . Teut. types \**laimo-*, \**laimon-*; from the base \**lai-*, 2nd grade of \**lei-* (> \**li-*), as in līm, lime, to which loam is closely allied. See Lime (1). Also akin to Icel. leir, loam (Teut. type \**lai-zom*). Der. loam-y, ME. lami, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 47, l. 28.

LOAN, a lending, money lent. (Scand.) ME. lone, Chaucer, C. T. 7443 (D 1861); P. Plowman, B. xx. 284. This corresponds to an AS. lān, but we only find lān, Grein, ii. 163; Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 176, last line. We once find lān-land for lān-land, Kemble, Cod. Dipl. iii. 165; from Norse. - Icel. lān, a loan; Dan. laan, a loan; Swed. lån. Cognate with AS. lān, a loan (whence E. lend, q.v.); Du. leen; G. lehn.  $\beta$ . These words answer to Teut. types \**laihuniz*, \**laihunoz*, n.; from \**laihw-*, 2nd grade of the verb appearing in Goth. leihwan, to lend (Luke, vi. 34), AS. lēon, for lihan, to lend, give (Grein, ii. 187), Icel. ljā, to lend, G. leihen, OHG. lihan.  $\gamma$ . The Teut. base \**leihw* answers to Idg. √LEIQ, whence the L. linguere (pt. t. liqu-i), to leave; which is closely related to Gk. λείπειν, Skt. rich, to leave; OIrish lec-im, I leave. ¶ Quite distinct from AS. lēan, Icel. laun, G. lohn, a reward; see Lucre. Der. len-d, q.v.

LOATH, disliking, reluctant, unwilling. (E.) ME. loth (opposed to leef, dear, willing), Chaucer, C. T. 1839 (A 1837); Havelok, 261. AS. lāð, hateful (very common), Grein, ii. 150. + Icel. leiðr, loathed, disliked; Dan. led, loathsome; Swed. led, odious; OHG. leit, odious; orig. mournful.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. type \**laihthoz*, mournful, in which -thoz is prob. a suffix. Allied to G. leiden, to suffer; but prob. not to AS. līdan, to travel (pt. t. lāð), as usually said (Kluge). Der. loath-ly=AS. lāðlic, Grein, ii. 151; loathe, verb = AS. lāðian, Ælfric's Hom. ii. 506, l. 24; loath-ing, sb., ME. lothyng, Prompt. Parv. p. 316; loath-some, ME. lothsum, Prompt. Parv. p. 314, spelt laihsum, Cursor Mundi, 23229 (Gött. MS.), where the suffix -some=AS. -sum as in win-some; also loath-some-ness.

LOBBY, a small hall, waiting-room, passage. (Low L.-G.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 161, iv. 3. 39. Becon (1553) has: 'Our recluses neuer come out of their lobbeis;' Reliques of Rome, 53. [Hence we may suppose that it was a monastic term, and was taken up into E. directly from the Low L.] - Low L. lobia, a portico, gallery, covered way, Ducange; also spelt lobium. Also laubia; as if from a Teut. type **laubjā*.—MHG. loubē, an arbour, a bower, also an open way up to the upper story of a house. The latter sense will be at once intelligible to any one who has seen a Swiss châlet; and we can thus see also how it easily passed into the sense of a gallery to lounge or wait in. The same word as mod. G. laube, a bower. So called from being formed orig. with branches and foliage.—MHG. loub, loup, OHG. laup, mod. G. laub, a leaf; cognate with E. Leaf, q.v. Doublet, lodge.

LOBE, the flap or lower part of the ear, a division of the lungs or brain. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) In Cotgrave.—F. lobe, 'the lap or lowest part of the ear, also a lobe or lappet of the liver;' Cot.—Late L. lobum, acc. of lobus, not given in Ducange, but it may (I suppose) be found in old works on medicine as a transliteration of the Gk. word; Cooper's Thesaurus (1565) has lobos.—Gk. λοβός, a lobe of the ear or liver; allied to L. legula, the lobe of the ear. Brugmann, i. § 667. Der. lob-ate, mod. and scientific; lob-ed.

AS. loppestre; Voc. 181. 2; a corruption of an earlier form lopust; Voc. 30. 36. β. The word had no sense in AS., lopust being a mere corruption of L. locusta, meaning (1) lobster, (2) locust; see Locust. Hence the entry: 'Locusta, lopust;' in Voc. 30. 36.

LOCAL, belonging to a place. (F.—L.) Spelt locall in Frith, Works, p. 139, last line.—F. local, 'locall'; Cot.—L. locālis, local.—L. locus, a place; see Locus. Der. local-ly, local-ise, local-is-at-ion, local-i-ty, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; also loc-ate, q.v.

Der. lock, verb, ME. lokken, locken, Chaucer, C. T. 5899, D 317; (observe that this verb is a secondary formation from the sb., and not to be confused with the old strong verb luken, louken=AS. lūcan, now obsolete, of which the pp. loken occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14881, B 4065); also lock-er, a closed place that locks=ME. lokere, Prompt. Parv. p. 311, answering to OFlemish loker, a chest (Kilian); also lock-jaw, for locked-jaw; lock-keeper; lock-smith; lock-up. And see lock-et.

ME. loitren. 'Loytron, or byn ydyl, Ocior;' Prompt. Parv. p. 311. —Du. (and MDu.) leuteren, to linger, loiter, trifle, waver; also MDu. loteren, to delay, linger, act negligently, deceive, waver, vacillate (Kilian, Oudemans); cf. MFlemish lutsen, with the same senses (Kilian); WFlem. lutteren, to totter (De Bo); Norw. lutra, to loiter. Perhaps allied to Lout. Der. loiter-er.

LOLL, to lounge about lazily. (E.) ME. lollen; 'And wel loseliche lolleth there' = and very idly he lounges there; P. Plowman, B. xii. 213. 'He that lolleth is lame, other his leg out of ioynthe. Other meymed in som membre' = he who lounges is lame, or his leg is out of joint, or he is maimed in some member; id. C. x. 215. See also id. B. v. 192; P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 224. Cf. Icel. lolla, 'segniter agere,' Haldórsson; MDu. lollen, to sit over the fire. 'Wie sit en lolt of sit en vrijt Verlet sijn werck, vergeet sijn tijt' = he who sits and warms himself, or sits and woos, neglects his work and loses his time; Cats, ed. 1828, i. 428, a; cited by Oudemans. Kilian also gives lollebancke, a sleeping-bench, as a Zealand word. The older sense was prob. to 'doze,' to sleep, hence to brood over the fire, to lounge about. It appears to be allied to lull, i.e. to sing to sleep; see Lull. Der. loll-er; and see Lollard.

LOLLARD, a name given to the followers of Wyclif. (MDu.) The history of the word is a little difficult, because it is certain that several words have been purposely mixed up with it. 1. In the first place, the ME. word most commonly in use was not lollard, but loller = one who lolls, a lounging, an idle vagabond. 'I smelle a loller in the wind, quod he;' Chaucer, C. T. 12913 (B. 1173). That 'lounger' is the true sense of this form of the word, is clear from a passage in P. Plowman, C. x. 188–218, the whole of which may be consulted. The most material lines are: 'Now kyndeliche, by Crist, beth suche callyd lolleres, As by englich of oure eldres of olde menne techynge; He that lolleth is lame other his leg out of ioynthe Other meymed in som membre,' i.e. such fellows are naturally called lollers in the English of our forefathers; he that lolls about is lame, or broken-jointed, or maimed; see Loll. 2. At the same time, the name lollard was also in use as a term of reproach; and this was a MDu. term, Latinised as Lollardus. It had been in use before Wyclif. Ducange quotes from Johannes Hocsemius, who says, under the date 1309: 'Eodem anno quidam hypocritae gyrovagi, qui Lollardi sive Deum laudantes vocabantur, per Hannoniam et Brabantiam quasdam mulieres nobiles deceperunt;' i.e. In this year certain vagabond hypocrites, called Lollards or God-praisers, deceived certain noblewomen in Hainault and Brabant. He adds that Triethemius says in his Chronicle, under the date 1315: 'ita appellatos a Gualtero Lolhard, Germano quodam.' This latter statement makes no difference to the etymology, since Lolhard as a surname (like our surnames Fisher, Baker, or Butcher) is precisely the same word as when used in the sense of 'God-praiser.' The lit. sense is 'a singer,' one who chants. —MDu. lollaerd (1) a mumber of prayers or hymns (L. mussitator), one who hums; (2) a Lollard; Kilian, Oudemans. This is a mere dialectical variation of a form lull-ard, formed regularly from the MDu. lullen (also lollen), to sing, hum, with the suffix -ard as in E. drunk-ard, slugg-ard, &c., denoting the agent. This MDu. lullen is our E. word Lull, q.v. Hexham has: 'lol, or lule, a harmonious sound.' 3. Besides the confusion thus introduced, it was common to compare the Lollards to tares, by help of a bad pun on the L. lolia, tares; this has, however, nothing to do with the etymology. See my note on Chaucer, C. T., B. 1173, in the Prioresses Tale, &c. (Clarendon Press). ¶ Since loll and lull are allied words, it makes no very great difference to which verb we refer loller and Lollard; still loller = loll-er, and Lollard = lull-er.

LONE, solitary, retired, away from company. (E.) Not in early use; the word does not appear in Minshew or Levins, and I find no example much earlier than Shakespeare, who has: 'a poor lone woman;' 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 35. It probably was at first a colloquial or vulgar word, recommended by its brevity for more extended use. It is known to be a short form of alone, as has generally been explained by lexicographers; even Shakespeare brings it in as a pun: 'a long loan for a poor lone woman to bear.' Observe: 'I go alone, Like to a lonely dragon;' Cor. iv. 1. 30. Todd cites a slightly earlier instance: 'Moreover this Glycerie is a lone woman;' Kyffin, transl. of Terence, ed. 1588; but Palsgrave has 'lone, onely, seul;' and see P. Plowman, B. xvi. 20. See Alone. β. Other examples of loss of initial a occur in the words mend, purtenance, limbeck, vanguard. Der. lone-ly, Cor. iv. 1. 30; lone-li-ness, Hamlet, iii. 1. 46; also lone-some, spelt lonesom in Skinner, ed. 1671; lone-some-ness; also lone-ness: 'One that doth wear himself away in lone-ness,' Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, A. i. sc. 2 (Amarillis).

LONG (1), extended, not short, tedious. (E.) ME. long, Northern lang; Chaucer, C. T. 3021 (A 3019); Pricke of Conscience, l. 632. AS. lang, long; Grein, ii. 156. + Du. lang; Icel. langr; Dan. lang; Swed. lång; Goth. laggrs (= langrs); G. lang; L. longus. Brugmann, i. § 642. Der. long, adv.; long-boat, long-measure, long-run, long-sight-ed, long-stop, long-suffering. Also a-long (1), a-long (2), and be-long, verb (see N. E. D.). Also (from L. longus) long-evity, q.v., long-itude, q.v. Also length, q.v.; ling (1), q.v.; ling-er, q.v., lunge, q.v. Cf. lumber (1).

LONG (2), to desire, yearn; to belong. (E.) Often used with for or after. Very common in Shak. ME. longen, longien. 'Than longen folk to goon on pilgrimages' = then people desire, &c.; Chaucer, C. T. 12. AS. langian, impers. vb. with acc. of person. 'Langað þē āwūht,' dost thou desire ought? 'Hæleð langode' = the heroes longed; Grein, ii. 157. [Distinct from langian, to grow long.] + OSax. langōn, impers.; Icel. langa, impers. and pers.; OHG. langōn, impers. Cf. G. verlangen, to long for. Not allied to long (1), but rather to G. gelingen, to succeed, prosper; to AS. lungre, quickly; and Gk. ελαφρός, light, nimble. See Kluge; and Brugmann, i. § 684. But the N. E. D. connects it with long (1). Der. long-ing, sb.; long-ing, adj., long-ing-ly.

LONGEVITY, length of life. (L.) 'In longevity by many conceived to attain unto hundreds' [of years]; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 9. § 1. Spelt longævitie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Coined, by analogy with F. words in -ité (= E. -ity), from L. longævitās, long life. — L. long-, stem of longus, long; and ævitās, full form of the word commonly written ætas, age. See Long and Age.

LONGITUDE, lit. length; distance in degrees from a given meridian. (F.—L.) 'Longitudes and latitudes;' Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, Prol. l. 57. — F. longitude. — L. longitūdo (gen. longitudinis), length, long duration; in Late L., longitude. — L. longi-, for longo-, decl. stem of longus, long; with suffix -tūdo. See Long. Der. longitudinal (from stem longitudin-); longitudinal-ly.

LOO, a game at cards. (F.) Spelt lu in Pope, Rape of the Lock, c. iii. l. 62 (l. 350). Formerly called Lanterloo (Engl. Cycl. Supp.). c. iii. l. 62 (l. 350). Formerly called Lanterloo (Engl. Cycl. Supp.). 'Pam in lanteraloo;' Farquhar, Sir Harry Wildair, ii. 2 (1701). — F. laturelu or lanturlu, interj. nonsense! fiddlestick! fudge! (Hamilton); also a game at cards, jeu de la bête (i.e. loo); see Littré and Hamilton. [The more usual F. name for loo is mouche.] β. The expression was orig. the refrain of a famous vaudeville in the time of Cardinal Richelieu (died 1642); hence used in order to give an evasive answer. As the expression is merely nonsensical, it admits of no further analysis.

LOOBY, a simpleton, a lubber. (E.) ME. loby, Rich. the Redeles, ii. 170. Allied to Lubber, q.v.

LOOF, another spelling of Luff, q.v.

LOOK, to behold, see. (E.) ME. loken, lokien; Chaucer, C. T. 1697. AS. lōcian, to look, see; Grein, ii. 192. + OSax. lōkōn, to look; cf. prov. G. lügen, to look out, OHG. luogēn, MHG. luogen, to mark, behold. Brugmann, i. § 421 (7). Der. look, sb., ME. loke, Chaucer, C. T. 3342; look! interj.; look-er, look-out, look-ing, look-ing-glass.

LOOM (1), a machine for weaving cloth. (E.) In Spenser, Muipotmos, l. 272. ME. lome, a tool, instrument; P. Plowman, C. vi. 45; and see Prompt. Parv., p. 312. The pl. lomen=implements for tilling the soil, occurs in the Ancrén Riwe, p. 384. AS. gelōma, a tool, implement, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, iv. 28, ed. E. E. T. S., p. 366, l. 23; cf. AS. and-lōma, a tool, implement, utensil; Voc. 549. 9. The mod. E. loom has the sense of ME. weblome, a weaving loom; see Test. Eboracensia, i. 191; Records of Nottingham, ii. 22 (1404).

LOOM (2), to appear faintly or at a distance. (Scand.) The orig. sense is to glimmer or shine faintly. Rare; and usually used of a ship. 'Looming of a ship,' is her prospective [appearance] or shew. Hence it is said, such a ship looms a great sail, i.e. she appears or seems to be a great ship; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. So also Skinner, ed. 1671, who adds: 'she looms but small,' i.e. looks small. The orig. sense may have been 'to come slowly towards;' answering to EFries. lōmen, Swed. dial. loma, to move slowly; cf. MHG. luomen, to be weary, from the adj. luomi, slack. Kilian has MDu. lome, slow, inactive. From Teut. base **lōm-*, 2nd grade of **lam-*, as in E. lame. See Lame, Loon (2). Der. loom-ing, sb.

LOON (1), LOWN, a base fellow. (E.) Spelt loon in Macbeth, v. 3. 11; lown in Oth. ii. 3. 95. The latter passage is 'he called the tailor lown,' cited from an old ballad. In the Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall, ii. 324, l. 52, the line appears as: 'therefore he called the taylor clowne.' Lowl. Sc. loun, used frequently by Dunbar (see Small's Glossary); see loon in E. D. D. Cf. MDu. loen, 'homo stupidus;' Kilian.

LOON (2), a water-bird, diver. (Scand.) A corruption of the Shetland name loom; see Gloss. of Shetland Words by T. Edmondston; Phil. Soc. 1866. — Icel. lōmr, a loon; Swed. and Dan. lom; Norw. lom. Prob. from the lame or awkward motion of such birds on land; cf. Swed. dial. loma, EFries. lōmen, to move slowly; see Loom (2). For derogatory use of the names of birds, cf. booby, gull, goose, owl, &c.

LOOP, a bend, a bend in a cord leaving an opening. (C.) Spelt loupe in the Bible of 1551, Exod. xxvi. 4, 5. The ME. loupe is also used in the sense of 'loop-hole,' but it is prob. the same word, denoting a small hole in a wall shaped like a loop in a piece of string. In this sense it occurs in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; and Romance of Partenay, l. 1175. The pl. loupis, loops, occurs in the allit. Troy-book (see Glossary). Palsgrave has: 'Loupe in a towne-wall, creneau; Loupe to holde a button, fermeau.' G. Douglas has loupis, Æn. bk. v. ch. 5. 66; and loupit, looped, id. 13. Jamieson has Lowl. Scotch loops, the windings of a river. The word appears to be Northern, and borrowed from Gaelic. — Gael. lùb, a bend, loop, noose, winding, meander; luib, a fold, corner, or angle, a turn of a stream, a bending of the shore; Macleod. Cf. Irish lùb, a loop, bow, staple, plait, fold, thong, meander; and note the sense of 'thong' in Cath. Anglicum, which has: 'a loupe, Amentum.' — Gael. and Irish lùb, to bend; cf. OIrish lùbtha, bent (Windisch). — And see Macbain. Der. loop, verb; loop-ed, full of holes, K. Lear, iii. 4. 31; loop-hole, Shak. Lucr. 1383, the older term being ME. loupe, as above; loop-hol-ed. But the N. E. D. connects loop-hole with Du. luipen, MDu. lūpen, to lurk (hence, to spy).

LOOSE, free, slack, unfastened, unconfined. (Scand.) ME. laus, loose, Chaucer, C. T. 4062 (A 4064); where the Camb. MS. has los, and the Petworth MS. has louse. Spelt louse, lousse, in the Ancrén Riwe, p. 228, note d. a. The form laus is Scand.; from Icel. lauss (Swed. Dan. lös); it is the Norse equivalent of ME. lees, false; see Prompt. Parv. p. 298. The latter is from AS. lēas, (1) loose, (2) false; cognate with Icel. lauss, loose, vacant, Dan. and Swed. lös, loose. + OSax. lös, MDu. loos, (1) loose, (2) false (Oudemans); the mod. Du. separates the two senses, having los, loose, and loos, false. Further cognate words appear in Goth. laus, empty, vain; G. los, loose. Teut. type **lausoz*; from **laus*, 2nd grade of Teut. **leusan-*, to lose. See Lose; and see Loosen. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 173. Der. loose-ly, loose-ness. Note that -less (AS. lēas) is the commonest suffix in E.; see -less. And see Leasing.

LOOSE, LOOSEN, to make loose, set free. (E.) The suffix -en is due to analogy with words like lengthen, strengthen, and has been added. ME. losen, lousen, lowsen; where the final n merely marks the infinitive mood, without having the causal force which is implied by the final n at present. 'The boondis of alle weren lousid' = the bonds of all were loosed; Wyclif, Acts, xvi. 26. From the adj. above. + OSax. lōsian, 'to make free.' So also Du. lossen, to loosen, release; Icel. leysa, to loosen; Swed. lösa; Dan. løse; G. lösen; Goth. lausjan; all from the adjective.

LOOT, plunder, booty. (Hindi. — Skt.) A modern term, imported from India. — Hindi lūt (with cerebral t), loot, plunder. The cerebral t shows that an r is elided. — Skt. lōtram, short form of lōptram, booty, spoil. — Skt. lup, to break, spoil; the neut. pp. luptam is also used in the sense of 'booty,' like the deriv. lōptram; see Benfey, p. 798. — ✓ REUP, to break; whence L. rumpere, G. rauben, and E. rob. See Rob, Rupture. Cf. Horn, Pers. Dict., § 608. ¶ Thus loot=that which is robbed. Der. loot, verb.

LOOVER, the same as Louver, q.v.

LOP, to maim, to cut branches off trees. (E.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Cymb. v. 4. 141. Spelt loppe in Palsgrave. Ducange quotes loppāre as an Anglo-Latin word; Birch (Cart. Saxon. iii. 240) has 'æt loppede thorne;' as if from an AS. verb loppian, to lop. Der. lop, sb., small branches cut off, Henry VIII, i. 2. 96. And see glib (3), left.

LOQUACIOUS, talkative. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 161. A coined word, formed by adding -ious to L. loquāc-, stem of loquax, talkative. [Prob. suggested by the sb. loquacity, which had previously been introduced into the language from F. loquacité, 'loquacity;' Cot. Loquacity occurs in Minsheu, ed. 1627.] — L. loquū, to speak. Der. loquacious-ly, -ness. Also loquac-i-ty, from F. loquacité, which from L. acc. loquacitatem. From the same root are col-loqu-ial, e-loqu-ence, ob-loqu-y, soliloqu-y, ventriloqu-ist; also (like L. pp. locūt-us) al-locut-ion, circum-locut-ion, e-locut-ion, inter-locut-ion, pro-locutor.

LORD, a master, ruler, peer. (E.) ME. louerd (= loverd), Havelok, l. 96; gen. contracted to lord, Chaucer, C. T. 47. AS. hlāford, a lord; Grein, ii. 80. Fuller form hlāfweard (misprinted hlāfweard), Ps. civ. 17 (ed. Thorpe). β. Thus the word is a compound, and the former syllable is AS. hlāf, a loaf. It also appears that -ord stands for weard, a warden, keeper, master; whence hlāfweard=loaf-keeper, i.e. the master of the house, father of the family. See Loaf and Ward. The simple word weard is used nearly synonymously with the comp. hlāfweard; and cf. hordweard, a treasure-keeper, lord (Grein). Der. lord, verb (gen. used with it), 2 Hen. VI, iv. 8. 47; lord-ed, Temp. i. 2. 97; lord-ing (with dimin. suffix -ing), Wint. Ta. i. 2. 62 = ME. lauerd-ing, Layamon, 27394; lord-l-ing (with double dimin.), Bp. Hall's Satires, b. ii. sat. 2, l. 12 = ME. louerd-ling, Layamon, 12664, later text; lord-ly = ME. lorde-liche, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 302; lord-li-ness, Shak. Ant. v. 2. 161; lord-ship = ME. lordeship, P. Plowman, B. iii. 206.

LORE, learning, doctrine. (E.) ME. lore, Chaucer, C. T. 529, 4424 (A 527, B 4). [The final e is unessential, and due to the frequent use of the oblique cases.] AS. lār, lore; gen., dat., acc. lāre; Grein, ii. 158. + Du. leer, doctrine; G. lehre, MHG. lêre, OHG. lêra (whence Dan. lære). Teut. type **laizā*, f.; cf. Goth. laisjan, to teach; laisins, doctrine. From **lais*, 2nd grade of **leisan-*, to trace out. See further under Learn.

LOREL, a variant of Losel, q.v.

LOGNETTE, an opera-glass. (F.) F. lognette. — F. logner, to spy.

LORIKEET, a small lory. (Malay; with Span. suffix.) From lory, q.v.; with dimin. suffix -keet, borrowed from parrakeet.

LORIMER, a maker of bits and spurs. (F.—L.) Also loriner; both forms are in Blount's Gloss. (1681). 'Loremar that maketh byttes;' Palsgrave. — OF. loremier, lorenier (Godefroy); F. lormier. — OF. lorain, rein, bridle, bit. — Late L. lōrānum, a rein, bit. — L. lōrum, a thong.

LORIOT, the golden oriole. (F.—L.) 'Loriot, a bird otherwise called a witwall;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — F. loriot, 'the bird called a witwall, yellowpeake, hickway;' Cot. Corruptly written for l'oriot, l'oriol, the prefixed l being the def. article (=L. ille). Cotgrave has: 'Oriol, a heighaw, or witwall;' also spelt Oriol, id. The latter form is the same as E. Oriole, q.v.

LORN, old pp. of the verb to lose. (E.) See Lose, Forlorn.

LORY, a small bird of the parrot kind. (Malay.) In Webster. Also called lury, and (better) nory, nury. — Malay lūrī, a bird of the parrot kind, also called nūrī; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 311. Nūrī, the lury, a beautiful bird of the parrot kind, brought from the Moluccas; id. p. 350.

LOSE, to part with, be separated from. (E.) The mod. E. lose appears to be due to confusion between three ME. forms, viz. (1) losien, (2) lösen, (3) lēosen. 1. Losien is recorded in Stratmann, p. 405; it occurs in the sense 'to be lost,' or 'to perish,' as in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, ll. 28, 35; and in Layamon, 20538, it is used exactly in the sense of 'lose.'—AS. losian, to become loose, to escape, Grein, ii. 194. From los-, weak grade of lēosan, to lose. 2. ME. lōsen, to lose, set free, from the adj. lōs, lous, loose; see Loose. 3. The ME. lēosen, more commonly lēsen, is in Stratmann, at p. 394. This is the verb which invariably has the force of 'lose,' but it should rather have produced a mod. E. leese. It is a strong verb, with pt. t. lees, and pp. loren, lorn; see Chaucer, C. T. 1217, 3536; P. Plowman, B. v. 499. AS. -lēosan, to lose; pt. t. lēas, pp. loren; only used in comp. for-lēosan, to lose entirely, Luke, xv. 4, 9, Grein, i. 328. +Du. -liezen, only in comp. ver-liezen, to lose; pt. t. verloor, pp. verloren; G. -lieren, only in comp. ver-lieren, pt. t. verlor, pp. verloren; Goth. -liusan, only in comp. fra-liusan, to lose, Luke, xv. 8, with which cf. fra-lusnan, to perish, 1 Cor. i. 18. β. All three forms are from different grades of the Teut. verb **leusan-*, to lose; pt. t. **laus*, pp. **luzanoz*. From the Teut. base LEUS, to lose, become loose (Fick, iii. 273). This base is an extension of ✓LEU, to set free, whence Gk. λύειν, to set free, release; L. luere, to set free. A still older sense, 'to set free by cutting a bond,' is suggested by Skt. lū, to cut, clip; Benfey, p. 799. ¶ Note the double form of the pp., viz., lost, lorn; of which lost (= los-ed) is formed from ME. losien: but lorn (= lor-en) is the regular strong pp. of lēosen = AS. lēosan. Der. los-er, los-ing; from the same Teut. base are loose, vb., also spelt loosen, q.v., loose, adj.; leasing, q.v.; lorn, for-lorn; loss, q.v. From the root LEU we also have solve, solution, ana-ly-sis, para-ly-sis, palsy.

LOSEL, LOREL, a worthless fellow, a scamp. (E.) In Shak., Wint. Tale, ii. 3. 109. ME. losel, P. Plowm. B. vi. 124; also lorel, id., vii. 136. Cf. AS. los-ian, to perish. From Teut. **lus-*, weak grade of **leusan-*, AS. lēosan, to lose, of which the pp. was lor-en (for older **los-en*); whence lor-el. See Lose (above). The sense is 'devoted to perdition'; for the suffix, cf. AS. wac-ol, watchful.

LOSS, a losing, damage, waste. (E.) ME. los, Chaucer, C. T. 4447 (B 27). AS. los, destruction; tō lose wurdon, i.e. perished, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, lib. v. c. 9 (or c. 10). ONorthumb. los, Matt. vii. 13 (Lindisfarne MS.). From Teut. **lus-*, weak grade of **leusan-*, AS. lēosan, to lose; see Lose.

LOT, a portion, share, fate. (E.) ME. lot, a share; Rich. Cœur de Lion, 4262, in Weber's Met. Romances. AS. hlōt; Matt. xxvii. 35, Luke, xxiii. 34; also hlȳt, Grein, ii. 90. The AS. hlōt, n. (Teut. type **hlutom*) is from hlut-, the weak grade of Teut. **hleutan-*, AS. hlēotan, to cast lots, a strong verb. +Du. lot, a lot; loten, to cast lots; Icel. hluti, a part, share; from the strong verb hljōta, to obtain by lot; Dan. lod, a lot; Swed. lott, a lot; lotta, to cast lots. Cf. also G. loos, a lot; loosen, to cast lots; Goth. hlauts, a lot, Mark, xv. 24; from Teut. **hlaut*, 2nd grade of **hleutan-* (above). Der. lot, vb.; lott-er-y, q.v.; al-lot, q.v.

LOTH, reluctant; the same as Loath, q.v.

LOTION, a washing, external medicinal application. (L.) 'Lot-ion, a washing or rinsing'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from L. lōtio, a washing; cf. lōtus, pp. of lauāre, to wash; see Lave. Brugmann, i. § 352 (3).

LOTO, LOTTO, the name of a game. (Ital.—Teut.) Modern; the spelling lotto is the correct Ital. spelling; loto is a F. form of the Ital. word.—Ital. lotto, a lot, lottery. Of Teut. origin; cf. OHG. hlōz (G. loos), a lot; see Lot.

LOTTERY, a distribution by lot or chance. (Ital.—Teut.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 2. 32, ii. 1. 15. —Ital. lotteria, lottaria, 'a lottery'; Torriano (1688).—Ital. lotto (above). ¶ The F. loterie is borrowed from Italian, but is in much later use; thus it is omitted by Cotgrave, and Sherwood's index to Cotgrave only gives balotage, sort, as equivalent words to E. lottery.

LOTUS, the Egyptian water-lily. (L.—Gk.) 'Lotos, or Lotus, the lote-tree'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Minshew, ed. 1627, speaks of the lothe-tree or lote-tree. It is spelt lote by Chapman, tr. of Odyssey, ix. 163.—L. lōtus, lōtos.—Gk. λωτός, a name given to several shrubs; (1) the Greek lotus; (2) the Cyrenean lotus, an African shrub, the eaters of which were called Loto-phagi = Lotus-eaters, from Gk. φαγεῖν, to eat; (3) the lily of the Nile; see Liddell and Scott. Der. Loto-phagi; lotus-eater.

LOUD, making a great sound, noisy. (E.) ME. loud; more common in the adv. form loudē = loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 674, 15339 (A 672, B 4523). AS. hlūd, loud, Grein, ii. 88. +Du. luid; G. laut, OHG. hlūt. β. Teut. type **hlūdōz*, for **hlūthōs* (with accent on o); allied to the Idg. type **klutōs* (with weak grade klu) as seen in L. -clutus, in comp. in-clutus, renowned; Gk. κλυτός, renowned; Skt. gruta-, heard, from gru, to hear, Gk. κλύειν. ✓KLEU, to hear. Brugmann, i. §§ 100, 113. Der. loud-ly, loud-ness; from the same root is cli-ent.

LOUGH, a lake. (Irish.) The written Irish form of loch.—Irish loch, a lake, lough, arm of the sea; see Loch.

LOUNGE, to loll about, move about listlessly. (F.—L.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671; not before 1508. 'A very flourishing society of people called loungeurs, gentlemen whose observations are mostly itinerant'; The Guardian, no. 124, dated Aug. 3, 1713. The verb seems to have been suggested by the term lungis, defined in Minshew, ed. 1627, as meaning 'a slimme, a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height'; and even as late as in Kersey, ed. 1715, we find lungis explained as 'a drowsy or dreaming fellow.' It was once a well-known term, and occurs in Decker's Satiromastix; Beaum. and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act ii. sc. 3, speech 1; Lyly's Euphues and his England, ed. Arber, p. 325; and the Play of Misogonus, written about 1560; see Nares and Halliwell. —F. longis, 'a lungis; a slimme, slow-back, dreaming luske [idle fellow], drowsie gangrill; a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height, nor wit to his making; also, one that being sent on an errand is long in returning'; Cot. Cf. Norm. dial. longis, or seint-longis, a dolt, a slow fellow (Moisy). β. Littré supposes that the sense of F. longis was due to a pun, having reference to L. longus, long; see Long. For, strictly, Longis was a proper name, being the OF. form of L. Longius, or Longinus, the name of the centurion who pierced the body of Christ. This name Longinus first appears in the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, and was probably suggested by the Gk. λόγχη, a lance, the word used in John, xix. 34; hence the Picard form longin, with the sense of F. longis. See my note to P. Plowman, C. xxi. 82. See the word Lunge, which is certainly due to L. longus. Der. lounge-er.

LOUSE, the name of an insect. (E.) ME. lous, pl. lys or lis; P. Plowman, B. v. 197, 198. AS. lūs, as a gloss to L. pediculus; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum; the pl. form was lys. +Du. luis; Dan. lus, pl. lus; Swed. lus, pl. löss; Icel. lūs, pl. lýss; G. laus, pl. läuse. All from Teut. **lūs*, fem. Cf. W. lleuen, a louse; Stokes-Fick, p. 256. Der. lous-y, lous-i-ness; louse, v.

LOUT, a clown, awkward fellow. (E.) The lit. sense is 'stooping' or 'slouching.' In Levins; and in K. John, ii. 509, iii. 1. 220. Sidney has: 'this loutish clown'; Arcadia, b. i. (R.) From the old verb lout, to stoop, bow: 'he humbly louted'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 44. ME. louten, to stoop, bow down; Chaucer, C. T. 14168 (B 3352); P. Plowman, B. iii. 115. AS. lūtan, to stoop, str. vb.; pt. t. lēat; Grein, ii. 197. +Icel. lūta, to bow down; whence lūtr, adj. bent down, stooping, which may have suggested our modern lout; Swed. luta, to lean; Dan. lude, to stoop. Teut. type **lūtan-*, pt. t. **laut*, pp. lutanoz. Der. lout-ish, lout-ish-ness, loit-er.

LOUVER, LOOVER, an opening in the roofs of ancient houses. (F.—Teut.) ME. lover, Prompt. Parv. p. 315; see Way's note. He cites: 'A looer, or tunnell in the rooffe, or top of a great hall, to auoid smoke, fumarium, spiramentum'; Baret. Also in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; Romance of Partenay, 1175. In the latter passage we find: 'At louers, lowpes, archers had plente, To cast, draw, and shete, the diffence to be'—it (the town) had plenty of archers at openings and loop-holes, to cast, draw (bow), and shoot.—OF. lovier, a louver; see Godefroy, who has lovier, luvier, lover, with three instances in which it is used to translate Late L. lōdium.—Romanic type **lōdārium*, adj. form due to Late L. lōdium, a louver. (For the intercalated v, cf. F. pouvoir, from OF. poir = Span. poder.) β. The orig. sense was prob. an opening over a fire-place; from Icel. hlōð, n. pl. a hearth, a fire-place; ult. allied to Icel. hlaða, to lade, to pile, build up. See Lade. (See Academy, Dec. 1894.)

LOVAGE, an umbelliferous plant. (F.—L.) In Levins, ed. 1570, and in Cotgrave. Spelt loueache in Palsgrave; and ab. 1400, in Henslow's Medical Works of 14th cent., p. 8, l. 18. From OF. levesche (mod. F. livèche), 'common lovage, Lombardy lovage'; Cot.; spelt livesche, liuuesche, luuesche, lovache in Godefroy; cf. luuesche, as in Voc. 555. 11, whence the E. form. Cf. Ital. levistico, lovage.—L. ligusticum, lovage, a plant indigenous to Liguria; whence its name.—L. Ligusticus, belonging to Liguria.—L. Liguria (prob. formerly **Ligusia*), a country of Cisalpine Gaul, of which the principal town was Genua, the modern Genoa. Similarly, we have Etruscan from Etruria [Etrusia?].

LOVE, affection, fondness, attachment. (E.) ME. loue (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1137, 1161 (A 1135, 1159). AS. lufu, love; Grein, ii. 196. From the weak grade (**luþ*) of Teut. base **leuþ-*. +Goth. lubb; OHG. luba; cf. G. liebe, OHG. liupa, love; Russ. liubov, love; Skt. lōbha-, covetousness, lubbh, to desire. Closely allied to Lief. (✓LEUBH). Der. love, verb, ME. louen (= loven), older forms louien, luuien, AS. lufigan, lufian, Grein, ii. 195; also lov-able, lov-er (Chaucer, C. T., A 1347), lov-ing, lov-ing-ly, lov-ing-ness, lov-ing-kind-ness; also love-ly, ME. luwelich, Ancrén Riwele, p. 428, l. 25; love-li-ness; also love-less, love-bird, love-knot, love-lock, love-lorn. Also be-love, ME. bi-lufien, to love greatly.

LOW (1), inferior, deep, mean, humble. (Scand.) ME. low, pl.

lowe; Chaucer, C. T. 17310 (H 361); older spellings louh, Ancren Riwle, p. 140, l. 2; lah, Ormulum, 15246, loogh (in the comp. bilooogh = below), Allit. Poems, B. 116. Late AS. lāh, in l. 8 of The Grave; in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 153. — Icel. lāgr, low; Swed. låg; Dan. lav. + Du. laag. β. The orig. sense is 'that which lies down, or lies low (as we say)'. From Icel. lāg-, 3rd (pt. pl.) stem of liggja, to lie. See Lie (1). Der. low-ness, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 513; Chaucer, C. T. 99, low-li-ness; low-er, verb = to make or become more low, formed from the comparative of the adj. (cf. better), Shak. Ant. i. 2, 129; low-church, low-land, low-lander, low-spirited. Also be-low (= by low).

LOW (2), to bellow as a cow or ox. (E.) ME. loowen, lowen, Wyclif, Job, vi. 5; Jer. li. 52. AS. hlōwan, to bellow, resound; Grein, ii. 88. + Du. loeijen, to low; MHG. luejen, OHG. hlōjan, to low. Cf. L. clā-māre, to exclaim, cry out; Gk. κέ-κλη-μαι, perf. pass. of καλ-εῖν, to call. Der. low-ing, 1 Sam. xv. 14.

LOW (3), a hill. (E.) In place-names; as Lud-low, Bart-low, Trip-low. AS. hlāw, a hill, a slope; also spelt hlāw, Grein, ii. 81. It also means a mound, a grave. + Goth. hlaiw, a grave, tomb; allied to Goth. hlains, a hill. From Teut. base **hlai-*, 2nd grade of **hleī-* (Idg. KLEI), to incline, slope. Hence it is related to L. clivus, a hill; clināre, to lean; and E. lean, verb. See Lean (1).

LOW (4), flame. (Scand.) In Burns, The Weary Pund o' Tow, l. 10. ME. loȝhe, Ormulum, 16185. — Icel. logi, a flame; NFries. lowe (Outzen); MDan. loge, Dan. loe. From Teut. **luh*, weak grade of **leuh-* (Idg. LEUK), to shine; allied to L. lux; see Lucid.

LOWER (1), to let down, abase, sink. (E.) See Low (1).

LOWER (2), to frown, look sour. (E.) ME. louren, Chaucer, C. T. 6848 (D 1266); P. Plowman, B. v. 132; spelt luren, K. Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 270. Not found in AS. + EFries. and Low G. lūren, to lower, frown, peer; MDu. loeren (with oe for ū, Franck), 'to leere, to frowne'; Hexham. Also G. lauern, to lurk, lie on the watch; a sense which appears in the E. derivative lurk; see Lurk. LOYAL, faithful, true. (F.—L.) Common in Shak.; as in Rich. II, i. 1. 148, 181. — F. loyal, 'loyall, faithful, also lawfull'; Cot. — L. lēgālis, legal. — L. lēg-, stem of lex, law. See Legal. Doublets, leal, legal. Der. loyal-ly, loyal-ty, loyal-ist.

LOZENGE, a rhombus; a small cake of flavoured sugar, &c., orig. of a diamond shape. (F.—Prov.—L.) Formerly spelt losenge; and esp. used as an heraldic term, to denote a shield of a diamond shape; see Romaunt of the Rose, l. 893, where the OF. word is also losenges. The word losenges in Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 1317, is prob. the same word. — OF. losenge, lozenge, 'a losenge, a lozenge, a little square cake of preserved herbs, flowers, &c.'; Cot. Mod. F. losange; Prov. lausange (Mistral). — OProv. lauza, Prov. lauso (Gascon luso), a square stone, a tomb-stone (Mistral); Low L. laus, lauza, the same. Allied to Span. laude, a tomb-stone (Pineda). — L. acc. lapidem, from nom. lapis, a stone, also a tomb-stone, grave-stone. See Lapidary. ¶ See N. and Q. 9 S. x. 84. The phonology is quite regular; the L. d, between two vowels, becomes OProv. z, mod. Prov. s, as in L. laudāre, to praise, OProv. lauzar, mod. Prov. laus. With Span. laude < L. lapidem, compare Span. raudo, rapid < L. rapidum. But lauza may represent an adj. form **lapidea*. Cf. also Span. losa, a flag-stone, marble-slab, a square stone used for paving; whence losar, to pave; OF. lauze, Port. lousa, a flat-stone, a slate for covering roofs; all from Prov. Thus the word meant grave-stone, square slab; and finally a flat square cake.

LUBBER, a clumsy fellow, dolt. (E.) ME. lobre, lobur, P. Plowman, A. prol. 52; B. prol. 55; where some MSS. have loby. Palsgrave has: 'I lubber, I playe the lubber.' We find similar forms in Du. lobbes, a booby; Swed. dial. lubber, a thick, clumsy, lazy man (Rietz); lubba, the same, from lubba, v., to be slow or dull; MDu. lobben, 'a lubbard, a clown'; Norw. lubb, lubba, one of round thick figure, lubben, short and thick. Cf. W. llob, a dolt, lubber; llabi, a strippling, looby; Pomeranian lobbe, a lubber; EFries. lobbe, lob, a flabby lump. Shak. has lob, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 16, which is exactly the W. word; also to lob down = to droop, Hen. V, iv. 2. 47. Der. lubber-ly, Merry Wives, v. 5. 195. And see lump.

LUBRICATE, to make smooth or slippery. (L.) Used by Ray, On the Creation, pt. ii. (R.) Kersey, ed. 1715, has lubricitate, to make slippery. The adj. lubrick occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. lubrique; and the sb. lubricity, for F. lubricité. — L. lūbricātus, pp. of lūbricare, to make slippery. — L. lūbricus, slippery (whence F. lubrique). Allied to Slip, q. v. Der. lubricat-ion, lubricat-or; also lubricity = F. lubricité, as above.

LUCE, a fish, prob. the pike. (F.—L.) 'Luce, fische, Lucius,' Prompt. Parv.; and see Chaucer, C. T. 352 (A 350). — OF. lus, 'a pike,' Cot. — L. lūcius, a fish, perhaps the pike. It is probable that luce in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 16, means a louse, by a pun upon the word; see note in Schmidt.

LUCID, bright, shining, clear. (L.) 'Lucid firmament,' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 1259. [There is no MF. lucide in Cot.; the E. word was taken directly from Latin.] — L. lūcidus, bright, shining. — L. lūcere, to shine; L. lūc-, stem of lux, light. From ✓LEUK or ✓REUK, to shine; whence also Skt. ruch, to shine, ruch, light, Gk. λευκός, white, &c. Der. lucid-ly, lucid-ness, lucid-i-ty. Also Luci-fer, Chaucer, C. T. 14005 (B 3189), from L. lūci-fer (bringer of light, morning-star), from L. lūci-, decl. stem of lux, and fer-re, to bring. Also lucent, Ben Jonson, Epigram 76, l. 8, from L. lūcent-, stem of pres. pt. of lūcere, to shine. Also lucubration, q. v. From the same root we have lu-nar, lu-min-ous, lu-min-ary, e-lu-cid-ate, il-lu-min-ate, limn, pel-lu-cid, lu-s-trat-ion, il-lu-s-trate, trans-luc-ent, lu-natic, lustre (1), lynx. And see Light (1).

LUCK, fortune, chance, good hap. (MDu.) 'Lukke and good happe,' Caxton, Hist. of Troye, leaf 216, back, l. 7. Not found in AS. — Du. luk, geluk, good fortune, happiness. + MHG. gelücke, good fortune; whence G. glück (for gelück). Prob. allied to G. locken, MHG. locken, OHG. lokōn, to entice, allure, decoy; cf. the Shetland word luck, to entice, to entreat (Edmondston). The EFries. luk, Swed. lycka, Dan. lykke, are all from G. Der. luck-y, Much Ado, v. 3. 32; luck-i-ly, luck-i-ness, luck-less, luck-less-ly, -ness.

LUCRE, gain, profit. (F.—L.) ME. lucre, Chaucer, C. T. 16870 (G 1402). — F. lucre. — L. lucrum, gain. Allied to Irish luach, value, price, wages, hire; G. lohn, a reward; Gk. λεία, booty; Russ. lov', catching of prey, lovite, to capture. All from ✓LEU, to win, capture as booty; Fick, i. 755. Der. lucr-at-ive, from F. lucratif, 'lucrative,' Cot. < L. lucrātivus, from lucrātus, pp. of lucrāri, to gain, which is from lucrum, sb.; also lucrative-ly, -ness.

LUCUBRATION, a production composed in retirement. (L.) 'Lucubration, a studying or working by candle light,' Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Coined, in imitation of F. words in -tion, from L. lūcubrātio, a working by lamp-light, night-work, lucubration. — L. lūcubrāre, to bring in lamps, to work by lamp-light. — L. lūcubrum, a faint light (Isidore); formed from lūc-, stem of lux, light. See Lucid, Light (1).

LUDICROUS, laughable, ridiculous. (L.) 'Some ludicrous schoolmen,' Spectator, no. 191, l. 1. Formed (like arduous, &c.) immediately from L. lūdicrus, done in sport; by change of -us to -ous. — L. lūdi-, for ludo-, decl. stem of lūdus, sport. — L. lūdere, to play. Root unknown. Der. ludicrous-ly, -ness; also (from lūdere), al-lude, col-lude, e-lude, de-lude, inter-lude, pre-lude; and (like pp. lūsus), al-lus-ion, col-lus-ion, de-lus-ion, il-lus-ion.

LUFF, LOOF, to turn a ship towards the wind. (E.?) The pp. loofed is in Shak. Ant. iii. 10. 18. 'To loof, usually pron. to luff,' Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Shak. prob. took the word from North's Plutarch, since we find 'he was driven also to loof off to have more room' in the description of the battle of Actium; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 212, note 1. The verb answers to Du. loeven, to luff, to keep close to the wind. B. But the verb is due to an older sb., found in ME. more than once. This is the ME. lof, a 'loof,' the name of a certain contrivance on board ship, of which the use is not quite certain. We find it in Layamon, ll. 7859, 9744; the pl. being loues (= loves), 20949, 30922; see Sir F. Madden's remarks in vol. iii. p. 476 of his edition; and cf. OF. lof, loef, loof in Godefroy, used in the same sense. See also Richard Cœur de Lion, l. 71; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 106; Ancren Riwle, p. 104, l. 1 (though this passage is of doubtful meaning). The word seems to have had different senses at different times; thus the mod. Du. loef is 'weather-gage,' like mod. E. luff; but Kilian explains the MDu. loef by scalms, i. e. a thole-pin. In Falconer's Marine Dict. we find loof explained as 'the after-part of a ship's bow,' whilst in Layamon and other passages in ME. we find (as Sir F. Madden says) that it is 'applied to some part of a ship, the agency of which was used to alter its course.' Sir F. Madden quotes from the Supplement to Ducange, s. v. dracena, which L. word is used as equivalent to E. loof, and explained by gubernaculum. The reader should consult Sir F. Madden's note. 'The loof was certainly, as Mr. Wedgwood remarks, 'a timber of considerable size, by which the course of the ship was directed.' It was not, however, what we now call a rudder. C. In my opinion, the passages in which the word occurs go to prove that it was orig. a kind of paddle, which in large ships became a large piece of timber, perhaps thrust over the after-part of a ship's bow (to use Falconer's expression) to assist the rudder in keeping the ship's head right. D. In any case, we may perhaps infer that the orig. sense was 'paddle'; and the word may be an English one, though we may have also re-borrowed the word, in the 16th century, from the cognate Du. loef. Cf. also Dan. luv, luff, weather-gage; luve, to luff; Swed. lof, weather-gage; but these may have been borrowed from Dutch. We find, however, the cognate Bavarian laffen, the blade of an oar, flat part of a rudder (Schmeller). These words are further to be connected with Icel. lofi, the flat hand, Goth. lōfa, the flat hand, palm of the hand, the Lowland Scotch form being loof. E. Recapitulating, we may conclude that the flat or palm of the hand was the original loof which, thrust over the side of the primitive canoe, helped to direct its course when a rude sail had been set up; this became a paddle, and, at a later time, a more elaborate piece of mechanism for keeping the ship's head straight; which, being constantly associated with the idea of the wind's direction, came at last to mean 'weather-gage,' esp. as in the Du. loef houden, to keep the luff, de loef afwinnen, to gain the luff, te loef, windward; &c. A similar idea is seen in L. palma, (1) the palm of the hand, (2) the blade of an oar. The verb is from the older sb. ¶ Napier's Collection of Glosses contains the entry: 'Redimicula, lōfas;' 5241; otherwise, lōf is unrecorded. We must not connect Du. loef, luff, with Du. lucht, air; nor with our own word loft. Der. a-loof, q. v.

LUG, to pull, haul, drag. (Scand.) 'To lugge, trahere, vellere;' Levins. The old sense was 'to pull by the hair.' In Gower, iii. 148 (bk. vii. 1892), we have: 'And be the chin and be the cheke She luggeth him riht as hir liste,' i. e. she pulls him by his beard and whiskers as she pleases. So also: 'to-lugged of manye' = pulled by the hair by many people; P. Plowman, B. ii. 216. — Swed. lugga, to pull by the hair; cf. Swed. lugg, the fore-lock; Norw. lugga, to pull by the hair; lugg, the hair of the head. β. Perhaps a variant (with k for g) appears in Low G. luken, to pull, esp. to pull by the hair; Brem. Wörterbuch, iii. 97; cf. prov. E. louk, to weed, pull up weeds (see loukers = weeder, in Halliwell), from AS. lūcan, str. vb., to pull up weeds; cf. Dan. luge, the same. 'Ceorl of his æcere lȳcð yfel wēod monig' = a peasant lugs many an evil weed out of his field; Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, met. xii. 28. Der. lugg-age (with F. suffix -age), Temp. iv. 231. And see Lugsail. The alleged AS. geluggian, due to Somner, is unauthorised.

LUGSAIL, a sort of square sail. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) 'Lugsail, a square sail hoisted occasionally on a yard which hangs nearly at right angles with the mast;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. [He does not mention lugger, which appears to be a later word; the Dan. lugger, Du. logger, a lugger, may be borrowed from E.] Apparently from the verb to lug, it being so easily hoisted by a mere pull at the rope which supports the yard. Der. lugg-er, a ship rigged with lugsails; unless the derivation runs the other way; in which case the lugsail is named from the lugger, which may be from Du. logger, 'slow ship,' from Du. log, EFries. lug, slow. (Uncertain.)

LUGUBRIOUS, mournful. (L.) Spelt lugubrous and lugubrious in Kersey, ed. 1715; but lugubrous only in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Suggested by L. lūgubris, mournful. — L. lūgēre, to mourn. Cf. Gk. λυγρός, sad; prob. also Skt. ruj, to break, bend. Der. lugubrious-ly, -ness.

LUKEWARM, partially warm, not hot. (E.) 'Leuke warme or blodde warme;' Palsgrave. Luke means 'tepid,' and can correctly be used alone, as by Sam Weller in Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. 33: 'let me have nine penn'orth o' brandy and water luke.' It is sufficient to trace this word alone. ME. leuk, leuke, luke, warm, tepid. 'Als a leuke bath, nouthur hate ne calde;' = as a tepid bath, neither hot nor cold; Pricke of Conscience, l. 7481 (Harl. MS.). 'Tha blod com forð luke' = the blood came forth warm; Layamon, 27557. Not in AS. Cf. Du. leuk, lukewarm; EFries. lūk, luke, tepid, weak, slack. Root uncertain; see Du. leuk in Franck. ¶ Distinct from the older word lew, with the same sense, but perhaps affected by it. 'Thou art lew, nether cold nether hoot;' Wyclif, Rev. iii. 16, where one MS. has leuk. This lew is closely allied to AS. hlēow, a shelter, a place that is protected from cold wind, &c., allied to the mod. E. lee; see Lee. Der. luke-warm-ly, luke-warm-ness.

LULL, to sing to rest, quiet. (E.?) ME. lullen, Chaucer, C. T. 8429, 9697 (E 553, 1823). Earlier, in Walter de Bibbesworth, l. 9; in Wright, Vocab. i. 143. Not in AS. + Swed. lulla, to hum, to lull; Dan. lulle, to lull; MDu. lullen, to sing in a humming voice, sing to sleep; Oudemans; WFlem. lullen, the same; De Bo. β. Purely an imitative word, from the repetition of lu, lu, which is a drowsier form of the more cheerful la! la! used in singing. Cf. G. lallen, to lisp as children do, to babble (lit. to say la la); so also Gk. λαλέειν, to speak. Der. lull, sb.; lull-a-by; and see loll, loll-ard, lilt.

LUMBAGO, pain in the loins. (L.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. — L. lumbāgo (a rare word), pain in the loins. — L. lumb-us, the loin. See Lumbar.

LUMBAR, belonging to the loins. (L.) 'Lumbar or Lumbary, belonging to the loins;' Phillips, ed. 1706. — L. lumbāris, adj., only found in the neut. lumbāre, used as sb. to signify 'apron;' Jerem. xiii. 1 (Vulgate). — L. lumbus, the loin. Cf. AS. lendenu, pl. the loins, Matt. iii. 4; Du. lendenen, s. pl.; Swed. länd, Dan. land, the loin; G. lende, the haunch. Root unknown. Brugmann, i. § 360. Der. (from L. lumbus) lumb-ago; also loin, q. v.

LUMBER (1), cumbersome or useless furniture. (F.—G.) See Trench, Select Glossary, where we find: 'The lumber-room was orig. the Lombard-room, or room where the Lombard banker and broker stowed away his pledges. . . . As these would naturally often accumulate here till they became out of date and unserviceable, the steps are easy to be traced by which the word came to possess its present meaning.' So in Webster, Northward Ho, A. v. sc. 1: 'for though his apparel lie i' the Lombard.' 'To put one's clothes to lumber, pignori dare;' Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. 'Lombardeer, an usurer or broker, so called from the Lombards . . . hence our word lumber, which signifies refuse household stuff. Lombard is also used for a bank for usury or pawns;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; so also in Fuller, Church Hist., III. v. 10. Minshew, ed. 1627, gives Lumbar, Lombar, or Lombard, 'a bancke for vsury or pawns.' He also gives: 'Lumber, old baggage of household stuffe, so called of the noise it maketh when it is remoued, lumber, lumber, &c.;' and if any reader prefer this fancy, he may do so; see Lumber (2). But, on the other hand, Butler uses lumber to mean 'money for pledges;' as: 'The lumber for their proper goods recover;' Upon Critics, l. 94. And the word had reference to quite small articles; as 'a brasse ladle, and other lomber;' Unton Inventories, p. 27. 'A panne of brasse, with other lombor;' Will of R. Morton (1488); pr. by E. M. Thompson. β. The Lombards were early known as lenders of money on pawn; see P. Plowman, C. vii. 241, B. v. 242, and the note. — F. Lombard, 'a Lombard;' Cot.; OF. Lombart, a usurer (Godefroy). (It also formerly meant a pawnbroker's shop; Littré). — Late L. Longobardus, Langobardus; for G. Langbart, Long-beard; a name given to the men of this tribe (Littré). See Long and Beard. ¶ Or the sb. may have been originally due to the verb to lumber, to rumble, to move heavy furniture, make a noise thus; cf. lumber, v., in Palsgrave, and Swed. dial. lomra, to roar. See N. E. D. The word may have been influenced by both sources. See Lumber (2). Der. lumber-room.

LUMBER (2), to make a great noise, as a heavy rolling object. (Scand.) 'The lumbering of the wheels;' Cowper, John Gilpin, st. 6 from end. 'I lumber, I make a noise above ones head, Ie fais bruit. You lumbred so above my head I could not sleep for you;' Palsgrave. 'They lumber forth the lawe;' Skelton, Colin Clout, l. 95. A frequentative verb of Scand. origin; preserved in Swed. dial. lomra, to resound, frequent. of ljumma, or ljomma, to resound, thunder; from ljumm, a great noise; Rietz. [Similarly lumber (with excrement b) stands for lumm-er, where -er is the frequentative suffix.] β. The Swed. ljumm is cognate with Icel. hljómur, a sound, tune, voice; but differs from AS. hlyn, a loud noise (Grein), in the suffix and quantity. The Goth. hluma means 'hearing;' Mk. vii. 35. γ. Swed. ljumm, Icel. hljómur, Goth. hluma, are from the Teut. base **hleu-*, to hear; ✓ KLEU. See Loud.

LUMINARY, a bright light. (F.—L.) 'O radiant Luminary;' Skelton, Prayer to the Father of Heaven, l. 1. — OF. luminarie (Littré); later luminare, 'a light, candle, lampe;' Cot. — L. lūmināre, a luminary, neut. of lūmināris, light-giving. — L. lūmin-, stem of lūmen (= **lūc-men*), light. Cf. L. lūcere, to shine; see Lucid. And see Luminous.

LUMINOUS, bright, shining. (F.—L.) 'Their sunny tents, and houses luminous;' Giles Fletcher, Christ's Triumph after Death; ii. st. 31. — F. lumineux, 'shining;' Cot. — L. lūminōsus, luminous. — L. lūmin-, stem of lūmen, light; see Luminary. Der. luminous-ly, -ness. Also (from L. lūmen) lumin-ar-y, il-lumin-ate. See Lucid. ¶ Perhaps taken directly from Latin.

LUMP, a small shapeless mass, clot. (Scand.) ME. lompe, lumpe; 'a lompe of chese' = a lump of cheese; P. Plowman, C. x. 150. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. lump, a piece hewn off a log (Rietz); Norweg. lump, a block, knop, stump (Aasen). β. Allied words are Du. lomp (MDu. lompe), a rag, tatter, lump; Du. lomp, clumsy, dull, awkward; EFries. lump, clumsy, thick, vile, lumpy; Swed. and Dan. lumpen, shabby, mean. Perhaps allied to Limp (2) by gradation; cf. Dan. dial. lumpe, Low G. lumpen, to limp. Der. lump-ing; lump-ish, Two Gent. iii. 2. 62; lump-y, lump-fish. Also lunch, q. v.

LUNAR, belonging to the moon. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. [The older word was lunary, used by Cot. to tr. F. lunaire.] — L. lūnāris, lunar. — L. lūna (< **loucsnā*), the moon, lit. light-giver. Cf. L. lūcere, to shine; see Lucid. Brugmann, i. § 218. Der. (from L. lūna) lun-ate, i. e. moon-shaped, crescent-like; lun-at-ion, in Kersey, ed. 1715; lun-at-ic, q. v.; lun-ette, 'in fortification, a small work gen. raised before the courtin in ditches full of water,' Phillips = F. lunette, dimin. of F. lune, the moon. Also inter-lunar.

LUNATIC, affected with madness. (F.—L.) ME. lunatik, P. Plowman, C. x. 107; used as sb. id. B. prol. 123. — F. lunatique, 'lunatick;' Cot. — L. lūnāticus, insane; lit. affected by the moon, which was supposed to cause insanity. — L. lunātus, moon-like.

—L. lūna, the moon; see Lunar. Der. lunac-y, Hamlet, ii. 2. 49, iii. 1. 14.

LUNCH, a lump, large piece of bread, &c. (Scand.) ‘Lunches, slices, cuts of meat or bread;’ Whitby Glossary. Minshew (ed. 1627) mentions lunch, as being equivalent to ‘gobbet, or peece.’ ‘Cheese an’ bread . . . in lunches;’ Burns, Holy Fair, st. 23. Rietz has Swed. dial. lunk, a ball of flour in broth. The word is a variant of lump; just as bunch, hunch, are variants of bump and hump; see those words. Similarly, Swed. linka, to limp. And see Lump. Der. lunch-eon, q. v.

LUNCHEON, LUNCH, a slight meal between breakfast and dinner. (Scand.) Lunch, in the modern sense, seems at first to be an abbreviation of luncheon, though we shall trace the latter back to lunch in the sense mentioned in the article above. Cotgrave translates OF. caribot by ‘a luncheon, or big piece of bread, &c.’; also OF. horion by ‘a dust, cuff, rap, knock, thump, also, a luncheon, or big piece.’ ‘A lunch, or a luncheon of bread;’ Gazophylacium Anglicanum (1689). We may suspect the spellings lunch-ion, luncheon, to be merely literary English for lunch-in. ‘A huge lunshin of bread, i. e. a large piece;’ Thoresby’s (Yorkshire) Letter to Ray, 1703 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17, p. 103). And this lunshin is probably nothing but lunching, with n for ng. At any rate, luncheon, luncheon, or lunchin, is nothing but an old provincial word, and a mere extension of lunch, a lump, without, at first, any change of meaning. It was easily extended to mean a slight meal, just as we now say ‘to take a snack,’ i. e. a snatch of food. Quite distinct from Nuncheon, q. v. Der. lunch, verb.

LUNE, a leash; as, the lune of a hawk. (F.—L.) ‘Lunes, or small thongs of leather;’ Strutt, Sports, bk. i. c. 2. § 9. Prob. a variant of ME. loigne, the same; Rom. Rose, 3882.—OF. loigne, longne, a lune.—Late L. longia, a thong; formed from L. longus, long; see Long. Cf. MF. longe, ‘a hawk’s lune or leash;’ Cot.

LUNG, one of the organs of breathing. (E.) Gen. in the pl. lungs. ME. lunge (sing.), Gower, C. A. iii. 100; bk. vii. 465; lunge (pl.), id. iii. 99; bk. vii. 452. Also longes, pl., Chaucer, C. T. 2754 (A 2752). AS. lungen, fem. sing.; pl. lungena. ‘Pulmo, lungen;’ Voc. 160. 34; lungena, 306. 18. +Du. long, s. pl., lungs, lights; Icel. lunga, neut. sing.; usually in pl. lungu; Dan. lunge; pl. lunger; Swed. lunga; G. lungen, pl. β. Allied to AS. lungre, quickly (orig. lightly), Grein, ii. 196; also to E. light (2), which is allied to Gk. ἐλαγός, Skt. laghu-, light; see Light (2). Thus the lungs are named from their lightness; indeed, they are also called lights. Finally, lungs, light, levity are all from the same root. Cf. also Russ. legkoe, lung, as compared with Russ. legkii, light; Port. leves, lights, from leve, light. Brugmann, i. § 691. Der. lung-wort, AS. lungenwyr, Gloss. to Cockayne’s A. S. Leechdoms.

LUNGE, a thrust, in fencing. (F.—L.) In Todd’s Johnson; formerly longe, used by Smollett (Johnson). ‘I have my passees, . . . My longes;’ Dekker, Wonder of a Kingdom, A. i. sc. 1; spelt longees, Butler, Hud. pt. iii. c. 1. 159. The E. a longe is a mistaken substitute for F. allonge (formerly also alonge), ‘a lengthening,’ Cot. So named from the extension of the body in delivering the thrust.—F. allonger (formerly alonger), to lengthen; cf. Ital. allongare, allungare, to lengthen (Florio). Compounded of F. à (L. ad) and **longāre*, only in comp. ē-longāre, to lengthen; see Elongate.

LUPINE, a kind of pulse. (F.—L.) The pl. is both lupines and lupins in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 25. ME. lupines, pl., Lanfranc’s Chirurgie, p. 88, l. 20.—F. lupin, ‘the pulse lupines;’ Cot.—L. lupinum, a lupine, kind of pulse; neut. of lupinus, wolfish, though the reason of the name is not apparent; perhaps ‘because it exhausts the soil’ (Webster).—L. lupus, a wolf; see Wolf.

LURCH (1), to lurk, dodge. (Scand.) Merely a variant of lurk, due to a palatalised pronunciation; see Lurk. It means to lie in wait, lurk; Merry Wives, ii. 2. 26. Der. lurch-er, ‘one that lies upon the lurch, or upon the catch, also a kind of hunting-dog,’ Phillips, ed. 1706; ‘false lorchers,’ Roy, Rede Me, ed. Arber, p. 98, l. 7.

LURCH (2), the name of a game. (F.—G.) The phr. ‘to leave in the lurch’ was derived from its use in an old game; to lurch is still used in playing cribbage. ‘But rather leave him in the lurch;’ Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 1151. The game is mentioned in Cotgrave.—F. lourche, ‘the game called Lurche, or, a Lurch in game; il demoura lourche, he was left in the lurch;’ Cot. He also gives: ‘Ourche, the game at tables called lurch.’ β. This suggests that lourche stands for l’ourche, the initial l being merely the def. article; but this is doubtful, as we find also Ital. lurcio, ‘the game lurch;’ Torriano. γ. Apparently from OF. lourche, deceived, duped (Godefroy).—Bavar. lurzen, to deceive; lurz, left (of the hands), perverse, beaten at draughts; Schmeller, i. 1503. Der. lurch, v., to cheat, rob; see Coriolanus, ii. 2. 105.

LURCH (3), to devour; obsolete. (F.—G.?) Bacon says that proximity to great cities ‘lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing deare;’ Essay xlv, Of Building. That is, it absorbs them, lit. gulps them down. ‘To lurch, devour, or eat greedily, Ingurgito;’ Baret, Alvearie. ‘Lurcher, an exceeding eater;’ Palsgrave. Perhaps a peculiar use of lurch (2), as if to devour before others. Cf. ‘I lurtche, as one dothe his felowes at meate with etynge to hastily;’ Palsgrave. But influenced by Ital. lurcare, to lurch or devour greedily; Torriano; Late L. lurcāre, to devour greedily; L. lurcāri, the same; L. lurco, a glutton.

LURCH (4), a sudden roll sideways. (Scand.?) Not in Todd’s Johnson. ‘A lee lurch, a sudden jerky roll of a ship to the leeward, as when a heavy sea strikes her on the weather side;’ Cent. Dict. A sea term. Of obscure origin; but probably due to lurch (1) in the sense of to stoop or duck like one who skulks or tries to avoid notice. See Lurch (1).

LURE, a bait, enticement, decoy. (F.—G.) ME. lure, Chaucer, C. T. 17021 (H 72). The pp. lured, enticed, occurs in P. Plowman, B. v. 439; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 5997 (D 415). A term of the chase; and therefore of F. origin.—OF. loerre, loirre (see Littré), later leurre, ‘a falconer’s lure;’ Cot.—Teut. type **lōthrom*, n.; as in MHG. luoder (G. luder), a bait, decoy, lure. Der. lure, vb.

LURID, wan, gloomy. (L.) ‘Lurid, pale, wan, black and blew;’ Blount’s Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. lūridus, pale, yellow, wan, ghastly. Prob. allied to Gk. χλωρός, green (Prellwitz); see Chlorine.

LURK, to lie in wait, skulk, lie hid. (Scand.) ME. lurken, lorken, Chaucer, C. T. 16126 (G 658); P. Plowman, B. ii. 216. Of Scand. origin.—Norw. lurka, to sneak away, to go slowly; Swed. dial. lurka, to do anything slowly; EFries. lurken, to shuffle along. β. The -k appears to be a suffix; cf. Norw. and Swed. lura, Dan. lure, to lurk, outwit, G. lauern, to lurk. See Lower (2). Doublet, lurch (1); perhaps lurch (4).

LURY, the same as Lory, q. v.

LUSCIOUS, delicious, very sweet, fulsome, nice. (F.—L.?) Also spelt lushious, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 54; and in Skinner. Wedgwood cites from Palsgrave: ‘Fresshe or lussyouse, as meate that is nat well seasoned or that hath an unplesante swetnesse in it, fade.’ ‘The strong may eate good looshious meate;’ Drant, tr. of Horace, bk. ii. sat. 4 (1566). It seems to be formed from prov. E. lush, sweet, juicy, abundant, said of vegetation (E. D. D.). β. Possibly influenced by ME. lucius, variant of licius, short for delicious; as in ‘with lucius drinks;’ Robson, Three Met. Romances, p. 17; cf. ‘with licius drinke,’ id. p. 38. So also: ‘licious quails;’ Bp. Hacket, Cent. of Sermons, fol. p. 515. And it may also have been influenced by ME. lusty, pleasant. ‘How lush and lusty the grass looks;’ Temp. ii. 1. 52. See Lush. Der. luscious-ness.

LUSH, fresh, luxuriant, juicy, said of vegetation. (F.—L.) ‘Then green and voyd of strength and lush and foggy is the blade;’ Golding, tr. of Ovid, Metam. xv. leaf 182 (1603). Cf. Tempest, ii. 1. 52. A parallel form to lash, relaxed, tender, soft and watery (E. D. D.). And see N. E. D.—MF. lasche, ‘slack, flagging, weak;’ Cot.—MF. lascher (F. lâcher), to slacken.—Late L. **lascāre*, for L. laxāre, to slacken.—L. laxus, lax; see Lax.

LUST, longing desire. (E.) The old sense is ‘pleasure.’ ME. lust, Chaucer, C. T. 192. AS. lust, pleasure; Grein, ii. 196. +Du. lust, delight; Icel. lyst, losti; Dan. lyst; Swed. lust; Goth. lustus; G. lust. Allied to Skt. lash, to desire; Gk. λαλῶμαι. Brugmann, i. § 518 (2). Der. lust, verb, K. Lear, iv. 6. 166, the older form being list=AS. lystan; lust-y, ME. lust-y, Chaucer, C. T. 80; lust-i-ly, lust-i-ness; lust-ful, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 80; lust-ful-ness, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 21; list-less (= lust-less), Gower, C. A. ii. 111, bk. iv. 3262; Prompt. Parv. p. 307; list-less-ness.

LUSTRATION, a purification by sacrifice, a sacrifice. (L.) ‘The doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms;’ Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 11. sect. 12. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from L. lustratio, an expiation, sacrifice.—L. lustrāre, to purify.—L. lustrum, an expiatory sacrifice. See Lustre (2).

LUSTRE (1), splendour, brightness. (F.—Ital.—L.) ‘Lustre of the dyamonte;’ Sir T. More, Works, p. 73e. Spelt luster in Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. lustre, ‘a luster, or gloss;’ Cot.—Ital. lustro, ‘a lustre, a glasse, a shining;’ Florio; cf. Late L. lustrum, a window; lit. a place for admitting light; connected with L. lustrāre, to enlighten, illumine. β. This verb lustrāre appears to be quite distinct from lustrāre, to purify; for which see Lustre (2). It is prob. formed from a lost adjective **lustrus*, shining, an abbreviation of **lūc-strus*; in any case, it is to be connected with lūcēre, to shine; see Lucid. Der. lustr-ous, All’s Well, ii. 1. 41; lustrous-ly; lustrless; also lustring, q. v.

LUSTRE (2), LUSTRUM, a period of five years. (F.—L.) Spelt lustrum in Minshew, ed. 1627; which is the L. form. In Du Wes, Sup. to Palsgrave, p. 1078, we find the pl. lustres, both E. and F.—OF. and F. lustre, ‘a term of . . . fifty months;’ Cot.—L. lustrum, an expiatory offering, a lustration; also a period of five years, because every five years a lustrum was performed. β. The orig. sense is 'a washing' or purification; connected with L. luere, to cleanse, purify, and lauāre, to wash; see Lave. Der. lustr-al, adj.; lustr-at-ion, q. v.

LUTE (1), a stringed instrument of music. (F.—Prov.—Span.—Arab.) ME. lute, Chaucer, C. T. 12400 (C 466). It is not easy to say how the word came to us; but prob. it was through the French, viz. OF. leut.—Prov. laut.—Span. laud.—Arab. al 'ūd (below). The forms are: OF. leut, pl. leus (Hatzfeld); MF. lut (Cot.), mod. F. luth; Prov. laut, Span. laud, Port. alaude, Ital. liuto, leuto; also MDu. luyte (Kilian), Du. luit, Dan. lut, G. laute. β. The Port. form alaude clearly shows the Arab. origin of the word, the prefix al- being the Arab. def. article, which in other languages appears merely as an initial l. The sb. is Arab. 'ūd (with initial ain), wood, timber, the trunk or branch of a tree, a staff, stick, wood of aloes, lute, or harp; Rich. Dict. p. 1035, col. 1. Der. lute-string, Much Ado, iii. 2. 61; and in Palsgrave.

LUTE (2), a composition like clay, loam. (F.—L.) Chaucer has enluting, Six-text, Group G, l. 766, on which see my note. We also find the pp. luted, i.e. protected with lute; see Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 99; Massinger, A Very Woman, iii. 1. 38.—OF. lut, 'clay, mould, loam, dirt'; Cot.—L. lutum, mud, mire; lit. that which is washed over or washed down.—L. luere, to wash, lave; see Lave. Der. lut-ing.

LUTESTRING, a lustrous silk. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'The price of lutestring;' Spectator, no. 21. A curious corruption of lustring or lustrine. 'Lustring or Lutestring, a sort of silk;' Kersey.—F. lustrine, lustring; Hamilton.—Ital. lustrino, lute-string (a shining silk), tinsel; Meadows. β. So called from its glossiness.—Ital. lustrare, to shine.—L. lustrāre, to shine; see Lustre (1). β. Distinct from lute-string under lute (1).

LUXATION, dislocation. (F.—L.) In surgery.—F. luxation, 'a luxation; a being out of joint'; Cot.—L. luxātiōnem, acc. of luxatio, a dislocation.—L. luxāre, to dislocate.—L. luxus, adj., out of joint. Cf. Gk. λοξός, bent sideways, oblique. Brugmann, ii. § 635. Der. luxate (Davies); from pp. luxāt-us.

LUXURY, free indulgence in pleasure, a dainty. (F.—L.) ME. luxurie, Chaucer, C. T. 12418 (C 484).—AF. luxurie, Phil. de Thaun, Bestiary, 566; F. luxure, 'luxury'; Cot.—L. luxuria, luxury. An extended form from L. luxus, pomp, excess, luxury. Der. luxuri-ous, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 224; luxuri-ous-ly, -ness; luxuri-ate, from L. luxuriātus, pp. of luxuriāre, to indulge in luxury; luxuri-ant, Milton, P.
